FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the following causes:

The vessel brig Hiram, James Humphreys, master (H. Doc.

No. 637);

The vessel schooner Harmony, Samuel Brown, master (H. Doc. No. 638)

The vessel brig Dolphin, William Rice, master (H. Doc. No.

The vessel schooner Lark, Thomas Saville, master (H. Doc. No. 639);

The vessel brig Resolution, Jonathan Lester, master (II. Doc. No. 634);

The vessel brig Pearl, John Webb, master (H. Doc. No. 635); The vessel schooner Nancy, Abraham Golden, master (H. Doc. No. 642):

The vessel sloop Jenny, Cornelius B. Church, master (H. Doc. No. 643);

The vessel schooner Industry, Edward Tinker, master (H.

Doc. No. 641); The vessel schooner Agnes, George Bacon, master (H. Doc.

No. 640); and The vessel sloop Discovery, Noble Perry, master (H. Doc.

No. 644).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 4, requesting Congress to enact legislation for the benefit of the Choctaw Indians in the State of Mississippi.

for the benefit of the Choctaw Indians in the State of Mississippi.

Whereas there are now living in this State a number of Choctaw Indians who remained East at the time of the establishment of the Choctaw Nation in the Indian Territory, under the express stipulation of the treaty that by so remaining they "shall not lose the privilège of a Choctaw citizen"; and

Whereas a number of said Choctaws now living in this State were, in the years 1898 and 1903, identified as Choctaws, entitled under the provisions of the said treaty to the privileges of Choctaw citizenship; and

Whereas there are a number of other Choctaws living in this State who whereas the Choctaw Indians in this State and elsewhere have always been and are now a peaceful, law-abiding and deserving people and aided the United States during the years of its early history, and have never engaged in war upon the citizens of the United States or committed atrocities as have many other Indian tribes which have been thereafter fostered and cared for by the Government of the United States, and provided annuities, lands, and other property: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring). That the Congress of the United States be requested to enact such legislation as will secure to the said Choctaws of this State their interest in the tribal funds and property of the Choctaw Nation, and that a settlement be made with them whereby the funds so secured to them may be utilized to buy homes and maintain and educate them in the neighborhoods where they now live or in such places as they may select.

Resolved further, That the secretary of the senate send certified copies of this resolution to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington.

I, John Falkner, jr., secretary of the senate, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the resolution as passed by the senate and house of representatives.

JOHN FALKNER, Jr.,

JOHN FALKNER, Jr., Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented memorials of Andrew Jackson Branch, American Continental League, New York City, N. Y., and of Fort Washington Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against any appropriation by Congress for the celebration of the so-called "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples, were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Canton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. NELSON presented the petition of James I. Coffey, of Coffey, Minn., a member of the Fond du Lac Band of Chippewa Indians, praying that certain land be allotted to the Chippewa Indians in order to carry out in full the agreement entered into through the act of January 4, 1889, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Twin City Metal Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining districts of Michigan and Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the twenty-sixth convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, held at Washington, D. C., June, 1913, remonstrating against the enactment of an exclusive Federal workmen's compensation law, etc., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Local Branch, No. 353, Workmen's Circle, of Duluth, Minn., remonstrating against the adoption of a literary test for immigrants to this country, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LIPPITT presented resolutions adopted by Rhode Island State Lodge, No. 130, Junior Order B'rith Abraham, favoring the enactment of legislation providing a literary test for all immigrants to this country, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a petition of sundry citizens of the sixth congressional district of Kansas, praying for the adoption of a rural credit system, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of South San Francisco Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the extension of free delivery of mail service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the proposed separation of the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 253, Cigar-makers International Union of America, of Oakland, Cal., praying for the passage of the so-called La Follette seamen's bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Napa, Cal., favoring the suspension of the naval program of the great powers, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Calistoga, Cal., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Atwater, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Co-lumbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lemoore, Cal., and a petition of sundry citizens of Chico, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLEAN presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of Hartford, Conn.; by the Building Trades Alli-ance, of Hartford, Conn., and by the Socialist Party, of Hartford, Conn., favoring an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining district of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Winthrop Council, No. 7, Daughters of Liberty, of New Britain, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of Independent Lodge, No. 309, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Norwich; of Zion Lodge, No. 199, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Ansonia, and of Silver City Lodge, No. 152, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Meriden, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the construction and operation of a Government railroad and coal mines in the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the printing of tables and maps relating to the kelp industry on the Pacific coast, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the act of June 9, 1910, providing that all boats over 40 feet in length that carry passengers for hire shall be subject to inspection by the local inspectors of steam vessels, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the law authorizing masters and mates whose licenses have been temporarily suspended or whose licenses have been revoked to secure licenses in lower grades of service than those affected by the order of the United States local inspectors of steam vessels, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2511) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 166) thereon.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8667) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 167) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2830) making appropriation for the correction of the acoustics by the Harper system of the United States Naval Academy chapel and auditorium, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 168) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3863) granting lands to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Hot Springs, Ark., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 169) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2904) for the relief of certain persons, their heirs or assigns, who heretofore conveyed lands inside national forests to the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 170) thereon.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 3210) to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana, reported it with amendment and submitted a report (No. 171) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 824) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 172) thereon.

SALE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY BY NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Naval Affairs the bill (S. 1983) to amend section 3618 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the sale of public property, and I submit a report (No. 165) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

REMEDIES FOR HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to give notice that on Saturday I shall address the Senate on the bill introduced by myself on November 17 appropriating funds for the purpose of providing and administering remedies for hog cholera.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Saturday, January 24, 1914, following the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene], I shall submit some suggestions as to the Government's duty with reference to one element en-tering into the high cost of living, namely, the ravages of hog cholera.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and according to the unanimous-consent agreement the Chair lays Senate bill 48 before the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railways in the Territory of Alaska, and for other

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is there not a resolution that, under the rules, comes up, having been laid over from yesterday. a resolution to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from the further consideration of Senate resolution 242?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not so noted on the calendar. Mr. BACON. Even if it should be, the unanimous-consent order displaces it. That order is that immediately after the close of routine business, if I recollect aright, this bill shall be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct; but the resolution coming over from a previous day is a part of the morning business, although it is not so noted.

Mr. NORRIS. In view of the unanimous-consent agreement, I have no objection, if the resolution I have offered may be understood to hold its place, to having it go over until tomorrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may go over holding its place by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution will come up in the morning hour tomorrow, and will be kept on the Calendar of the Presiding Officer. Senate bill 48 is before the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am going to ask Senators kindly not to interrupt me while I am delivering my remarks, the bill must close at 4 o'clock, and I am as general debate on the bill must close at 4 o'clock, and I am Alaska than to consult the positive records as to soil and cliinformed that there are several other Senators who desire to speak on this question. Of course, if there are any questions which are material to the statements I may make, I should like to have those questions asked after I conclude. I hope to terminate my remarks in 30 or 40 minutes.

OUR DUTY TO ACT.

Mr. President, the people of the United States own Alaska, and they have intrusted to us, as their representatives, the conservation, development, and utilization of its wonderful resources. We have been delegated unlimited power in the management and disposal of the great wealth of Alaska. It is within our power to delay the development of Alaska until the hardy pioneer, with his unaided hands, through countless years of unnecessary toil, has overcome the enormous obstacles, or through the ordinary business methods of a business corporation to provide the necessary capital to immediately and economically make available homes for our farmers, mines for our miners, coal for our homes, our shipping, and our Navy, supply coke, copper, and fluxes to break down the Smelter Trust, and vitalize our anemic monetary system with millions of virgin gold. We may be excused for mistakes of judgment, but never for neglect of duty.

FULL INFORMATION BEFORE US.

The Government, at great expense, has had careful investiga-tions and study made of the resources, conditions, and requirements of Alaska by disinterested Government experts, for the information of Congress, and reports of such investigations have been submitted to us for our consideration. Why, then, should we accept unauthenticated statements and opinions when, as far as we know, such statements may be based upon hearsay or imagination and such opinions fathered by motives or formed from familiarity with some peculiar and limited portion of the Territory? There is a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives who, I am informed, went down the Yukon River in 1897 as far as Circle City, who gives it as his opinion, from his observations on such trip, that the development of agriculture in Alaska is impossible. The gentleman did not go within 1,500 miles of the mouth of the Yukon River. He was separated from the Tanana Valley by a high mountain range and was over 700 miles distant from the valleys of the Kuskokwim and Susitna Rivers. It would be as reasonable for a man standing on the barren shores of Hudson Bay to conclude from his surroundings that the agricultural development of Canada would be impossible.

One sailing along the coast of Alaska, constantly in sight of high, barren mountains, nestling millions of acres of eternal glaciers, naturally would have his conception of the whole country affected by such scenes. But, in fact, those mountains are but the barrier, and back of them are broad, fertile valleys, of a much lower altitude and more temperate climate. cult to realize the varied conditions of climate and topography in Alaska unless we fix in our minds its location and great area. It is larger than the combined area of the thirteen original States, and is more varied in its physical and climatic condi-Some parts are colder than New Hampshire, while in others the winter climate is as mild as that of Georgia. On the south the climate of Alaska is tempered by the warm Japan current that makes of California and western Washington and Oregon winterless States, while 700 miles to the north it is washed by the frigid waters of the Arctic Ocean.

AGRICULTURAL POSSIBILITIES

I do not intend to debate the agricultural possibilities of Alaska, because there has been no evidence adduced in the negative. The great agricultural possibilities of the valleys of the Tanana, Kuskokwim, and Susitna Rivers have been testified to by such men as Judge James Wickersham, Delegate from Alaska; Mr. Charles V. Piper, of the Department of Agriculture; Falcon Joslin, president of the Tanana Valley Railroad Co.; Francis G. Jemmett, treasurer of the Alaska Northern Railway Co.; O. L. Dickeson, president and general manager of the Pacific & Arctic Railway & Navigation Co.; Dr. Alfred H. Brooks, geologist in charge Division Alaska Mineral Resources, and Mr. C. C. Georgeson, in charge of the agricultural experiment station in Alaska. They are all men of ability and integrity, who have had years of experience in all parts of Alaska, and their opinions are entitled to great weight.

Why should we doubt this testimony? What right have we to ignore such facts, coming from such sources? Is there any to ignore such facts, coming from such sources: Is there any evidence to the contrary? If so, what is it and by whom was it given? True, we have been told by most eminent and respectable gentlemen that Alaska is a barren arctic waste, and that the claim for Alaska of agricultural possibilities is absurd. These gentlemen have found it easier to let their imaginations extend the conditions existing in northern Alaska to southern matic conditions of that part of the Territory, obtained through years of investigation by Government experts. What do the official records say? Let me read you a few lines:

official records say? Let me read you a few lines:

The climate of the coastal province is comparable with that of Scotland and the Scandinavian Peninsula in Europe, but is somewhat warmer. That of the Inland region is not unlike the climate of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, in Canada. The northerly province, bordering the Polar Sea, is the only one in which arctic conditions prevail. * * In the coastal region, stretching from Katalla to Seward, the average temperature for the three summer months is about 51° F.; of the three winter months from 20° to 30° F. The lowest temperatures recorded in this region are -14° F.; the highest 82° F. * * The mean annual temperature varies greatly in different parts of this (Cook Inlet) region, being from 33° to 42° F., while the average temperature of the three summer months is about 53° F.; of the three winter months about 10° to 25° F. * * The climate of the lower Susitna and of the Matanuska Valleys differs again, both from that of Cook Inlet and that of the outer coast line. Here there are a very few records, but the summers are known to be warmer than on Cook Inlet and the winters are probably milder.

So the climate of the coldest part of the section of the Ter-

So the climate of the coldest part of the section of the Territory containing the 64,000,000 acres of agricultural land compares most favorably with the climate of North Dakota. The evidence submitted to this body, it seems to me, conclusively establishes the great agricultural possibilities of the Territory of Alaska.

The Department of Agriculture estimates the total agricultural land in Alaska at 64,000,000 acres and the tillable land at 19.200,000 acres.

The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumera] seems to view the development of Alaska solely from the viewpoint of furnishing a tonnage for railroads, because the greater part, if not all, of the agricultural products of the Territory will be locally consumed. He apparently considers the development of such industry of no material importance. He forgets that those farmers will purchase in the markets of the States machinery, tools, farming implements, fencing, and other things necessary or desirable that are not produced or manufactured in Alaska, which will add to our commerce and provide a tonnage for the railroads. Again, each farm becomes a supply point from which explorations to more remote localities may be undertaken, thus facilitating the discovery of the hidden resources of the interior.

But if these advantages did not accrue to the Government, still it would be our duty to make available these homes for the thousands of home seekers and the horde of homeless, unoccupied, and suffering humanity that overrun our cities and tax the charity of our people and the administrative ingenuity of our municipal officers. We are told that there is plenty of good farm land that can be purchased for $50 an acre. Yes; but this does not avail the people of whom I have spoken. Go and take up desert land in the West? True, the land is rich, but it takes some money to get started there. There you must buy wood, water, and provisions. If I were in destitute circumstances, I would rather have a piece of land in Alaska than anywhere in the world. There the home builder requires little but that supplied by nature. The trees furnish his log cabin, the waters his fish, the woods his game, and the fur-bearing animals his clothing.

Mr. President, some doubt has been created as to the suitability of the coal in the Bering fields for use in our Navy. A recent test by the department of a small lot was reported as producing 79.4 per cent of the efficiency of Pocahontas coal. The coal was taken from only one field, and very probably from one place in the field. I have been told that it was taken from the surface, allowed to lie upon the ground all winter, and was transported to the ship in a dirty condition, full of rock and bone and dirt. The report admits that it was crushed and very dirty. It must have come from the surface, as there are only surface workings in the field. Even under such conditions it compared favorably with the best steam coal in the United States. This test can not be accepted, however, as either fair or sufficient. The field is 50 miles square, and, according to the report of Dr. Brooks, of the United States Geological Survey and geologist in charge of Alaskan mineral resources, contains every grade of coal from lignite to anthracite. Samples of coal from this field analyzed by him were declared to be equal to Pocahontas coal for steaming purposes. Apparently no attempt was made by the Navy Department to test the coal in the Matanuska coal fields. These fields are larger than the Bering fields and, while they lie farther from the coast, the coal is less crushed and is believed to be better suited for steam purposes.

The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has suggested that we delay action on the bill until the Navy makes further tests. The recent tests do not encourage us to believe that the Navy Department has a sufficient realization of the importance of the matter to be depended upon to do expeditiously the work necessary to a satisfactory test. If the coal fields are opened up and transportation furnished, miners can open up the coal fields so that the coal can be tested thoroughly by the Navy without too much effort. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that it is not the best coal for the Navy, still its value is not entirely destroyed. It is practically the only steaming and coking coal on the Pacific coast. It will be used by transports, by merchant vessels, by fishing schooners, by sailing vessels trading with Alaska as cargo ballast, by the people of the Pacific coast for domestic purposes, by the smelters and blast furnaces in the form of coke, and last, but not least, by the inhabitants of Alaska in the development of that great Territory. It vill place at the disposal of shipping on the Pacific a better and a cheaper fuel, thereby greatly reducing the costs of water transportation.

Our Government has expended in building the Panama Canal about $400,000,000, chiefly for the purpose of reducing the cost of water transportation. Lower water transportation costs mean lower water freight rates, and lower water freight rates mean lower railroad transportation where competition between the two means of transportation exists.

The Alaska Commission reported that, exclusive of the Navy, there is now a demand on the Pacific coast for at least 1,500,000 tons annually. As population and shipping increase and as the demand for coal grows with the growth of smelters and blast furnaces on the coast the demand for high-grade Alaska coal will increase. Even the people of Alaska last year imported $436,000 worth of coal. If they use such a quantity under present conditions, what will they use when the resources of the Territory are opened to development?

In discussing the resources of Alaska, I have tried briefly to indicate the value of the coal.

WE MUST HAVE MORE GOLD OR ADOPT ANOTHER MONEY STANDARD.

Mr. President, if there were neither agricultural lands, coal, nor other minerals in Alaska, other than its extensive deposits of gold, still the increasing necessity for gold, not only in our own country but throughout the world, would warrant us in building railroads for the development of such resource. The serious financial predicament which the great powers are rapidly approaching, arising from the waning of the gold supply and the constant and enormously increasing demand for credits, that must be based upon gold as the only money recognized by such powers, was a subject for grave consideration and learned debate during the construction and the enactment of our recent currency bill.

No matter how great may be our demand for a circulating or purchasing medium, such medium must be based upon gold and its quantity limited by the quantity of gold possessed. In conformity with this very rule the Senate reduced the maximum issue of currency as provided in the currency bill as it originally passed the House, not because a larger circulation might not be required in case of emergency, but because it was considered that we have not sufficient gold to secure a greater issue.

passed the House, not because a larger circulation might not be required in case of emergency, but because it was considered that we have not sufficient gold to secure a greater issue.

The distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. Roor], in discussing the currency bill, contended that the Government should not be given the power to issue $1,870,000,000 in currency in the great of a great analysis of the great of a great analysis of the great o rency, even in the event of a great emergency, on the ground that the Government does not possess sufficient gold to secure such issue together with its other demand obligations. The whole stock of money of the United States, including all forms of circulating medium, amounts to only about $3,720,000,000, while the wealth of our country is estimated at more than $120,000,000,000. Think of it! We have less than $4,000,000,000 in circulating medium, with bank deposits amounting to over nineteen billions, and loans amounting to $14,000,000,000. yet the Government can not safely, according to the distinguished Senator from New York, issue additional circulating medium to the amount of $1,870,000,000. Why? Because gold alone is money, and redemption of such currency in gold could not be demanded; because the nineteen billions in deposits and the $14,000,000,000 in loans are payable in gold on demand; because our obligations and securities held in foreign countries must be redeemed in gold, while our entire stock of gold is less than $2,000,000,000. The credit of our country is stretched to the limit, and yet there is an ever-increasing demand for All credit must be based upon gold, and yet the such credit. production of gold is waning. Is it not apparent that we must either adopt some other basis for money or procure more gold? The civilized world is wedded to gold as a money, and therefore we must use every endeavor to increase the world's supply of gold. Every country on the gold basis is in the same condition. There is a constant scrambling for gold among the nations, and millions of dollars are paid in the form of increased interest rates for the purpose of obtaining it. Many of these nations have no gold-bearing lands within their own territory and are compelled to buy gold as a basis for their circulating medium with the products of their soil and with their national bonds; and yet we hesitate to lend our credit to have it dug out of our own soil by our own people.

Mr. Charles F. Conant, in the December number of the North American Review, in the article entitled "If gold were dross,"

The nation which finds itself unable to supply gold to settle its international balances—giving due recognition, of course, to the ability to distribute such obligations through foreign loans and other devices—wakes up to the fact that it has undoubtedly expanded its internal and has lost its international credit.

Mr. John E. Gardin, vice president of the National City Bank, in an address before the Academy of Political Science, said-and I call particular attention to this article:

in an address before the Academy of Political Science, said—and I call particular attention to this article:

The production of gold during the last four years has remained practically the same, but there is every indication that it is on the wane. This is a very serious problem that confronts us, inasmuch as we are absolutely dependent upon that metal as the basis of credit. We may be a wealthy Nation, but wealth alone does not produce fast enough. Consequently we must have credit to supplement wealth, and credit must be based upon a generally recognized vaiue, and that is gold. The principal danger to our gold supply is the enormous absorption in the arts and industries.

It is estimated that during the last 50 years over $3,000,000,000 worth of gold has disappeared. East India alone during the last 12 years having absorbed $500,000,000.

This would leave an annual supply, if it continues the same as at present, of only $286,000,000—not enough for our needs. On the generally accepted ratio of credit to capital of five to one, this would mean that $875,000,000 worth of credit is destroyed. To what extent we are in need of capital can be inferred from the requirements in this respect of London alone during the last nine months. London is estimated to have acreded $750,000,000 for new work. No estimate is made of the requirements of Germany, France, the United States, Canada, Brazil, the Argentine, or Africa, but they must be enormous. Hence the question comes foremost in our mind: Where is the capital to come from? It is absolutely necessary that our store of gold be jealously guarded, and that it be used only in payment of our just debts. A further feature must be borne in mind in connection with this subject, and that is the danger of the invisible balance of trade, which is always against the United States. This invisible balance is variously estimated from $500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, and up to the present time the deficiency has been made up by investments of foreign capital. When this country ceases to

Here is one of the strongest articles on the subject by the vice president of the National City Bank of New York. His argument is unanswerable. We must have gold. We have it within our own territory.

Mr. President, Alaska has the gold. In the last 10 years it has produced in gold over $168,000,000. It is true that most of this gold came from points on ocean or river navigation. This does not mean that there is no gold in the interior, but that the difficulties and expenses of mining in the interior are so great that development is impossible. The reports of the United States Geological Survey show that gold exists all over the in-terior of Alaska, from the Canadian line on the Yukon River to the Kuskokwim River, 700 miles to the northwest, and from the Pacific Ocean on the south to the Koyukuk River, 500 miles to the north. Throw little cheap narrow-gauge roads across the coast range to the interior, where wagon roads can connect, and you will make possible the working of the great gold deposits and wonderfully increase the output.

The gold output of Alaska all goes directly into the United States Treasury through the mints, and thus immediately becomes a part of the gold supply of our Nation. And yet, there are some who would refuse to have the Government lend its credit that this virgin gold may be injected into the arteries of commerce. The people of the United States are not asked to pay for the building of railroads in Alaska. They are simply asked to execute a mortgage on the resources of Alaska for the purpose of developing such resources. The people of Alaska can not execute such mortgage, because all the people of this country own such resources and they alone can act through their agents, the Congress of the United States. We are not spending money on a colony. We are not making an appropriation to develop a State. We are asked to develop Government property in a Government municipality. If we are not willing to put in use the resources intrusted to our management, let us turn them over to a management that will. Let us cede the public lands and resources of Alaska to Alaska, with power of control and disposition, if we consider them unworthy of development at an expense of $40,000,000.

I do not believe, however, that the great majority of this body believes such a loan or credit either improper or unnecessary. The Alaska Railroad Commission estimates that there will be sufficient tonnage to pay the principal and interest of the bonds; but under the bill the Government is not compelled to depend upon such receipts. It is provided that 75 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands in Alaska, or the coal or other mineral contents thereof, or the timber thereon, shall be paid into a fund to redeem such bonds. When the resources are opened up and transportation insured, the receipts will undoubtedly be far greater than the demands There are bills now pending before the Senate of the bonds. providing for the leasing of the coal fields and the opening up of the Chugach National Forest Reserve for the benefit of prospectors and home seekers. There will be other bills introduced that will aid in the development of the Territory, and at the same time produce more revenue.

WILL RAILROADS PAY?

Alaska is about equal in size to the combined area of Nevada, Colorado, Utah, California, and Montana, and appears to be far richer in gold than any of these great mineral States. combined gold production of these States since 1880 has been approximately $1,800,000,000—practically as much gold as we have in stock in the United States to-day. A royalty of 3 per cent on this production would have paid the Government over $54,000,000. Imagine what the sum would be if the Government had received royalties on all minerals produced in those States. Yet Alaska is as great a mineral area as that contained in such States.

Now, does it seem possible that there is any danger of the Government losing by its loan of credit when, in addition to the receipts derived from the tonnage, there will be placed into the redemption fund not only 75 per cent of the moneys received for such royalties as may be established on the production of gold, but 75 per cent of the royalties received from the production of coal and 75 per cent of the purchase price of the lands and the timber in all of the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. President, I have tried, in as few words as possible, to give the reasons why I believe that Alaska is worthy of development and that the Government of the United States can safely lend its credit to the development of such resources. I now come to the method of development that should be adopted.

All are agreed that the resources of Alaska can not be developed until transportation is furnished. That transportation must of a necessity consist of railroads and wagon roads. It is almost as cheap to build narrow-gauge railroads through the mountain barrier on the coast to the interior as it is to build wagon roads through such mountains. When the railroads have been constructed across this barrier and distributing points established, wagon roads can be built from such distributing points to the outlying territory. In my opinion, there is no reason why these railroads should be of expensive construction. The chief object of such railroads is not to carry great tofnage nor to make profits, but to serve as a pioneer transportation system in the opening up of a pioneer country. It is impossible to build one trunk line from some one harbor on the coast to some point upon the Yukon or Tanana River that will serve to develop the whole interior of Alaska. Whether there be one or several railroads, they will be built from the coast in a general northerly direction toward the Yukon and Tanana Rivers. The territory to be developed has an area of something like 600 miles east and west by some 500 miles north and south. A consideration of the area to be developed makes it apparent that one trunk line will not subserve the purpose.

DOES NOT ESTABLISH PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

The method of financing and building these roads is a matter for serious consideration. There are many of us here who would greatly prefer that such roads be constructed and operated by private capital and individual enterprise, if it could be accomplished without giving away the resources of Alaska or sub-mitting them to the domination of a monopoly. There are Members of this body, and I am one of them, who are opposed to the Government ownership or operation of railroads where such roads will be built and operated by individuals on a competitive basis. I believe in individualism, and I am opposed to paternalism. I believe that paternalism destroys ambition, initiative, and industry. I believe that Government ownership is a dangerous policy in a Republic and tends to a condition that may mean perpetuity in office. may mean perpetuity in office.

But, Mr. President, there are greater dangers than those to which I have just referred. The dangers of control of the which I have just referred. The dangers of control of the resources of a country by private monopoly are greater than any danger that we are facing to-day. While Government ownership of railroads, like Government ownership of many other public utilities, is dangerous in principle, there are numerous exceptions to the rule which are well recognized. It is now conceded that municipal light, power, and water companies are in the very nature of things private monopolies, and therefore it is better that the municipalities should own and control such public utilities.

The conditions that justify the municipal ownership of municipal light, power, and water companies justify the Government ownership and control of railroads in Alaska. There is no incentive for an individual to build a railroad in Alaska other than to build to his own property or for the purpose of monopolizing the resources of the country into which he builds. An individual can afford to build a railroad to his own property, whether the tonnage pays for the building and operation of the road or not, if the property is of sufficient value. The Guggenheims built a railroad to their copper mine in Alaska, but they built no farther. They built no feeders, and their road is no accommodation to those who seek to develop Alaska. Their road, instead of encouraging the discovery and opening up of other copper mines in the vicinity of their great copper mine, has rather deterred prospectors from entering that country by prohibitive freight rates. The Guggenheims could afford to build the road on account of the profits derived from their copper mine, but no one else could have afforded to build the same road to some one else's copper mine.

The United States owns 90 per cent of all of the land and minerals in Alaska, and therefore no one else can afford to build railroads to develop such resources. The tonnage might pay expenses, as the railroad commission suggests, but individuals are not building railroads to some one else's property in the hopes of paying expenses. Individuals can be induced to build railroads into Alaska by giving the resources of Alaska to such individuals. Individuals can be induced to build railroads in Alaska if the Government secures the costs of build-ing the roads, taking all of the chance of loss, without hope of protection against monopolization or adequate control over the transportation. If the Government is going to build a road for some one else, why not build it for itself and then lease it to some one else, thereby retaining title and control over the railroad in every phase, to the protection of the people of the country.

IS AN EXCEPTIONAL CASE.

The building of a railroad in Alaska by the Government is an exception to the principle that opposes the building and control of railroads by the Government. It has been conclusively proven in the arguments of the distinguished Senators who have preceded me and who favor this bill that all of the existing transportation companies in Alaska, both by land and by water, are interlocked and confederated in one great monop-A Government built and operated railroad in Alaska is not in the nature of a common carrier. It is not really constructed and operated as an industry and for profit, but only as a means of developing a property that the Government owns that can be developed practically and economically in no other way.

Under these exceptional conditions, under the admissions and arguments made on behalf of this bill, it does not seem that there is ground for fear that the passage of this bill can be considered an opening wedge or a precedent for the Government ownership and control of railroads in the United States.

I have not spoken of the interest of the people of any particular section of this country in this great enterprise. I have discussed it as a national enterprise that will bring about national benefit. But there are those who are directly affected by this legislation, who, as citizens of our country, as our fellow men, should have some consideration in this matter.

For long years men have toiled against the obstacles in Alaska, and waited in poverty with a splendid patience for their Government to do something that would indicate that they realized that they own a great territory, greater than the Hawaiian Islands, over which our Government takes such a paternal interest; greater than the Philippine Islands, in which our Government has expended millions, chiefly in the interest of a people of an inferior civilization, with no common ties of ambition, country, or blood.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss this subject, but as the debate has proceeded many facts have been stated and many views have been expressed to which I can not, with the knowledge I have of Alaska, give my consent. For this reason I propose for a little while this morning to call attention to some features of the situation in Alaska which are familiar to me in the hope that I may help to a clearer understanding of the conditions there and of the character of the legislation required.

It will be remembered that gold was discovered in that Territory in 1895, and very soon after that, if not coincident with it, gold was also discovered in the Klondike territory in Canada. Since that time much interest has existed in the production of Dawson for distribution were delivered to the miners at a gold in both sections. I propose in opening to call attention to the contrast in the treatment the two sections have received from the respective Governments, because I think that will help us to reach some further conclusions.

It must be remembered that Alaska is an area two-thirds as large as all the States east of the Mississippi River, yet in 1903 when a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories of this body, of which I was a member, visited Alaska there was not a mile of road in that District over which vehicles could be drawn summer or winter. The committee made a journey of 7,000 miles, occupying nearly two months, and out of the 7,000 only 111 miles were on the land. We followed the course of the Yukon River from its source in the Canadian territory to Dawson, a distance of 700 miles, thence through Alaska, crossing the Arctic Circle at Fort Yukon to St. Michael on the Bering Sea, a further distance of 1,600 miles; thence to Nome, the Pribilof and Aleutian Islands, and along the south coast of Alaska back to the Alexander Archipelago. Alaska is a Territory of mighty streams, which empty into three different seas. The Yukon flows as much water perhaps as the Mississippi, and among its many tributaries are the Koyukuk, 600 miles in length; the Copper, 950 miles in length; and the Tanana, which probably waters the finest valley in Alaska, and which is something over 800 miles in length.

The transportation for that great area which constitutes Alaska must in great measure and through all time be upon its It would be impossible to maintain, in such a vast area, railroads that could, at a reasonable cost, accommodate the demands of all its many interests. For three and possibly four months in the summer season the rivers are open. Mr. LANE. Pardon me; for over four months.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. For over four months the rivers are open, so that supplies coming through Bering Sea can be transported, as they always have been, to all points on the Yukon and its tributaries and through to Dawson, in the Canadian territory, from which point they can be distributed in every direction, both in the Klondyke and Alaska, as the different

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair).

Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what was the object of the visit by the committee of which he was a member?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was for the purpose of discovering the conditions existing in Alaska with reference to appropriate legislation for that District by Congress.

Mr. WORKS. Had the question arisen then as to the construction of a railroad by the National Government, or was that taken into account?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. WORKS. What was the date, I should like to ask? Mr. DILLINGHAM. In 1903.

I was saying when interrupted that the system of transporta-tion in Alaska must in all the future be conducted to a large extent upon the waterways, which are so ample for that purpose, and upon wagon and sled roads leading from them to the settlements, though I am not undertaking to say that a railroad should not be built when the development of Alaska indicates the need of such a road and its location has been definitely determined.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES AND ACTION CONTRASTED.

The committee which I have mentioned proceeded from Skagway through the great White Pass to the headwaters of the Yukon and thence to Dawson, which was and is the center of the Klondike territory, where we spent a week studying the methods adopted by the Canadian Government to encourage and protect those engaged in the development of the gold-mining industry of that most remarkable section.

The investigation disclosed the fact that whenever gold had been discovered there, and a rush to the mines had followed, engineer officers had been sent by the territorial government to make an investigation, and if it was determined that the scene of operations was likely to become a permanent center of population a recommendation was immediately made to the Government at Ottawa, and an appropriation was secured for the construction of such highways as were deemed necessary to its convenience and development. Under that admirable system, 225 miles of wagon road had then been constructed over frozen grounds, with the result that the provisions stored at reasonable cost for transportation, and development was encouraged.

On the other hand, the United States Government, down to that time, had taken no similar action for the construction of highways in Alaska. Gold had been discovered at many points along the Yukon Valley and on the Seward Peninsula, and mining operations were being conducted with vigor, but owing to the fact that there were no roads in Alaska it actually cost more to carry 100 pounds of freight from the Yukon River into any one of its mining camps located even a short distance in the interior than it did to transport the same freight from San Francisco or Seattle to the point on the Yukon River nearest to the point of destination.

In a report made to this body at that time I find it is stated that flour which sold for $8 per hundred pounds in the Klondike cost the American miner in the 40-mile district, only a short distance in the other direction from Dawson, $32. other words, flour cost the American miner four times as much as it did his friend in the Klondike. The difference in the cost of delivering a ham or a side of bacon to the miner in the respective sections was 25 cents a pound. On condensed cream and milk there was a difference of 100 per cent in the rate of transportation, and in the case of bulkier articles, like potatoes, which are a prime necessity there, the cost to the miner in the American territory was 300 per cent greater than that paid in the Canadian territory. It was because there were no means of transportation from the rivers back to the mines. I saw lying on the bank of the Yukon machinery destroyed by rust because it could not be transported a distance of 30 miles in-land and where it was needed, simply because that whole coun-try is covered by tundra of moss and marsh, which, when thawed by the summer sun, presents an impassible surface both for man and beast. In the winter season transportation on land was at that time accomplished mainly by the use of dog teams.

The result of such investigations was reported to the Senate and legislation was secured, through the efforts of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], who was one of that subcommittee, appropriating the license taxes in Alaska, outside of incorporated towns, for the purpose of constructing highways. The fund so secured and expended has amounted, in round numbers, to $1,160,000. Annual appropriations of small and large amounts were also secured from Congress, to be used by the highway commission in Alaska in extending highways from points on the rivers to points where gold had been discovered, amounting in the aggregate to $1,375,000.

DEVELOPMENT OF ROAD BUILDING IN ALASKA

What is the result of the system of road building so inau-

what is the result of the system of road building so mangurated and carried into operation through such commission? We have to-day in Alaska wagon roads 862 miles in length. It was thought in 1903 that there should be a wagon road from Eagle, which is a military post on the Yukon not far distant from the boundary line between Canada and the District of Alaska [indicating on map], to Valdez, which is the most portharly barbor on the Pacific coast a distance of some most northerly harbor on the Pacific coast, a distance of something over 400 miles. At that time gold had not been discovered in the Tanana Valley. Fairbanks had not been founded. The effect of such discoveries has been to so change conditions as to require a different plan of development, and the commission has constructed a trunk line of wagon road from Valdez northerly to Fairbanks, a distance of 419 miles, and thence through to Fort Gibbon and Rampart, both on the Yukon, the last-named city being 900 miles from St. Michaels, the mouth of the river. They have also extended branches of that road out into the Chifina district, where I am now pointing. [Indicating on the map.] We have built roads from Eagle, Circle City, and other points on the Yukon, back into the mining districts, so that today we have connected with the waterways of Alaska 862 miles of well-constructed wagon road and a system that extends from the Pacific Ocean through to the Yukon.

We have, in addition to that, 617 miles of winter roads, of great advantage to the District, as during the eight months of winter goods brought in by boats during the summer months can be transported on snow to any point desired. In addition to that, we have pack trails amounting to 2,167 miles.

I desire at this point to call attention to the character of the wagon roads before mentioned, because I think the commission have done wonderful work. In their report recently made, they

The great obstacle to road building in Alaska, outside of the heavy cost on account of the high prices for labor and teams, is, however, the permanently frozen ground. A large portion of the soil of Alaska, except on the Pacific coast, is permanently frozen to an unknown depth, the surface being protected from thawing during the summer by a thick blanket of moss or turf. This frozen ground often contains masses of solid ice, locally termed glaciers. It occurs principally in bottom and lower slopes of the valleys, although the higher slopes are sometimes frozen.

Concerning the roads which they have built under these conditions they say:

conditions they say:

The wagon roads constructed may be described as good country highways intended to meet an all-year-round traffic of considerable tonnage. They are located with suitable grades, crowned, ditched, and drained, and corduroyed or planked where necessary. The winter sled road is an inexpensive form of construction, adapted to the requirements of winter travel in portions of the interior. It differs from the wagon road in not being crowned, ditched, and drained, nor extensively corduroyed, and from the trail in being of sufficient width through the timber and on side-hill cuts for double teams, of suitable grade for loads, and with the principal stumps and surface inequalities removed. The winter travel begins in early October and lasts to about the end of April. The trail differs from the winter sled road only in being marrower and with less attention given to grade and surface inequalities.

Further on in the report, in speaking about the cost of reads.

Further on in the report, in speaking about the cost of roads, they say that it is about two and one-half times greater than the same road would cost at any point in the United States

Mr. President, what has resulted from the construction of those roads? I think an answer to that question will be found interesting. From the report of this commission I find that the whole cost of transportation on the roads in 1913, in round numbers, was $1,243,000; that the estimated cost of the same transportation, had those roads not been in existence, would have been $3,385,000. If such estimate is well founded, the people of Alaska were saved a transportation tax of $2,141,000 in a single year, or a sum nearly equal to the entire cost of the roads, which have amounted to only $2,535,000. In other words, the profit to the people of Alaska resulting from the construction of wagon roads has been substantially as great as the entire cost of the same. There is one short line running out from Nome on which the tonnage has been so great that it paid for itself eight times over in the first six years after it was constructed. The importance of the trunk line of highway that extends from Valdez—which, by the way, is located on the most beautiful bay upon which eye has ever rested, which is the most northerly harbor on the Pacific—to Fairbanks and through to the Yukon River can not be overestimated, and the Senate should fully understand the substantial character of the work which has been accomplished. In the commission's report I find the following language:

Although the board makes no pretense of having built roads adapted for automobile traffic, machines are used under the ordinary summer conditions about Juneau, Fairbanks, and Nome. Several trips were made with machines during the past summer from Fairbanks to Chitina and to the coast at Valdez.

Chitina lies off from the direct line of the road running north. The road commission placed a field truck

This is what I wish to call attention to—

The road commission placed a field truck of three-quarter ton capacity, of the type being experimented with by the Quartermaster and Medical Corps of the Army, on this road during the latter part of the summer and fall for the purpose of trying out the machine for supply and maintenance work and to test the availability of the road for such travel. The truck left valdez 1.30 p. m., July 28, and arrived at Fairbanks 10 a. m., August 6; left Fairbanks 12.30 p. m., August 9, and arrived at Chitina about 5 p. m., August 15; left Chitina late afternoon, August 16, returned as far as Gulkana, thence back to Valdez, arriving 4.30 p. m., August 19. The distance covered was 922 miles, making about 50 miles per day.

And that with a truck.

The car while running averaged between 8 and 9 miles per hour. In some stretches as high as 18 miles per hour was made, while in others progress was slow. In some instances the car had to be helped through soft spots on rather heavy grades, but this was not actually necessary for a distance of a mile throughout the whole length of the road. The president of the board came with the machine from Fairbanks to Chitina, and the engineer officer from there back to Gulkana and out to Valdez. The truck has done some good work on the road near Valdez since.

This road from the navigable waters of the Tanana to the coast is 419 miles in length, including the Willow Creek-Chitina branch. It crosses two mountain ranges, also numerous rivers and glacier streams, several of which remain to be bridged. It is estimated that an expenditure of an average of $1,500 per mile would improve it to the condition of a very fair automobile road, capable of sustaining any traffic likely to pass over it.

I have read this, Mr. President, for the purpose of calling attention to what I think is the most excellent work of this commission, and to indicate what a perfect thoroughfarespeaking, of course, in a comparative sense-we have from the northern Pacific through to the waters of the Tanana and of the connection we have with the Yukon Valley as a result.

Mr. President, what I have said indicates that the plan mapped out by the committee which went to Alaska in 1903 has been successfully inaugurated, and has, in fact, brought about great results. It is a plan which is capable of indefinite extension and of incalculable benefit to the people of Alaska.

When we remember-because we are dealing with very large figures when we approach Alaska-that all this work has been done at a cost of only about $2,600,000, it can easily be imagined what will be done for Alaska if we shall, in the near future, spend in the construction of other highways connecting the navigable waters with the settlements as they are made, and such others as shall be found to be necessary for the development of her industries, even $4,000,000, which is only one-tenth of the amount that it is proposed to spend upon the construction of a railroad running from nowhere to nowhere, so far as we are at present advised.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS AND AGRICULTURE.

Mr. President, aside from the gold, silver, and copper in Alaska and the good quality of coal which I feel sure will be developed in time, what elements are there in Alaska which demand at this time such an extraordinary expenditure for the construction of railroads in the interior of the Territory? can not believe that the agriculture of Alaska can ever demand such an outlet. There are mysteries connected with natural conditions in that Territory which never yet have been solved. I have traveled the whole length of the Yukon River and have found the ground everywhere frozen to the bedrock, in some places 40 feet deep and in other places 200 and 300 feet deep, the whole substance of earth between the surface and the bedrock being glacial in character. In the frozen gravel of that region the remains of the mammoth have been discovered, in one instance, I was told, with the flesh so perfect that the dogs ate it, and in such numbers that the tusks of the mammoth which had been exhumed were too numerous to be counted rare. One tusk, I remember distinctly, was 12 feet in length. No intelligent man can claim that this subterranean ice field results from present climatic conditions. Why, we have in New England days that are as cold as you will often find in the interior of Alaska. It is clearly evident that in some prehistoric age a great change was wrought in that section of the earth's surface. When it was I do not know; no one has ever been able to explain it to me. During our journey a scientist who accompanied us discovered, taken from that frozen soil, the skull and horns of what he called, I believe, the primeval ox. It can be seen in the Smithsonian Institution at this time. All these things indicate the conditions which exist throughout the interior of Alaska and which compel the miner to resort to the use of steam in thawing the earth which holds the gold which he is seeking. Can an area such as I have described be changed by present climatic conditions so as to render it capable of raising agricultural products for export? I can not believe it is possible.

When we discuss the climate of Alaska we have to consider the influence of the Japanese Current, which gives to Oregon and Washington their mild winters and cool summers.

Mr. THOMAS. And to California.

DILLINGHAM. And also to California. All of the coast States feel its influence. But how does it affect Alaska? Stop for a moment and consider. After crossing the Equator it flows northeasterly and comes first to the Aleutian Islands, which extend far to the west of Alaska proper. We find that it divides; a part passes through those islands at Dutch Harbor and other points of separation, enters the Bering Sea, and there meets the cold current coming from the Arctic Ocean. It meets it perfectly at the Pribilof Islands, which are only a day's ride by steamboat from Dutch Harbor.

In this meeting of a warm and a cold current we find the reason why the great seal herds, which have been mentioned in the debates in this body so many times in the last 10 years, go to the Pribilof Islands for the breeding season. The seal is a warm-blooded animal; it carries a heavy coat of fur; it subsists in the waters of the North Pacific for eight months in the year, and only seeks land as the breeding season approaches. it that these seal herds invariably return to the Pribilof Islands at such periods? It is simply because the warm current from Japan and the cold current of the Arctic Ocean meet there and form such a dense fog that those islands are substantially always enveloped in it. There the fur seal meets the ideal conditions, because it can not endure the sunshine. Thus it is that the warmth of the Japanese current is destroyed in entering Bering Sea and the west coast of Alaska secures none of the influence of the current, and it can not be depended upon to modify to any extent the climate of the interior of Alaska.

How does the Japan current affect the climate on the south coast of Alaska? It comes there in its largest volume [indicating on the map], bringing its warmth and moisture, and strikes the coast range of mountains [indicating on the map], ranging from 14,000 to 22,000 feet in height. As the warm atmosphere strikes these mountains its moisture is condensed, with the result that all the area south of the coast range is enveloped a considerable portion of the time either in mist or actual rain. The existence of the Japan current accounts for everything which has been said in this debate regarding the moderate temperature and the superabundance of wet weather south of the coast range.

The road commission, for instance, say that they have as much difficulty in building roads on the southern coast of Alaska as they have in the interior, because of the volume of the rainfall there.

I remember on visiting Kodiak Island, at which I am pointing now [indicating on the map], an island 300 miles in length on the southern coast of Alaska, that I was told by an acquaintance, who had been there for three or four years, that on account of the excessive moisture he had never been able to bring his oats beyond the milky stage of development; that he could bring them to a point where they made good oat hay, but was unable to ripen them for the reason stated.

Another result of the condensation of the moisture as the air strikes the mountains is that vast volumes of snow fall in the winter season. When we were at Valdez we were informed that 53 feet of snow had fallen there during the preceding winter. The snow striking the mountains in ever-continuing storm settles and produces the great glaciers for which Alaska is famous. Here [indicating on the map] upon the southern coast is the Malaspina Glacier, which covers 1,500 square miles of territory and breaks into the North Pacific at points 40 and 50 miles apart. I think that at the point where we passed it, at Icy Cape or Icy Bay, the wall of ice was 25 miles in length and probably three or four hundred feet in height, dropping bergs into the sea constantly. We loaded our ship with sufficient glacier ice to last us until we returned to Seattle. I will inquire of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] what his recollection is regarding the length of the glacier wall at that particular place-25 miles, was it not?

Mr. NELSON. I think more than that.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. I speak of that as one of the climatic conditions resulting from the Japanese current.

When, however, you have passed over the coast range of mountains into the interior of Alaska you have passed beyond the influence of that current. The mountains have absorbed its warmth and moisture, and the interior has a climate of its own, wholly unaffected by this current. There one will find only 1 inch of rainfall, where there has been 12 inches of rainfall on the coast, and a correspondingly less amount of snow. The temperature, also, which is moderate on the coast, is extreme in the interior, not infrequently dropping to from 50° to 70° below zero. The point I am seeking to make clear is that the climate of Alaska north of the coast range can never be modified by the influence of the Japanese current.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The party which accompanied the Senator into Alaska did not get away from the waterways at The trip was confined entirely to the Yukon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was confined entirely to the waterways. As I have said, our journey on land covered only 111 miles, except, I believe, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] made a horseback trip out from the town of Eagle.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. I made two trips into the interior on horse-back, one from Eagle out to a mining camp on Mission Creek, some 25 or 30 miles, and another trip from Valdez up through the Keystone Canyon to the foot of Thompsons Pass, and quite trip it was into the country.

a trip it was into the country.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What I wanted to get at was that none of that party went into either the Tanana Valley, the Kuskokwim Valley, or the Susitna Valley?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Vermont will allow

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly. Mr. NELSON. I have read all or almost all of the reports of the Government exploring expeditions which have been made, and the fact is that in the interior—and the report of the road commission will show it-the whole country in the valleys is covered with tundra, a layer of moss and decayed grass, from six inches to a foot thick, and below that the ground never thaws. The only way you can remove the frost is to remove that tundra, and then the ground thaws from 2 to 3 feet on the sides of the valley exposed to the sun. From what I saw in Alaska and from what I know about it, I have been utterly astonished at the contention which is made here about its agricultural resources. I am, however, taking too much of the time of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment. The Senator from Minnesota expresses astonishment at that, and yet he relies on the reports of the Agricultural Department, and those very reports show conclusively that when that tundra is removed the land is susceptible of cultivation of the highest kind, and that this melting moisture or melting ground under the tundra furnishes a subirrigation which makes the land even more productive than ordinary

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield further to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont further yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. What the Senator calls the agricultural resources of Alaska are all based on the reports of a Dane up there by the name of Georgeson, who is something of a crank on the subject. When I was up there I visited one of his experiment stations, and it was about the sickliest affair I ever saw anywhere in the shape of an experiment station. Of course he is whooping it up. He has a job up there, and he wants to make a big showing, but I do not take any stock at all in his reports about the agricultural resources of Alaska.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that we were not without knowledge regarding that subject. We stopped at Eagle, and at Circle, and at Fort Yukon, and at Rampart, and at Fort Gibbon, at the mouth of the Tanana River, and at the Holy Cross Mission, and I do not know at what other places, where they were making agricultural experiments under the very best circumstances.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just once more? Then I will not interrupt again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont further yield to the Senator from Oregon?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Minnesota speaks of this "cranky Dane," and speaks of him as being the only man who has made any reports. I want to say that the record does not sustain that statement at all. Not only is Prof. Georgeson a very distinguished man, as the record here shows, but Dr. Brooks has been all over this country, and his reports and the reports of the Geological Survey confirm the reports of this so-called "cranky Dane." The reports of officials of the Agricultural Department show the same condition of things. man who has ever been in that country is more capable of judging of climatic conditions than this man, who came from a country which is almost similarly situated with Alaska.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont further yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. NELSON. The idea of saying that Denmark is similar to Alaska! Denmark has not a single mountain; it has not even a respectable bluff; it is as level a country as can be found anywhere. Right there in what is called the Sound the climate is as mild and as moderate as that of England, and the whole country is one great farm. The only difference is that on the shore bordering on the North Sea there are some sand dunes. That illustrates what there is in this whole Alaska business. The idea of comparing Denmark as an agricultural country to Alaska verges on the absurd.

Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. BACON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Before yielding to anybody I should like to add to what the Senator from Minnesota has said-that a glance at the map of Europe will indicate why he is right. There we have England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. Every-body knows that the Gulf Stream flows up to and strikes those islands, separates, and goes around them on either side. mark is situated right in its course, and the Gulf Stream continues on along the coasts of Norway and of Sweden, carrying its beneficent effects with it.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I simply wanted to state, as part of the RECORD and for the information of the Senator from Minnesota. that I received this morning through the mails from Alaska pictures of fields of rye that were raised there last year, and I think when I show them to the Senator he will agree with me that the rye is at least equal to that raised in Minnesota.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, Will the Senator state where the rye shown in the pictures was raised?

Mr. THOMPSON. In the Tanana Valley, where relatives and friends of mine now live; and they sent the pictures to me for the information of Senators.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very well; there is no question about I have seen the same pictures, and I hope every Senator has visited room 115 of the Senate Office Building and has seen the exhibit there. They have an exhibit of bound rye and oats that is surprising to the ordinary visitor. I asked the custodians where the grain was grown, and they said in the Tanana Valley, in the neighborhood of Fairbanks.

The report of the man who has been both praised and criticized here, Prof. Georgeson, superintendent of the experiment station in Alaska, tells us that they have been unable to find a wheat that will ripen there. They have found a rye, which is the earliest ripening of the grains, from which they have some very good samples, and they have found an oat which they have ripened there; but in his report he advocates the policy of not attempting to ripen even those grains, but to cut them for hay purposes because of the lack of forage.

In his report for 1910, speaking of the Tanana Valley, Prof.

Georgeson says:

Georgeson says:

Alaska soils are not rich. Frequently statements from travelers and other observers are seen to the effect that the soil must be exceedingly rich in plant food to judge from the height of the grasses and the luxuriance of some of the vegetation, but such a conclusion is not warranted. Grasses will sometimes grow rank on an almost barren, gravelly soil, because they have plenty of moisture and they are adapted to the climate and to the conditions. The virgin soil in the interior is everywhere frozen to an unknown depth or to bedrock. In this state of refrigeration there can be no activity of the organism swhich aid in the formation of mold and the manufacture of plant food from the organic matter, and what plant food the soil may hold is in a large degree insoluble, and therefore not available for plants except by a long and slow process of weathering. For this reason the soil soon becomes exhausted and fertilizers are necessary. This is particularly demonstrated by the results at the Fairbanks station the past season, which will be referred to later.

Now, the problem is how to render the soil fertile. Stock breeding in the interior will almost certainly be limited to the few animals on each farm necessary for domestic use. The feeding period is too long to make it practicable to maintain a herd of cattle on even a moderate scale. It will be a difficult matter to provide the feed. For this reason stable manure will never be abundant in that country. Therefore some other source of plant food must be sought, and it is hoped that this source may be some species of legume which is hardy enough to withstand the winters, which will yield fair crops of forage, and which at the same time has the property of enriching the soil with nitrogen, as do the clovers and alfalfas in more southerly latitudes.

I think that is a fair statement of the soil conditions in Alaska. It stands to reason that, with such subterranean conditions, there can not be the development which he says is so desirable.

I do not wish to be misunderstood, either by the Senator from Kansas or by the Senator from Oregon, about the gardens of Alaska. When the tundra is removed-and it must be removed at great expense, of course-and the sun, which shines during the 100 days of summer for about 23 hours a day, gets to the soil it does thaw the surface down to a depth of 2 or 3 feet, or even 4 feet, and sometimes 5 feet. The soil, when thrown up into ridges so that it may be drained, raises a certain class of products which are really very fine, chiefly those that require a great deal of water and not much richness of The result is that the radishes are free from the usual acrid flavor and are the most delicious that one has ever tasted, the lettuce is magnificent, the cabbages are beyond comparison. When you have gotten beyond that you can raise the red currant, you can raise potatoes, but it depends upon where you raise them, as to their quality. Those which we saw in the Yukon Valley were very watery and not of good quality. We saw in the whole length of the Yukon Valley no case of any grain ripening, except at the experiment station at Rampart, where they had raised a very inferior black Russian oat, not in merchantable quantities, but two or three pecks of which were shown to us as having been ripened at that station.

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator allow me right there? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. LANE. I should like to say that I have seen them ripened, gathered, and harvested in the Tanana Valley near Fairbanks

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no doubt about that. I have already stated that they have found an oat that can be ripened there, but I have also stated what the director of the experiment station says as to the profit of ripening it. He says it can not be done profitably, and that it is much better to cut the straw at that stage for forage.

When we reached the Holy Cross Mission, which though small was perhaps a better developed agricultural section than any other we saw—we found the first tame grass. They were making experiments to see if they could put in tame grass and ripen There, too, we found the first cultivated flowers seen in the entire valley. Wild flowers grow in the tundra, but without a particle of fragrance, strange as it may seem. I do not know to what to attribute it; but there in their gardens they had very carefully cultivated a few of the hardy varieties.

The conclusion I have reached, from my observations and from a study of all the reports on Alaska, is that no man would think of going into the interior of that Territory to take up a homestead for the purposes of agriculture unless, near that homestead, there were a settled locality large enough to make a demand for what he could produce. Necessarily the prices there, on account of freights, are high; therefore he could demand a high price for what he produced and could afford to remove the tundra and open up the land to cultivation.

That, I think, is as far as the agriculture of the interior of Alaska goes. There the old rule of supply and demand as affecting prices has its application. I have no doubt that in such neighborhoods as I have indicated, and they are comparatively few and far between, farms can be opened up and a supply of the hardy vegetables can be produced for the mining communities. There is no doubt that the red-top grass which grows wild can be cut, and when harvested it will make a fair quality of hay. It is difficult, however, to cure hay on the south coast of Alaska, because of the moisture of the climate. The same is true in the interior of Alaska, because whatever rainfall there is comes late in the season, at about the time the cutting usually begins. All find difficulty in curing it.

do not want to be misunderstood. It is not my purpose to give Alaska a black eye, but I must give expression to my impression of her agricultural limitations as I saw them and as I understand them to be from my reading.

OTHER RESOURCES.

It is said that in Alaska we have a country of wonderful resources and that proof of it is found in the fact that its products already marketed have amounted to almost $450,000,000. True it is; but from what sources has that wealth come?

THE FISHERIES.

From the fisheries alone we have received $148,000,000 out of the $446,000,000, and those fisheries have ministered to Alaska's advantage only in the slightest possible degree. as an illustration, the cannery at Karluk, on the island of Kadiak, which we visited, which is capable of putting up in tin 60,000 red salmon in a day. We saw 50,000 fish taken out of the bay at Karluk the day we visited it. seines, drawn by a steam tug, sweep large areas of the harbor and are finally drawn to the shore by a stationary steam engine operating on a capstan. When the seine is landed it is literally filled with a wriggling mass of salmon, which the natives employed transfer by the use of pitchforks to the boats which are rowed up behind it, and are so taken to this cannery

How does Alaska benefit from that industry? Simply by the wages that are paid to a small colony of natives there. corporation ship comes up from San Francisco, bringing a great number of Japanese and Chinese and men of other nationalities to do its work. When the season closes the entire product is shipped, and crews and workmen all disappear until the following year, and Alaska has been benefited only by the small amount paid in wages to some of the natives, who are employed only during the short canning season. So that Alaska, in what she gives us in fish, is not getting the benefit of the transaction. California secured that.

THE FUR INDUSTRY.

And what about the vast product in furs? Alaska has contributed to the world's wealth nearly $73,000,000, almost wholly from the Pribilof Islands. The fur seals, as I have already indicated, have their home on these islands. The entire advantage Alaska has gained from this vast industry is the advantage that comes to a few natives who live on the islands and who skin the seals and preserve the pelts for the lessees. Alaska secures absolutely nothing out of the business. There is nothing in it to develop the Territory or minister to the advantage of its resident population.

MINERAL PRODUCTION.

So when the value of Alaska's fish and furs, for which that Territory derives no developing powers, is deducted from the grand total of her products we have remaining only the $205,-000,600 that we have received from Alaska through the gold, the silver, and the copper that has been produced.

How has this mining enterprise developed Alaska? What effect has it had to bring in a white population and to establish homes? The native population of Alaska is in the neighborhood of 30,000. After gold was discovered the whites went in to the number of 30,000, but of those 27,000 were men and only 3,000 women. The census of 1910 shows a white population in Alaska of 30,334, but of females only 6,066.

All this indicates that Alaska is a great mining camp. It is not a Territory of homes. The population is to a considerable extent transient. When the darkness of autumn comes upon Alaska every person who is situated to do so goes to the States to spend the long winter. When it is remembered that there are eight months during which darkness extends from half-past 3 or 4 in the afternoon until nearly 10 the next morning one can imagine why it is that they do not care to remain there during the long winter months. I recall the situation at Nome. I am unable to give the exact figures, but as I now recall them fully one-third of the entire population of that peninsula were in the habit of going to the States before navigation closed in the fall. I do not think I have overstated the proportion.

From all this it appears that the development that has come to Alaska has been the development that has come through the mines and through the mines only. The white population of the Territory is the result of its mineral wealth and whatever has resulted from that; the people as a whole have not gone there to make homes, as has been so many times claimed during these debates. Whatever agricultural development there has been, whatever agricultural development the future may bring forth, is and must be, in my judgment, induced by the demands made upon it by those seeking the advantages which Alaska offers in other fields of enterprise.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I simply wish to interrupt him to say that the condition which he has described is applicable to every section of the world which has been developed primarily through the search for the precious metals. The pioneers who go out and look for gold and silver always blaze the way for those who come after them to settle and build these waste places. So I think that description, while perfectly accurate, merely indicates that Alaska has not yet passed through the initial stage of its settlement, but as gold mines and gold deposits are developed through the attraction of men seeking to have all things to enrich themselves by the discovery and utilization of that metal, there will come afterwards those people who intend to make homes and who civilize and populate the country.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Senator and myself, Mr. President, look at the possibility of making homes and making agriculture possible from a different standpoint. He, of course, is entitled to his opinion upon the question. Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. In this connection I merely wish to say the same thing agriculturally was said of the section of the country which I in part represent within the lifetime of the present generation-that it was a barren waste. As was stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] the other day, it was practically denounced as worthless by even so great a statesman as Daniel Webster, while to-day the men and women who have come after the gold seekers have made it one of the most populous and productive regions of the United States.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, the point I was seeking to make and which I repeat is that, because of the conditions which I have mentioned, the agriculture of Alaska is wholly dependent upon the establishment of the mining camps; and in this area, which I have already said is two-thirds as large as all of the States east of the Mississippi River, no one can to-day prophesy when and where those camps will be opened.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President— Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator pleases, unless he wants to ask a question, I am endeavoring to get out of his way so that he can have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont decline to yield?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would rather ask the Senator a question than to speak in my own time, because I have a high regard for the judgment of the Senator from Vermont, and I wish he would sum it up to me in this way: Suppose we were inclined to give to a private corporation for the purpose of aiding in the building of a railroad or railroads in Alaska the same proportion of her resources or riches that we gave years ago of the resources of my State-and I assume the Senator knows pretty accurately what part of the State of Iowa was given to the various railroad companies to induce them to build railroads across it—does the Senator from Vermont believe that a private corporation so aided would build a railroad or railroads into the interior of Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am inclined to think they would eventually

Mr. CUMMINS. Why?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not want to be drawn into a long discussion on that question. The point I proposed to make, if the Senator will excuse me, was do not think the time has now come-I do not think the time is ripe for us to enter into a scheme as large as the scheme involved in this bill seems to be. I do not know how it will be 10 years from now. I do not think the Senator was in the Chamber when I discussed the development of the road system of Alaska, which, earlier in my remarks, I went into quite in detail. It is stated by some of those who have been quoted, and it is in evidence, that one of the railroads already constructed in Alaska failed because it could only lay freight down on its platform, where it remained, as there were no roads from such points into the interior. I think in order to make any railroad profitable in Alaska there must be wagon roads connecting the railroad stations with the mining camps, as they are now building them from the river points into the mining camps of the interior, and I do not think any railroad in any part of Alaska will pay without a great system of wagon roads to act in cooperation with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The point I intended to make in concluding my remarks was along that line.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; then I will not pursue the inquiry further. I was rather inferring as the Senator proceeded that in his opinion there ought not to be any railroads built

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not say that.

Mr. CUMMINS. In other words, that the Territory was

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. That its resources would not support profitably a railroad from the sea to the interior. That is a point upon which I have not, of course, the same amplitude of information the Senator from Vermont has, but I have rather been accepting it as true that whether in agriculture or in the product of mines there would be business enough in Alaska to support a railroad and that a railroad is required in order to carry the products of Alaska of whatever kind to NECESSITY FOR MORE ACCURATE KNOWLEDGE AS A BASIS FOR ACTION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Iowa I will say with all frankness that I do not know where Alaska will have its greatest development, nor where a trunk line of railroad could most profitably be located to-Ten years ago Fairbanks had not been heard of, the coal fields were unknown. What will happen in the next 10 years no one can safely judge. Even now I am uninformed as to the nature of the coal supply in Alaska. When I was there it was said there was nothing but lignite. To-day we are told that there are vast fields of coal, and I am inclined to believe it is so. I have watched this debate and listened to the testimony that has been given, but I can not satisfy myself that anyone knows where the Government ought to direct its agencies in the development of coal properties. Until that development has been made, until we have accurate and definite information both as to the supply and the quality of the coal deposits, and especially until it has been determined which particular coal field is the most desirable, I think it a great mistake for the Government to engage in the building of railroads to the extent provided for in this bill. I think it is a great deal better to develop the system of highways that have done so much for Alaska, and which will do so much in the future, and let the different sections of Alaska be developed minerally until we know precisely where the richer sections are. Let also a scientific investigation of the coal fields be made and correct information secured, and then, when we have intelligently determined where the best coal supply is located, let railroad construction go on.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not the observation of the Senator from Vermont that the railroad is the pioneer in progress and development, and that it is not possible to secure a great extent of development without a railroad?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is true where we know the country and what the possibilities of it are, and in a country that does not abound as Alaska does with great navigable streams, which must inevitably furnish the basis for transportation. With a territory as large as that the water rates must be cheaper than those over any railroad. I never expect to see the time when the supplies for Alaska will not in a large measure be carried upon the navigable streams of that District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if in his view it is not a prime consideration in the development of Alaska that the laws should be liberalized, so as to invite settlers there, and if they are so liberalized and settlers go there, will they not then build roads?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no doubt about it. The settlers who are there already have contributed to this object. I forgot to mention that they have contributed quite liberally to the building of roads out into districts where they reside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I may be permitted—

mont yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator suggests liberalizing the laws of Alaska so as to invite settlers. I may say to the Senator that the homestead laws are more liberal in Alaska than in any other part of the country—that is, settlers are allowed to take up 320 acres of land. The coal-land laws of the West have been modified in favor of Alaska, but all the lands have been withdrawn, practically, from settlement by virtue of Executive proclamations.

Mr. GALLINGER. But they get a good title to the land? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They could if the land were not in a

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word more. I have listened to this debate, and we have been told that the reason why our people are going over to Canada is because their land laws are so much more liberal and our land laws are so oppressive. If that suggestion is to be abandoned, then my question would not have much potency. My question grew out of what I had heard discussed here on the floor in this debate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. NELSON. I desire to supplement what the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has said. It is true that they can take larger homesteads in Alaska than elsewhere, but the great drawback and handicap is that the lands are not surveyed there, and before a man can secure a title he has to get it surveyed himself; and that proves to be a most dilatory and laborious process. So very few homesteads have been entered; they are simply there as squatters. The delay and expense of getting the land surveyed, when they have to pay for the surveyed to the s themselves, are so immense that few of them have attempted to secure title.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President— Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I rose to say practically what the Senator from Minnesota has said, that while there is the advantage which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] speaks of, yet in its ultimate effect the settlement laws of Alaska are not so satisfactory as the laws of Canada for the settlement of public lands. Not only with reference to the quantity of land, but with reference to getting title, and so forth, does Canada deal more favorably than the United States toward the settler. but Canada gives her personal attention and makes it her personal business to see that the bona fide settler wins out in his fight. If he becomes short of money or loses a horse, or in anyway breaks down financially, Canada undertakes to see, as long as he is there struggling for a home, that he has the advantage which enables him to secure it. It is that condition of affairs which has taken settlers over into Canada.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to say that Canada has gone further, and built railroads to assist their settlers and other people on the public domain.

Mr. BORAH. I am not opposing the Senator's railroad, but reject the proposition entirely that we shall get settlers in Alaska by reason of the railroads, if they do not find a place where they can alight and have a home of their own.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that by reason of the climatic conditions, which I have described, do not see any future for Alaska agriculture except as it is locally developed by the discovery of gold or copper and the establishment of mining centers. Secondly, I do not see how it is possible for anyone to intelligently locate a railroad to-day for the development of the gold-mining industries and the agricultural industry dependent upon them. We all know that copper is in the Copper River Valley, and in large quantities, and roads already have been projected into that valley.

To my mind the real important consideration with which we have to deal is whether we shall undertake this stupendous project of expending $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 on the uncertain information we have relating to the coal fields.

The debate shows that we have no reliable information regarding the extent of coal deposits or the quality of the different deposits or the location of the best coal, and until we have carried our investigations to a much greater extent than we have already been able to do, it seems to me a mistake for the Government to go to the very great expense of establishing a railroad system in Alaska, with her incomparable waterways. I do not to-day know where I would locate a railroad if I were to build one for the development of the gold-mining industry, nor would I know where I would locate one to best develop the coal industry of Alaska. For these reasons and upon the facts which I have stated, I find myself unable to support the pending

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments, because I am conscious of the fact that there is only a brief period between the present moment and the hour that is fixed by the unanimous-consent rule taking a vote upon this measure. I have, however, been much interested and much impressed with this debate, which has involved so many matters of paramount interest to the American people and which bears so intimately upon what may be our future course of legislation with reference to the great problem of transportation, that I feel constrained to say a few words upon that phase of the subject. I am not personally familiar with any portion of Alaska be-What has been said concerning its possibilities and the development of its resources which will follow cheap or general transportation is the result either of governmental investigation or of personal experience, or both, and this is so far superior to anything that I could add by way of suggestion that I shall say as little as possible upon that subject. I understand, however, that as a general proposition the matter of railroad building, the selection of railroad routes, has largely been determined by the physical conditions of the seacoast, and that there are only two or three passes through which lines of railway penetrating the interior and connecting with the coast can be constructed. Hence that phase of the bill has been settled for us.

There is no question but that this immense Territory has been greatly favored by nature, and that as time passes the wonderful and extensive nature of its resources will be more and more re-I have been several times impressed with what has been said concerning the present unpromising conditions in Alaska and have drawn mental comparisons with the condemnatory criticisms of some of our papers and people about Alaska contemporaneously with and succeeding its acquisition. I have also drawn mental parallels between derogatory or optimistic notions concerning this country and the views that were entertained of the great intermountain west but a few years ago. I believe that as Alaska is opened up and as opportunities are given for the enterprising and ambitious to go into that country and utilize the conveniences that will come from a fairly good system of transportation many of the gloomy things which have been uttered here will be found to be quite as unsubstantial as those which were made of the section known as the great west-ern intermountain region. So far as the matter of railway building is concerned that feature of the bill presents to the country one of the most important subjects that has been brought before this Congress for its consideration.

I am not one of those who feel like modifying or avoiding the impression that it is a proposed experiment in Government ownership or that it may become the precedent for Government ownership upon a more extensive scale, because it does provide for governmental construction, ownership, and operation of a system of transportation. It suggests itself to my mind favorably since I believe that the problem of Government ownership is rapidly becoming one of the insistent problems of the immediate future, and hence I welcome this opportunity for the Government to make the experiment of united ownership and operation in a section of country which may be well considered a virgin field for such an experiment.

Alaska in this particular is sui generis. The United States Government owns nearly all the Territory. Its physical position makes the expenditure of large amounts of money that its resources may be developed and become available absolutely necessary, and that must be furnished either from private or by

Now, private capital has made an effort at construction. It has made the attempt to do so. It has been frequently asserted, and is the general public belief, that the private capital thus far expended has been expended as a part of a general scheme of universal control if not ownership of that vast extent and area of country by private interests.

Assuming that there must be some basis for this general belief and knowing what the general tendency of all great enterprises nowadays is, I think there is ample justification for this impression in the public mind. It has resulted, as those things always result, in executive and departmental orders of restriction and withdrawal and in legislation which bears more heavily upon the innocent than upon the guilty. This has practically paralyzed the development of the country through the apprehension that liberalism in legislation, which would permit the country to be settled through acquisition of mines and coal, may open the doorway to increasing and continued monopoly.

So in that view of the problem I am very glad that we shall have an opportunity, if this bill becomes a law, to ascertain the extent to which governmental construction of transportation facilities may be carried and the capacity of the United States to own and operate lines of transportation.

I am not impressed, Mr. President, by the contention the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] made the other day, that no business for the road is apparent. If I understood him correctly, one of the objections to the embarkation of the Government upon this enterprise is that there is no business for these railroads in the event they are constructed, and therefore no warrant for this large expenditure. That is largely true; but such was the case, Mr. President, when the Union Pacific Railroad and Central Pacific Railroads were organized and endowed by the Government with enormous land grants and bond guaranties as an inducement and an aid to their construction.

Some years ago, and I think in 1889, Mr. Sidney Dillon, who at one time was the president of the Union Pacific Railroad, wrote for Scribner's Magazine a most interesting account of the completion of these two great continental railroads. In the course of that interesting historical article, he called attention to the fact that in all of the discussions, in all of the conferences and preliminaries leading up to the construction of those two railways, the prospect of any local business or the possibility of any local transportation or business, even for the future, was not considered at all. The roads were to be financed by the issuance of bonds and by governmental aid, and upon the theory that the oriental traffic, the traffic with Japan and China-their teas, their silks, their spices seeking the markets of Europe—would reach that Continent by way of San Francisco and New York, and this oriental traffic would furnish an abundant revenue, not only for the purpose of paying the operating expenses and fixed charges of the road, but also ample income for dividends. When Mr. Dillon wrote he said, as illustrating the futility of human speculation, that the oriental traffic of the roads was then 5 per cent and the local traffic, which had sprung into existence and contributing to their lines after the roads had been completed, was 95 per cent of the entire business. The road was completed in 1869, and in less than 20 years the resource from which it was expected that the revenues of the road would be almost entirely, if not entirely, derived had become a negligible quantity in the volume of traffic which went to make up the real revenues of the road in 1888.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH, The situation which culminated in the development of that great railroad system and its power with reference to natural resources is that there were open to exploration millions of acres of public land and mineral resources, and so forth. While I am in favor of this bill and shall vote for it, it occurs to me, as I said the other day, it is only one step which we will have to take in this matter, because the Government must either exploit these natural resources and develop them, or sell them and permit some one else to go in there and do it.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Idaho anticipated precisely what I was going to add, that unless this bill is followed by legislation that will permit the development of the resources of Alaska, the objection made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] might prove to be perfectly good. If, however, it is—and I am encouraged to believe that it will be—supplemented by legislation by giving opportunity not only for the ascertainment but for the acquisition and development of the resources of Alaska, the same result will follow that has followed the completion of the first of the great lines of transcontinental highways. Unless that is done the Government might just as well take the proceeds of these bonds for the building of this system of roads as provided in the bill and sink them into the Alaskan seas. The two must go together, and I believe that the one will follow the other. If I did not so believe, then I would not under any circumstances support this

Mr. President, if the Government is going to construct railroads at all in Alaska, I think it should be authorized, and by legislation equipped with the authority, to construct a substantial railway system, not for the purpose of developing coal alone, not for the purpose of developing agriculture alone, but to the end that all of the resources of Alaska may contribute their wealth to the common treasury of the Nation; in other words, the use of the Government's credit and of its capital with reference to Alaska should be with the ultimate end and object in view of serving the entire Territory as an integral part of the United States. While the acquisition of coal may be the immediate purpose to be subserved, it should not by any means be the only purpose to be subserved. As a consequence, when the bill is in operation the administrative department of the Government should be equipped to take advantage of and should do those things which may be necessary to systematize and make effective the lines of railway transportation that are to be completed.

I quite agree with the views of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] concerning Government ownership of lines of transportation. If control through ownership of lines of transportation becomes essential to the public interest and the equipment of the roads or of the systems can be so provided for as to secure that efficiency in service and in management which is vital to the success of any great enterprise, then I should certainly welcome such a change. That, of course, is the crux tainly welcome such a change. of the entire problem of public ownership everywhere.

Can the public, represented by the Government, whether municipal, State, or National, secure and keep in constant operation the same efficiency of conditions which is claimed for private enterprise? Mr. President, the Government is to-day and long has been in control of a line of railway in Panama. We are constructing and have almost finished a great canal in that section of the world under the management of the War Department, whose immediate representatives in full control have developed the fact that in efficiency and in effectiveness the Government of the United States may be the equal of private enterprise everywhere. The United States is building lines of railway in the Philippines, whose management, so far as I know, has been satisfactory. It is the owner of about 3,900 know, has been satisfactory. It is the owner of about 3,900 miles of cable and telegraph line leading to Alaska and running across its illimitable distances. In its management and operation of these minor enterprises-and I call them "minor" by way of contrast to the building and equipment of a system such as is contemplated in this bill—the Government has been as capable, as efficient, and as satisfactory as has been the management of the best equipped private enterprises in the United States and much more so than many of those which to-day have been justly condemned by public opinion in view of recent disclosures concerning their management and organization.

We must not forget, Mr. President, that the original conception of the railway in this country was that it was a public highway and should be built by the States, and that, with one or two possible exceptions, every original line of railroad constructed in the United States was builded by the States themselves. One of them in the State of Georgia, the Western & Atlantic, is to-day the property of the Commonwealth. While it has not for many years operated it directly, the fact remains that it was originally built as a public highway by the government of that State, and that it has remained wholly under its control. If my memory serves me aright, it was not until about the middle of the forties that the demand for private ownership of such lines of transportation became sufficiently established to persuade the States to turn over their partly constructed and their completed railways to private hands. So, in making this experiment we are not, except perhaps to the extent to which it goes, taking any new or untried step or branching out into a field which may be beyond or which, I think, many contend-and a few years ago nearly all contended-is beyond the domain of the Government itself.

I do not think anyone in this Chamber or anywhere else would for a moment entertain the idea of turning the Panama Canal over to private hands. Why? The reasons are so obvious that there is no necessity of taking up the time of the Senrte in their discussion. It is so apparently a great international enterprise, it is so evidently a thing which belongs to and never should be separated from the Government as the representative of all, its equipment and investiture with the power and the control of the Government of the United States, to the end that it may at the vast expenditure incurred in its construction, that the mere suggestion of any management save that of the Government is an absurdity upon its face.

I believe that the time is coming, Mr. President, when the great body of the people will regard our transportation system just as the public to-day regard the Panama Canal. It is a great network of lines which perform and always have performed a public service, a service which should extend its benefits equally to all; a service in which no discrimination should exist; a service which should be operated not for profit, but as a governmental agency for the utilization and service of the industries of the country.

When we consider the fact that the railway systems of the country have in recent times been very largely operated not for the public good, not in the spirit of equality to all, but as huge money-making concerns for those who control them, whose resources and prospects and possibilities have been capitalized and capitalized again, until to-day the huge burden of debt which they bear is far beyond their value; when we further consider the shameful scandals of administration that have been exposed in recent times regarding some of the greatest systems of the country, which have been made the footballs of financiers intent solely upon their own financial aggrandizement through their powers of speculation, with both assets and liabilities, what wonder is it that the people are beginning to look at the proposition of Government ownership from a much more favorable standpoint and to conclude that nothing can be worse than private ownership, whose consequences are manifested through the awful conditions in which some of the great systems find themselves?

The other day the St. Louis & San Francisco-known as the Frisco system-went into the hands of a receiver. Investigations resulted, which disclosed that the chairman of the board of directors had in a few short years made $7,000,000 for himself, and I do not remember how many millions for his associates, by building of feeders or purchasing of feeders for the main system which he promptly sold to himself at his own price in the name of the Frisco Railroad; when it was disclosed that of its huge capitalization $40,000,000 represented commissions paid to bankers and to brokers for the sale of its stocks and bonds, together with the profits made by the directors and the controllers of the road, what man hearing of these conditions but in his heart of hearts feels that the day of governmental ownership is rapidly approaching, and that it is not an expedient, not a matter of politics, but an absolute essen-tial to fair dealing between men and to the subordination of those great lines of transportation to the public good?

I believe, Mr. President, that there is much in the argument of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] that a railway operated by the Government might result in a larger expense account than a similar operation by private companies; perhaps it ought not to be so, but we may concede it for the sake of argument; yet, when contrasted with the waste and the profligacy that have marked the career of some of our great systems, the fact should not be permitted to weigh a dust mote in the scale of determination. Besides, Mr. President, a road operated privately is operated for profit, while a road belonging to the public and operated by the Government should be operated for service and not for profit. Hence, there may be ample margin for better wages, higher prices for materials used in operation and in construction, and yet, at the other end of the scale, the price of service to the consumer may be

Furthermore, Mr. President, Government ownership means, or should mean, the disappearance of all discrimination between sections of the country, between communities, and between individuals. In the region of country where I live, and I think in the Intermountain States generally, we are but the apex of the continent not only in the geographical but in the transportation sense, and almost every discrimination-and there are many-in the transportation rates of the country heavily upon that region, more heavily than upon any other, possibly, because of the absence of actual and potential water competition. I do not think that we would be suffering under such adverse conditions if Uncle Sam, instead of private companies, operated the great trunk lines which intersect that region of the country.

We have heard much about the immense fortunes which have been built up under the unequal operation of our tariff laws; but, Mr. President, the mighty fortunes of this country, all the mightiest of them, find their genesis in the control of transportation or in the utilization of that control, either by, favoritism in rates, commonly known as rebates, or by the common ownership and control both of the lines of transportaall times subserve the great purposes which have amply justified tion and of the articles which they transport. These wholly, indefensible conditions mean all the difference between enormous fortunes on the one hand and certain bankruptcy of competing business upon the other.

Mr. President, I have no intention of making any extended speech upon this subject. It is one of tremendous sweep, which might be discussed and not exhausted if one were to occupy an entire session of the Senate. I shall not, therefore, go much further into the details of the general situation; but I do want to call attention, before taking my seat, to the obvious truth that when it becomes generally apparent to a majority of the people that control is ineffectual, ownership will in all probability then become the sole alternative. A great many years ago Charles Francis Adams, then at the head of the Massachusetts Railroad Commission, emphasized the fact that so long as the rallways were in a position to defeat the orders of a public commission, so long would those orders be ineffectual, and because they continued to be ineffectual public opinion would determine, perhaps correctly, that commissions were of no importance whatever and a nuisance instead of a benefit to the people. He emphasized this assertion by citing instances in his own State where the orders of the commission were not only set at naught, but made ineffective for the evident purpose of creating an opinion hostile, or at least adverse, to the commission itself.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] yesterday in his very able discussion of the subject declared that there need be no necessity for the construction or control by the Government of a system of railroads in Alaska because the Interstate Commerce Commission was now clothed with such ample and extensive power and authority that it could interfere with and rectify any abuse or abuses that might arise from the private construction and ownership of railroads in Alaska. that were so, it would be a refutation of everything that I have said here to the contrary; but, Mr. President, the history of the Interstate Commerce Commission during the past few years and of the railroads over which they exercise an undoubtedly extensive jurisdiction furnish in themselves a complete reply to the Senator's position. In the very State from which the Senator hails there is at present fresh in the public mind a signal instance of the fact that the worst of abuses may coexist with the most extensive of jurisdictions, for, notwithstanding the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the New Haven Railroad Co. has been able absolutely to monopolize, and thereby to dominate, the transportation conditions in New England, and, in addition thereto, deliberately to suppress the only possible competition which could be put in active operation through the construction of a line of the Grand Trunk Railroad from some point in Massachusetts down to the seaboard in the State of Rhode Island.

New England expected and hoped for some competition through the completion of that line of railroad that might bring a little relief to a few sections of that most populous portion of the Union; and yet it awoke one morning to be confronted with the unpleasant and stupefying fact that the proposed extension had been abandoned, notwithstanding it was partially completed and millions of dollars had been expended in its construction. Since that time the power of those who control the railroad situation of New England has been great enough, the Interstate Commerce Commission to the contrary notwithstanding, to continue that situation, and it has been said with perfect truth that there is, unless some change comes soon, no more hope of the extension of that Grand Trunk system down to the seaboard of Long Island Sound than there is of building a railroad from New York City to the moon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not a fact that the officers of the Grand Trunk Railroad publicly stated that the reason they did not complete that system was because of the fact that they failed to secure the money in the London market which they had expected to get?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes, Mr. President. Mr. GALLINGER. I do not see for the life of me how the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad could have prevented the building of that line, and, if I am not mistaken, the building of that line is now contemplated and probably will be carried out in the near future. In saying this I do not want the Senator to understand me as defending a great many things which the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has Certainly not.

Mr. GALLINGER. And for which they are now very properly being called to account.

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly would not so reflect upon the Senator's judgment or patriotism. The president of the Grand Trunk Railroad was one of the victims of the Titanic disaster. Up to that time the road had no trouble in getting all the money it wanted. His death, of course, resulted in a change of management and control. Shortly afterwards the activities of building were suspended, and the ostensible reason given by the Grand Trunk people was that which the Senator from New Hampshire states. The New Haven road, on the other hand, justified the action which resulted in the suppression of this extension by contending that it in no manner interfered with competition or with the mandates of the law.

It may be—I am not in a position to deny the fact—that the financial supplies of the Grand Trunk were cut off; but that brings me, Mr. President, to something which I might have omitted in my somewhat desultory discussion of this subject and for which I am indebted to the interruption of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] also took the position-and it has been taken by others, and no doubt with the most perfect earnestness and sincerity—that there is no such thing as control of the money market, in consequence of which the contention that outside enterprise can not enter Alaska because it can not be financed is not well founded. But I have no doubt that the Morgan interests have been sufficiently powerful in themselves to cut off the source of financial supply upon which the Grand Trunk Railway officials depended for the completion of this road. My own belief is-and I shall not amplify it; we have abundant proofs of it in the investigations of the Pujo committee, in the report of that committee, and in the various disclosures which have been made from time to time by State as well as by national investigations—that, through a network of community of interests, through interlocking directorates, through the power that comes from a common purpose, any great enterprise, at the instance of one of a half dozen men in the city of New York, may be throttled, may be killed, may be absolutely wiped out of existence and exterminated at any stage of its construction, if it meets with his objection or is hostile to any plan or purpose of his own. I believe I can go further and say that for the past decade scarcely a mile of railroad has been built in the United States, outside perhaps of the un-fortunate proposed extension of the Grand Trunk, that has not been built as a part and portion of one or more of the great systems of this country.

In my State, Mr. President, we have had a most graphic illustration of the power of financial control over new enterprises and new purposes. Some time ago the richest citizen in my State, a man who had amassed his wealth largely in railroad building, a pioneer in railroad extension in the West, a man of conspicuous administrative ability, conceived the idea of building what he called "a short line from Denver to Salt Lake," which was not only desirable for many reasons, but which was designed to open one of the most fertile and attractive regions of the West, then and now deprived of railroad facilities. Union Pacific was to the north of it and the Rio Grande to the south of it, the latter road then being under the control of Mr. Gould and of Mr. Rockefeller. A company was organized in 1901. It was not favored by the Union Pacific interests or by the Rio Grande interests, and, by that quiet, invisible method of pro-cedure which is so difficult to detect and which at the same time is so obvious and so effectual, the repeated efforts to finance that great enterprise came to naught. Mr. Moffat had his company's bonds accepted at least half a dozen times and the money promised for road construction, but between the execution of his contracts and the receipt of his money influence always interfered and paralyzed their observance. The result was that this public-spirited citizen, possessed of a great enterprise, beginning with a private fortune of $25,000,000, spurred on in the hope and with the expectation of receiving the financial aid which the enterprise merited, struggled for 10 long and weary years, and succeeded, on his own resources, in constructing 210 miles of this road, at the end of which time he died with a broken heart, bankrupt in fortune and almost in reputation.

So we have some direct experiences as to the extent to which these combinations may interfere with and absolutely destroy further railroad extension.

It is these things which have so powerfully promoted the conviction in public sentiment that the day is approaching when the Government of the United States, for the protection of all its people and to the end that railroads may be operated for the people and not for bankers and speculators in the great centers of the country, shall reach out its strong hand and assume the ownership as well as the control of all our lines

So far as their obligations are concerned, do we not know that every dollar of bonded debt of the railroad companies to-day is as much an indebtedness of the people of the United States as are the bonds issued by the Government itself? It is true they are not direct evidences of the public indebtedness, but the producing and consuming energies of the people are the basis and the security of the thousands upon thousands of millions of railway bonds. So that the taking over of these systems, if it should become necessary—which I hope may not become necessary-if it means anything, simply means the direct assumption by the Government of the United States of a burden that already exists. As a consequence it seems to me the appalling magnitude of the transaction becomes relieved of all of its ominous consequences and surroundings when that supreme fact is given due consideration.

As I stated at the outset, I hope this bill will become a law in order that it may demonstrate to the people, by operating in a virgin country which belongs to the people of the United States, that the establishment of a railroad system built by the Government, owned by the Government, and operated by the Government, is or is not successful, to the end that we may determine whether the experiment should stop right there, whether the Government should recede and transfer that which it has constructed to private hands, or whether because successful it should take another long step forward and do what I think it may be forced to do in view of existing conditionstake over the absolute control and ownership of that great system of transportation without which the industries of the country can not prosper nor its prosperity long continue.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise chiefly to call the attention of the Senate to an amendment which, at the proper time, I intend to offer to the first section of the bill now under consideration; but I can not resist the inclination to submit to the Senate some observations upon the wider question that has been so generally debated.

The first inquiry of every Senator, of course, must be this: Are the conditions existing in Alaska and is the relation of that Territory to the people of this country of a character that fairly demand the building of a railroad from the seashore to the interior of the Territory?

If there is no fair demand for the construction of a railroad there by private enterprise or by the Government, the whole question is answered; but if the conditions fairly warrant or demand the building of a railroad, then we approach the further inquiry as to the circumstances and the authority under which it should be built.

Until the address of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dilling-HAM] I supposed it was fairly well established that there was a demand for the building of a railroad from the ocean into the interior of this Territory. I think that is probably the only conclusion that can be deduced from the testimony that has been taken before the committee or committees. I remember that President Taft, after what seemed to be a full investigation, recommended the building of a railroad in Alaska. I remember that his Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Fisher, after a personal investigation, came to the conclusion that there ought to be a railroad built there, and so recommended in his report to the President. I remember that President Wilson has reached and announced the same conclusion; that his Secretary of the Interior believes that there ought to be a railroad built into Alaska; that the commission, composed of eminent engineers and personages, after traveling through Alaska were of the opinion that a railroad should be built from the ocean to the navigable waters of one or more of the great rivers of Alaska.

Therefore it seems to me this accumulation of proof has left us without much room for disputing that one proposition, namely, that there ought to be a railroad, or two railroads, or more built from the south shore of Alaska to a point or points somewhere upon the navigable waters of the Yukon, the Tanana. or the Kuskokwim, or possibly points on two of these rivers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me there is not very much doubt Mr. BORAH. It seems to me there is not resources, nor about the great wealth of Alaska and about its resources, nor that they are there and have been there for a long time.

I fear most is that they are going to be there for a long time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a little fear of that myself. I believe, however, if I may answer the Senator from Idaho in this way, that if the Government spends twenty-five or thirty million dol-lars in building a railroad into Alaska it will be a little more willing that its resources shall be opened up to the enterprise of regard to our internal resources and agricultural and mineral the citizens of that country, or those of this country who desire to go to that country. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he does not believe that probably will be the result?

Mr. BORAH. Well, yes; as the Senator puts it, only "probably," I think I should accept the proposition, but I do not think it is at all certain.

We have no business in Alaska as a Government exploiter unless it is going to result in some benefit to the people who are interested in the building of a railroad from a public standpoint. In other words, if we are going to pay just the same for Alaskan coal and for Alaskan timber and for all of the other natural resources of Alaska, then the Government has no business at all in Alaska as a builder of public railroads, because, as I said the other day, it does not make any difference to whom we pay the price if we pay the same price to both parties.

While there has been so much discussion here as to the natural resources of Alaska, there has been regret upon my part that there has not been more illumination upon the subject of how we are going to get the benefit of those resources. have a vast amount of natural resources in the United States over which the railroads are practically running, but nobody is getting the benefit of them. I am anxious that we keep in mind that this is a useless step unless another step is taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I may not wholly agree with the Senator from Idaho respecting the matter he has just suggested. Because the consumer, if you please, or the ultimate user of the wealth of Alaska, such as coal and other minerals, not get these things more cheaply after the railroad is built than he gets them now I do not think it follows necessarily that there should be no railroad built.

If I may be permitted to speak to my fellow Republicans a moment upon that subject, especially to those who are shrinking from the proposal that the Government shall build a railroad in Alaska, I would say that our party, at least, believes that it is the business of the Government, and at least one of the functions of the Government, to do what it can to give work to the people of the United States, to enlarge the field of their energy, and to broaden the possibilities that open out to the American capitalist and laborer. Our party does not believe in the theory of government advanced and so ably sustained. indeed, by Herbert Spencer, who had no other conception of the functions of organized society save that government should be a mere policeman, to keep the peace.

Some of the argument against this bill upon this side of the Chamber has proceeded upon the theory that the Government of the United States has nothing more to do for the welfare of its people than to keep the peace-that is, to maintain order. I have a different conception respecting the functions of government. I am not willing to advance to the other extreme and adopt the views of Karl Marx, who believed that the Government should be a universal parent, absorbing all the energies of the people and distributing among its subjects in just proportions the results of labor; but somewhere between the policeman of Herbert Spencer and the universal parent of Karl Marx there is to be drawn the line which divides governmental and altruistic activity from individual or selfish activity. try before I have finished to draw that line, so far as this particular project is concerned.

If by building this railroad into Alaska and opening up the treasures and the riches of that great Territory to the enterprise and the work of our people we can broaden the field of labor and give employment to more people at fair, adequate compensation, we shall have done one of the things for which I think this Government was organized, and one of the things to which the party to which I belong has pledged itself.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BORAH. But the one object of government, after all, must be to secure results; and I repeat that the mere fact of building a railroad up there will not be of any benefit to the people of the United States. The fact is that we have discovered the midway point between the policeman and the universal father so far as Alaska is concerned, and that is the stepfather. That is the situation in which we find ourselves. with a vast amount of wealth locked up in the hands of somebody else, and we are not permitted to enjoy it.

I do not argue for the personal exploitation which was very properly terminated several years ago; but there it lies, undeveloped, without benefit to anyone; and so far as any scheme, plan, or proposition proposed is concerned, it is to lie there interminably

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from Idaho knowsand I want every Senator to know—that I have no more sympathy than he has with the policy that has been pursued with wealth. I have no sympathy at all with it. I think it is there for the purpose of being used, and that the Government ought to open every reasonable way to the people of the country so that they may utilize these resources and this wealth. It is still true, however, that if a railroad in Alaska is necessary in order that it may be devoloped, and that its development will bring employment to the people of this country and afford an opportunity for the investment of the capital of this country so that our energies may be extended and our opportunities broadened, then the railroad ought to be built.

That brings me to the question whether the Government ought to build this railroad, or whether it ought to be remitted to the uncertainties of private enterprise.

I hope I may be permitted to say just a word here that is rather abstract, for I am very solicitous that nothing that occurs here shall be misunderstood, and that the view taken by some of my friends upon this side that we are adopting a false and vicious principle shall not be longer entertained. am not proposing at this time the general acquisition of transportation facilities; but it will be helpful if we keep always in view the fundamental principles which in the end must control the position of the Government upon the subject.

It has been treated by some Senators as though it were a new and unsound proposal in organized society that the Government should own and operate a public utility of this character. think I have heard it from more than one Senator. Yet the city of New York is just finishing an improvement to a great public utility, at an expense of more than $150,000,000, that is intended to furnish pure water to that municipality. I assume that there is no intelligent man in the world who will claim that New York should allow a private corporation to construct the facilities for furnishing her water, and that her people should depend upon a private enterprise for this necessity of

There is no difference in principle, however, between New York expending this large sum of money in order to construct an adequate system of water supply and the Government of the United States acquiring and operating all of the railroads in the United States. The character of the service is exactly the same. They are both public utilities. Both are supreme public necessities.

There may be a vast difference between the wisdom, at any given time, of a government entering upon the ownership and operation of its transportation system and a government entering upon the ownership and management of its water-supply system, but there is no difference whatsoever in the principle involved. It is simply a question of good judgment as to whether the people who are dependent upon the one or the other will be better and more adequately served if the ownership and operation is in the hands of the Government than in the hands of individual enterprise.

It is impossible to define the functions of organized society, but there are certain truths which every thoughtful man accepts. First, the general object of government is to guard the rights and promote the welfare of the people who compose it. It ought not to do those things which can be better done by the individual. We all agree to that. It ought to do those things which the individual can not do or can not adequately and efficiently do, if the general welfare requires it to be done; and every age must determine for itself, in view of the conditions of the time, what society as a whole should do and what should be

These are the principles that ought to control any civilized society. I think there may come a time when these principles will demand the acquisition on the part of the Government of the United States of all its transportation facilities. I do not know how soon the time may come. There is more than one thing that must be done before we can safely enter upon the acquisition and the operation of our transportation lines, both on land and on sea; but it must not be forgotten, while we are considering the subject, that one of the things that society now demands is transportation at the lowest possible cost. The high cost of living is the result of the many instrumentalities that intervene between the original producer and the final consumer, and transportation is one of these instrumentalitiesnecessary, of course.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BORAH. The Senator refers to the question of the high cost of living and transportation. Permit me to read just a word from the evidence that was taken with regard to this This does not relate to the interior of Alaska, but to the portion of Alaska to which transportation was easily accessible.

I read, from page 8 of the hearing before the House Committee on Public Lands on Friday, January 11, 1907, the testimony of Alfred H. Brooks:

Q. There is a harbor there, is there not?-A. There is a good har-

Q. There is a harbor there, is there not?—A. There is a good harbor; yes.
Q. How much do each of those railroads now lack of reaching the coal fields?—A. The Alaska Central Railway has completed, I think, only 50 miles of track, and the distance is about 200 miles. They have done more or less work, however, along some 60 or 70 miles more of that line. The other railway—I do not remember the name of it now, but it is the one building from Cordova Bay—is said to have completed about 20 miles of track and probably has about 60 more to build.
Q. Is it not true that that whole region there is getting its coal from British Columbia now?—A. In 1905 the consumption of coal in Alaska and by the steamers plying to its ports was over 250,000 tons, of which probably about 50 per cent came from British Columbia.
Q. Then some is even coming from Australia, is it not?—A. There has been coal brought to Alaska from Australia.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a very fitting supplement to what

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a very fitting supplement to what I was just saying.

Mr. BORAH. Somebody said the other day that there is four hundred times as much coal in Alaska as there is in Pennsylvania, and yet they are shipping coal from Australia and British Columbia to Alaska. Now, it was very proper to reserve that coal from monopoly, but it seems utterly incomprehensible that we should not provide a method for its use in a proper way.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are doing a more startling thing than that, possibly of necessity. We ship an immense amount of from Pennsylvania and Virginia around Cape Horn to the Pacific coast for the uses of our Navy alone, and this coal costs the United States from $7.50 to $10 per ton when it finally reaches the ship on which it is to be consumed.

Mr. BORAH. That is a great source of conservation, certainly in this part of the country.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be. It is brought to the eastern shores of America at a cost of about $3 or a little more per ton, and the remaining part of the cost is the cost of carrying it from the Atlantic coast to the ship that is to burn it on the Pacific.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that when the householder buys his anthracite coal at Portland, Oreg., as I do when I am there, he pays $17 a ton for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. Returning for a moment to the suggestion I was making when I was interrupted, if we assume that the direct capitalization of all the railroads in this country is $15,000,000,000—nominally it is about $18,000,000,000, but it is probable that there is duplicate capitalization that would reduce it to about $15,000,000,000—last year the net operating revenues, the revenues of all the railroads in the United States amounted to about 6 per cent upon this entire capitalization. I am not entering into the quality of the capitalization. I know, and you all know, that a very large part of it was issued under circumstances that I sometimes think ought to have been inquired into by a grand jury; but it is there; and last year these revenues amounted to sufficient to pay 6 per cent, if it could have been distributed, upon the capitalization of this vast sum of $15,000,000,000. The Government would supply the capital for 3 per cent, as was shown by my colleague [Mr. Kenyon] within a day or two. If the railway capitalization of this country could be content with a reward of 3 per cent, certain to come because agreed to be paid by the Government, the people of this country would save in one year upon the interest on the capitalization alone, $450,000,000.

The railways are not only earning practically 6 per cent upon their capitalization, but they are asking for more, and I am not prepared to say that the commission will not find it necessary to give them more, in order to bridge them over a chasm which their own recklessness has created in their financial

In order that we might be able to utilize all the benefits of the saving of $450,000,000 a year, it would have to be presumed that the Government of the United States could operate this vast system of transportation as cheaply as it is now being operated. I believe that we require some training and education in our relations, if you please, to the Government before that could safely be presumed of the American people. In other words, we must await the time when we can be sure that political influences can be wholly excluded from this business before it would be safe for the Government to undertake it. But I do not shrink from the time, if it shall come. I very frankly confess that I believe it will come, and when it does come I shall hope that the virtue and strength of the American citizen will be sufficient to bear this new responsibility that will be placed upon him.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do:

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator if he has any knowledge of the cost of operating the Government railroads in Europe as compared with the cost of operating railroads in

Mr. CUMMINS. I have some information in regard to that, but I did not intend when I rose to drift into it at all. fore it is not before me, and I had not intended to use it, because the proposition of Government ownership of our system of transportation is not before us. I am saying what I am saying simply to indicate that we ought not to shrink from its investigation and study, and we ought not to assume that it is a false principle in government.

Mr. WEEKS. If it will not interrupt the Senator too much, want to call his attention to the cost of operating the two national railways in France. Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. WEEKS. The State management of the national railway systems costs 911 per cent and 88 per cent of the receipts, respectively. According to the official report for 1912, which has just been issued, the revenue of the first system, the Southwestern, amounted to $15,707,000 and the cost of management to The revenue of the second system, the Western, amounted to $48,000,000 and the cost of operation to $43,000,000. Now, we operate our railroads in this country at from 60 to 65

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the Senator is wrong.

Mr. WEEKS. If we went on a Government basis, would we not be likely to increase the cost of operation 20 to 25 per cent, as the French report seems to indicate we might have to do?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is wrong about our proportion of operating expenses. The charge is about 67 or 68 per cent in this country. I understand perfectly that the railroads in France, two of them at least, are conspicuous examples of unfortunate management.

Mr. GALLINGER. And bad service.
Mr. CUMMINS. And possibly bad service. If the Senator from Massachusetts is really interested in inquiring into the results of Government ownership and operation, he ought to pass over the line from France into Germany and ascertain what has been accomplished there. He will ind that the Germany and ascertain what has been accomplished there. man Government is able to give its people good service; that it is able to give them fairly low rates, and out of those low rates it is able to lay aside a sinking fund that in the course of a very few years will pay the entire cost of the railway system of that Empire. I do not say that we could operate a system of railways with equal success, but there will come a time when we can, if we desire to enter on the enterprise at all,

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was a little bit startled to hear the Senator from Iowa say that he thought the time might come quite speedily when the Government of the United States would take over the operation of the railroads of the country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not use the words "quite speedily."

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not use the words "quite speedily."
I think it is one of the things of the future.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator said it might come.
Mr. CUMMINS. It might come. I think it may come.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was, further, somewhat startled to hear the Senator say, if I understood him aright, that he would not object to that being brought about not object to that being brought about.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator must state just what I did say or allow me to repeat it. Whenever the people of this country believe that they can be better served in transportation through Government ownership and operation than through private ownership and operation, the time of which I spoke will come. Now, it is a question of judgment to be exercised at the particular time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator that that time may come, but I think it would be a very sad day for the Republic if it should come. In addition to the fact that something like 2,000,000 employees would be added to the pay roll of the United States, for my part I can not see how it would be possible for the Government to operate such a vast enterprise under our methods as well as private persons regulated by the Government.

I call the Senator's attention to this menace in that situation in addition to others. We are passing every year or two omnibus public-buildings bills. They cover an appropriation of perhaps eighteen or twenty million dollars a year. Yet the Senator knows, I think, that even in that comparatively small expenditure-I mean as compared with the vast resources of the Government and its other vast expenditures—a very large sum of money is wasted. We are putting up buildings at the cost of sixty, seventy-five, one hundred, and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in communities where we ought not to spend more than twenty or twenty-five or thirty thousand dol-lars. We are expending money, as the Senator knows, wastefully and foolishly in our omnibus rivers and harbors bills that we pass from time to time. Now, if the Government of the United States takes over the operation of all the railroads of the country in addition we shall have not only our omnibus public-buildings bill every year or two and our rivers and harbors bill, but the people of the country, of course, will demand of Congress, or it will then be the duty of the Government, to extend the building of new roads into undeveloped communities, the improvement of roads that are already in existence, the building of terminal facilities, and the thousand and one things which go to the efficiency of modern railroads, and the omnibus public-buildings bill will be a drop in the bucket compared with the omnibus railroad bill that the Congress of the United States will be compelled to face every There will be competition among Representatives and Senators upon that subject, as there is competition among them upon these other subjects, to get more railroad terminals in their cities and to have railroads built into undeveloped country, whether it will pay or not. It does seem to me that in considering that one item alone it would result in a waste of untold millions of dollars upon the part of the Government before we would get through.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Iowa yield to the junior Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to my colleague. Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question. He says we are wasting money on public buildings and wasting money on rivers and harbors and other things. That is absolutely true, but is that an argument against the proposition? Is there not just one complete answer to that, and that is to stop such public-building appropriations? Why do we not stop them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is quite true that we ought to stop them, but we do not, and we will not stop them.

Mr. KENYON. We can stop them, and we ought to stop them. Mr. SUTHERLAND. We can stop them in one sense, but we can not stop them so long as the present characteristics of Representatives and Senators exist.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Utah will remember that I have but a few minutes more.

Mr. KENYON. I want to add that the public conscience is a little different from what it used to be. The Congressman who secures a public building now for a town that does not need it is not banqueted in that town any longer. The people do not have that kindly feeling for him that they used to have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator's observation is not the same as mine on that subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa vield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only wanted to make one comment on the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. A just comparison would be with the Post Office appropriation bill rather than the public buildings bill. There is much more similarity between the business of the Post Office Department and its operation and a railroad system than there is between the latter and the selection of cities and towns for Government buildings. We get along very well with the Post Office Department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will remember that I said there were some things that must accompany the Government ownership and operation of railroads, One of those things is honesty, integrity in the public service of the United States, and another of them must be the elimination of some of the selfishness that is now exhibited everywhere throughout the country. In other words, I said that when the United States approaches this great undertaking, as it may approach it, we must approach it under such conditions that the vicious influences of politics will be entirely excluded, and so that the Government can carry on the transportation enterprise honestly and economically.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to interrupt the Senator but a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.
Mr. GALLINGER. When the Senator's most interesting speech was interrupted the Senator had made a statement that the high cost of living was largely dependent or considerably dependent upon transportation charges.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I did not. I said it was one of the causes that intervened between the producer and the consumer. Mr. GALLINGER. That is probably true; and yet I did not feel like letting it go into the RECORD that the high cost of living should be charged up to the transportation companies to any great extent. The Senator will remember-he is younger than I am—that it was not a great while ago when every rostrum in the country resounded with the cry that prices were too low and that they ought to be increased, and yet transportation at that time was a little higher than it is at present. So, while it may be one factor, it seems to me it is not one that we ought to place a great deal of emphasis on. There must be a great many other reasons.

Mr. CUMMINS. I asserted that it was one of the things that intervened between the producer and the consumer. Some things must intervene; transportation is one of them. service ought to be rendered at the lowest reasonable cost, and it ought to be rendered fairly, without discrimination, preference, or favor to all the people of the country.

I have said this-and I have drifted into this colleguy unintentionally-because I think we ought not to assume that the building of a railroad in Alaska by the Government and its operation by the Government contravenes any recognized principle of our institutions. On the contrary, in building it we simply fulfill an acknowledged, recognized function of organized society everywhere.

I have no doubt that this railroad could be built or would be built by private enterprise if we were to do for that enterprise what we have already done for enterprises of like character in the earlier days of the Republic. I asked the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] if he thought that that was so. The Senator has made himself very familiar with the resources and the wealth of Alaska. He has no doubt-there is not a Senator here who has any doubt-that if we would give to the Alaska & Northern Railway Co. or to the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co. the same proportion of the resources of Alaska that we gave to the four railroads which originally crossed my State from east to west, Alaska would be gridironed with railway lines within a very reasonable length of There were four great strips of that magnificent empire of agricultural land from 10 to 20 miles in width, alternate sections, given to the railway companies in order to induce them to build their lines across the State of Iowa. I am not criticizing it; I am not sure that the largess was too great, but I undertake to say that if the United States will give to either of these railway companies a bounty even approaching the magnitude proportionately that was given to these western railroads when they built from the Mississippi River toward the Pacific, we would have all the railroads in Alaska that its business demands or that its resources would warrant.

The only question is, Are you prepared to do it? Are you prepared to give to the Alaska Northern or the Copper River & Northwestern or any other railway company that proportion of the mines of Alaska, that proportion of the coal of Alaska, that proportion of the copper of Alaska, or that proportion of agriculture of Alaska which you formerly gave to the railroads which built the great lines in the western part of the country? We were not able to look into the future very far then, but, profiting by our experience, we are able to see more clearly the future of the great area of the Territory of Alaska. I think there is not a Senator here who is willing to give to a private enterprise that bounty which will be required if the railroad is to be built under auspices of that character. No men or body of men will build a railroad into Alaska unless they can fairly see a profit of 8 or 10 or 12 per cent arising out of the investment of their money. The Government can build a railroad there and pay for the capital only 3 per cent. If the railroad that we authorize to be built is built, and if the rates of freight are charged which would return an interest of 6 per cent upon the money required to construct the property, in less than 25 years the Government will have been repaid for every dollar that it has invested, and it will possess either for itself or for the Territory of Alaska or the State into which that Territory may some time merge the property it thus creates.

I do not see the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. CHAMBER-LAIN] here at this moment, but if I had my way about it there would be in the bill a provision that when the Government builds this road and equips it it shall in its operation, if the business will warrant it, charge rates of freight that will return 6 or 8 per cent upon the capital it has invested in the construction-after, of course, deducting the expense of operation-and that a sinking fund of not less than 3 or 4 per cent shall be laid aside, so that in the natural course of time, in 20 or 25 years, these bonds which we now propose to issue will be paid from the sinking fund thus created. That is a natural precaution which ought to be in the bill. I am sorry it is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield to me for a moment, I think he need not doubt that if the Government gets into the construction and operation of this railroad, judging by past efforts in like directions, it will make money out of it. For example, the Congress of the United States voted a million and eighty thousand dollars for constructing a cable line from Alaska down. Within six years, if I am correctly informed, the Government has collected the original amount plus $50,000 in charges, at 36 cents a word, whereas you can send a cable from Seattle to London for 28 cents a word. I imagine the Government will not fail to charge enough, whatever else happens.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope it will not fail to charge enough not only to pay the expense of operation but to create the sinking fund of which I have spoken. I think that is a fair business precaution to take.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If a corporation had replaced a capital of a million and eighty thousand dollars in six years, plus $50,000 additional, we would have called it a trust, a robber.

Mr. CUMMINS. What a private corporation would do, Mr. President, would be to create a sinking fund. It would then capitalize the sinking fund and multiply that by four or five times and expect the business of the Territory to bear this magnified burden.

But, Mr. President, I now desire to call attention to objections that I have to the bill as it is now framed. Earnestly as I am in favor of building a railroad in Alaska, I will not vote for the bill unless it be very materially amended. My objection to the bill is the vast, undefined, unlimited power that it proposes to confer upon the President of the United States. must be taken for granted that I am not making this objection because of the personality of the Chief Executive. I have as much confidence in him as I have in any man. I believe that he will serve, to the best of his judgment, the interests and welfare of the people according to the opinion that he holds of the particular subject under administration; but I am opposed to granting such power to any man under any circumstances at any time. I am opposed to the surrender to such extent of the legislative power of the Government to any Executive or administrator of law. The bill simply says that the President of the United States may take all the money that there may be in the Treasury at any time and use it for the purpose of building railroads in Alaska at any time and to any extent. Not only does it give the President the absolute authority over all the money in the Treasury at any time, but it gives him the power to obligate the United States to any amount for the construction of railroads in Alaska, to be located where he thinks they ought to be located, to be built at the time he thinks they ought to be built, and anywhere he thinks they ought to be built. It seems to me that this is so complete and utter a surrender-or, rather, abdication-of our legislative authority that it ought to shock every Senator who hears it suggested.

I ought to say, in justice to the Senator from Oregon IMr. CHAMBERLAIN], that he has advised me that the committee intends to propose certain amendments to the first section of the bill which will greatly and probably effectually limit the authority which the original measure proposed to give.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We intend to do that; and in this connection I wish to say we will propose an amendment to limit the amount either to be contracted for or to be expended. Mr. CUMMINS. The chairman has very kindly furnished me a copy of the amendment that he proposes to offer.

me a copy of the dimendment that he proposes to offer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. To the first section?

Mr. CUMMINS. To the first section. While the amendments proceed in the right direction they are not sufficient. They are not adequate. While they remove possibly the most fundamental objection I have to the bill, yet it seems to me that we ought to go further, and I hope that the Senate will adopt a substitute which I shall offer for the first section of the bill.

I have, fortunately or unfortunately, on account of the interruptions that I have suffered, reached the hour at which the offering of amendments is to begin, and, if I may be permitted to do so, I will now offer the amendment which I have heretofore proposed to section 1 of the substitute reported by the committee, and take the 15 minutes that are allotted to me under the unanimous-consent agreement for its discussion.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does any Senator, whether he has spoken before 4 o'clock or not, have a right to speak 15 minutes on the bill, beginning at 4 o'clock, and, in addition to that, to speak 15 minutes on any amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have proposed authorizes the President to acquire for the United States, by construction, purchase, or condemnation, one main line of railroad from the southern shore of Alaska to the interior, connecting with the navigable waters of either the Yukon, the Tanana, or the Kuskokwim. It also authorizes the President to locate this line of railroad. I would vastly prefer the exercise of the judgment of Congress upon that question, but I have been convinced that it will be impossible for Members of Congress to agree upon the location of a single line of railway, and rather than stand as an obstacle in the way of this very worthy enterprise I surrender my judgment upon that point, and in my amendment I grant to the President the authority to designate the route of the single line of road which he may select.

The amendment also provides that if any line of railroad now in existence is to form a part of the main line so to be acquired and operated by the Government, it shall be acquired before the work of construction begins upon the extension of any such line of road.

The truth is, Mr. President, that the bill as it was originally introduced was the result of the recommendation of the commission appointed, I think, by President Taft. It was the purpose of that commission, and it was the purpose of the person who drafted this bill, that the Government of the United States should take up the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad at its northern terminus, and the Alaska Northern at its northern terminus, and build both of them into the interior of Alaska, in that way connecting the Government railroads with privately owned rail-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rather infer from the report of the Alaska Railway Commission that they intended to do that; but that was not the intention of the framer of this bill or any member of the committee, I will say to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not speaking of the members of the Senate committee. I take it for granted that this bill originated elsewhere; I have been told so, though I may be wrong about it; but everything indicates it. The $35,000,000 that were originally provided for in the bill introduced in the other House, at any rate, is just the sum of money that the commissioners reckoned to be necessary to take up the Copper River & Northwestern and to build it on to Fairbanks and to take up the Alaska Northern and to build it on to the Kuskokwim. does not admit of any doubt; and I think the Senator from Oregon, and I think all Senators here, have conceded in the course of the debate that that was the real foundation of the appropriation originally asked for.

I do not want to leave any possibility of the President tak-ing up this work and building an extension of either of these railway lines, for, then, when we come to acquire either of them-and we shall have to acquire one or both, if we ever realize the advantages that are hoped for from this bill-by our construction we shall have added tremendous values that they do not now possess to these two lines that now begin upon the southern shore of Alaska and proceed a few miles into the interior, and we would be paying for property that our own money and our own enterprise had created. I know that in speaking these sentiments I am but echoing the view of the Senator from Oregon; I know that he does not desire any such outcome, and I am very glad, indeed, that the amendment which I have been told will be offered will eliminate this pos-If we build or buy a railroad in Alaska, we must besibility. gin at the seashore or buy from the seashore before we begin to build.

For myself I have given sufficient study to this subject to believe that the railroad which the Government ought to own in Alaska is a railroad which would begin at Resurrection Bay and be built up the valley to either the navigable waters of the Tanana or extended farther to the navigable waters of the Yukon. That is my judgment with regard to it; that was the judgment of the President of the United States who created the commission; that was the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior who investigated the subject by a personal visit to Alaska; but I am not seeking to impose my judgment upon the Senate or upon this bill. I am willing that the President shall select as between the available routes, but I do not believe that the President ought to be permitted to build more than one railroad at this time. We ought to begin the experiment-for it is an experiment; not so much experimental with regard to the power and ability of the Government to own and operate a railroad, but experimental with regard to the resources of Alaska and to the rapidity with which the business will be developed. I think we ought to build but one railroad, with whatever branches are necessary to reach particular re-Therefore, in my amendment I have provided-

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator permit me, before he proceeds further, to ask him whether his amendment would leave the President to take what we might call a main branch, which the committee has really considered as a main line of road from near Matanuska to Kuskokwim?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes; my amendment is so framed that if the President shall adopt the Alaska Northern route—that is, the route that reaches the Matanuska coal fields with a branchthen he can build an independent main line from the seashore to the Bering River coal fields. If, however, the other line is adopted, of course it will require a branch to reach the Matanuska fields. There is authority in my amendment for the building of that branch.

Mr. JONES. That was not the point I was getting at. Let us suppose the President should deem it advisable to also build, in addition to the line going up the Tanana or the Yukon, a line out to the Kuskokwim, would that be included within the discretion granted by the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I hardly think that the line to the Kuskokwim, that is shown upon the map that has been hanging in the Senate for several days, would be included within my amendment.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought; that was my impression

Mr. CUMMINS. It is practically a main line of itself.

Mr. JONES. I wanted to be sure of the Senator's purpose. Mr. CUMMINS. I really do not think that it would. I think the President, under my amendment, would have to choose between a point on the Kuskokwim and a point on the Tanana. Mr. JONES. That was my idea about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I so intended, because I think that we ought to part with just as little of our legislative authority as we can and accomplish the purpose that we have in view.

My amendment also provides that the President shall not in the execution of this authority spend more than the proceeds of the bonds—I think the amount of the bonds ought to be very materially reduced-nor obligate the United States to expend any further or greater sum.

I have now consumed the 15 minutes to which I am entitled under the agreement, and I desire, when it becomes proper, to have a vote on my amendment,

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to state that the bill has not yet been read, and I request that it be read, and afterwards that it be read for the purposes of committee amendments the committee amendments to be first acted on. I think that is usual. I prefer to have the bill perfected by the committee before other amendments are offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if I am mistaken in my recollection that the bill was read into the RECORD the other day

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think not, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LODGE. It has been printed in the Record. I think it was read into the Record, though I am not sure as to that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was read into the Record as a part of my address, or printed without reading.

Of course, then, the reading is not required Mr. LODGE. under the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has appeared in the RECORD and we have all had the bill before us for a long time. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, although I have offered the amendment of which I have just spoken, I think it is entirely appropriate for the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. on behalf of the committee, to perfect the bill before I have a vote on my amendment. Therefore, with the consent of the Senate, I withdraw my amendment for the time being, in order that the amendments of the committee may be voted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa need not be withdrawn, according to the ruling of the Chair heretofore made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, before voting on any of the amendments, I think, perhaps, we ought to have a quorum, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Bacon Borah Gore Gronna Hitchcock Nelson Simmons Newlands Norris Overman Smith, Ga. Smith, Md. Smith, Mich. Smith, S. C. Brandegee Perkins Poindexter Bristow Johnson Jones Kenyon Kern Smoot Sterling Bryan Burton Pomerene Ransdell Chamberlain Stone Stone Sutherland Thomas Thompson Vardaman Reed Robinson Roet Saulsbury Chilton Lane Clapp Lea Lippitt Ledge McCumber McLean Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Cummins Dillingham du Pont Fall Gallinger Shafroth Sheppard Sherman Shively Walsh Williams

Mr. BRYAN. My colleague [Mr. Fletcher] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I make this announcement for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President— The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator. Mr. NEWLANDS. With the permission of the Senator from Oregon, I ask leave to introduce a bill for the creation of an interstate trade commission, together with an accompanying paper, and ask that both be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement that is out of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It will only take a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the introduction of the bill, I will say to the Senator, but its introduction is absolutely contrary to our rules when operating under a unanimousconsent agreement. I think the Senator can introduce the bill just as well after the pending bill is acted upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order, Mr. President. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If it is going to lead to controversy and discussion, I will have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the Chair will rule that the introduction of the bill at this time is out of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I send to the Secretary's desk the first amendment proposed by the committee and ask that it be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oregon if it would not be well to have the discussion which is to ensue on the bill itself precede the offering of amendments? I have refrained from taking any time, but I should like 15 minutes. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burrow] also desires an opportunity to speak to the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know whether that could be done, if the Senator please, except after an amendment has been

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be offered, then, and can speak to the amendment just as well.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no disposition to prevent the Senator from New Hampshire, or any other Senator, from addressing the Senate on the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can speak ostensibly to the amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 1, on page 8, line 5, in the amendment proposed by the committee, after the words "directed to," and before the word "cause," it is proposed to insert "designate and," so as to read:

That the President of the United States hereby is authorized and directed to designate and cause to be located—

And so forth.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is simply the insertion of two words.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am a friend of the Territory of Alaska and will not be technical now or at any other time as to any reasonable appropriation for the development of that Territory. It has been stated that Alaska has given to the people of the United States something over $400,000,000 worth of products of various kinds, and the impression in some parts of the country has become a conviction that that amount is in return for the original investment that was made on Alaska and the expenditures which have been made in the Territory since that time. That, of course, is a mistake, which I need not stop for a moment to discuss. Whether or not the $400,000,000 that Alaska has produced have cost an equal amount to produce, or a greater or less amount, can only be ascertained by investigation, but it is certain that no part of it has gone into the Treasury of the United States. Since Alaska became a Territory, we have expended upon Alaska $35,816,674.25. The proceeds from Alaska which have gone into the Treasury of the United States have aggregated $17,117,354.75; so that we have expended upon Alaska $18,-699,319.50 more than we have received from Alaska.

As I have suggested, Mr. President, I am in favor of further liberal appropriations for Alaska whenever such appropriations may be needed. I recall the fact with some degree of humiliation that we have appropriated in the last two years $150,000 to test coal in Alaska; and, while a very considerable proportion of that amount has been expended—certainly the first $75,000 has been expended and the second $75,000 has been encroached upon-we have not yet secured a test of Alaskan coal that is satisfactory to anybody. Nobody knows how much money will be required to complete that test by the Govern-The tests which have been made would indicate that the coal is not of good quality for the purposes for which it is desired to use it.

Mr. President, great stress has been laid in this discussion of the feasibility of Government ownership and control of railroads on the fact that the Panama Canal has been built by the Government and that no one has found any fault with or made any criticism upon the method of construction or the amount of the expenditure. I have no disposition to make any criticism on either of those points, although it is a fact that those of us who voted for the canal originally were assured by eminent authorities, including engineers of the United States Army, that the cost would be $135,000,000, and it has already reached about $400,000,000 and the expenditures have not yet come to an end. It may be or it may not be that if a private construction company had had the resources of the Government of the United States at its back-unlimited money-the Panama Canal might have been built for a less amount than it has cost up to the present time. I find no argument to sustain the view that it might not have been constructed as economically and as well by private parties as by the Government of the United States.

I do not deny, Mr. President, the right of the Government to build railroads or to purchase existing railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, and operate them; but to me it seems inevitable that Government ownership will increase, rather than deerease, the cost of transportation. We have some illustrations at hand which seem to show that it costs more to do work by the Government than by private parties. It is a generally acknowledged fact-I have never heard it seriously disputedthat the private shipyards of this country build battleships and commercial ships at much less cost than they can be built for in the navy yards of the United States. That is to my mind a fair illustration of the fact that by properly conducted private enterprises ships can be constructed at a less amount than the Government of the United States can build them for.

Why, Mr. President, we have only to go to the Government Printing Office to illustrate the point I am making. A Senator delivers a speech on the floor of the Senate; it goes to the Printing Office and it is stereotyped; the plates are there ready to be put upon the press; and yet that Senator can go down to a private printing office in the city of Washington, have his speech put in type, and get a thousand or ten thousand or a hundred thousand copies of his speech printed for a much less amount than he can get it printed for at the Government Print-

Of course, these are small matters compared to the ownership and control of railroads, but they illustrate the point conclusively, that the Government, as a rule, is more expensive in the construction and operation of public utilities or any other enterprise than private parties.

It will be remembered that the distinguished ex-Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, himself a business man of great acumen and success, stated on the floor of the Senate on a certain memorable occasion that, in his opinion, if the business of this Government were placed in private hands it could be transacted at a saving to the Government of $300,000,000 a year. I thought at the time that the Senator from Rhode Island overstated the amount that could be saved, and I think so now; but, to my mind, it is beyond question that if the affairs of this great Government could be placed in the hands of enterprising business men and they had a free hand to conduct the business of the Government an enormous saving would be made to the people of the United States.

European railways under Government control do not present an alluring picture to Americans who have traveled on them. The Senator from Utah has called attention to what is happening in France under the Government ownership and control of railroads; and while Germany and possibly England have a better showing than that, it is a fact, undisputed and indisputable, that the service upon the railroads of Europe, Germany and England included, is infinitely inferior to the service that is given to the American people by the railroads of this country as they are now controlled by private corporations.

I am opposed to this bill, for the reason that it establishes Government ownership. I believe it will be a mistake. I believe it will result in great waste of the money of the people of the country. In my investigations thus far-and I have tried to make some careful and unprejudiced investigations-I have failed to find that any country that is undertaking to run railroads and telegraph and telephone lines is conducting the business as economically as it is being conducted in this country under private ownership.

In that view—and then I shall not discuss the bill any further—I desire to have read into the Record an editorial from the London Daily Mail of January 2, 1914, which was sent to me by a friend temporarily resident in Paris, as an illustration of the total failure of the great Empire of Great Britain in the matter of owning and operating telephone and telegraph lines in that country.

I ask that the editorial may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Why is it that Government ownership and management of the telephone is practically always a failure? Why is it that for every thousand Europeans there is only one telephone, while for every thousand Americans there are 15? Why is it that the country which has done most to Improve the telephone, both technically and commercially, and to popularize its use is the country in which its operation and development have been and still are exclusively the work of private enterprise? Why is it that not one of the innumerable discoveries that have transformed the telephone industry in the last 30 years has emanated from a department of state; that European Governments have been the last to adopt them, and that the verdict which experts are obliged to pass upon them, with perhaps two partial exceptions, is that they have not learned their business? Why is it that there are great and famous towns in Europe at this moment where methods and machinery that were abandoned 20 years ago in America are still in use? Why is it that throughout the length and breadth of Great Britain and the Continent hardly a single efficient long-distance service is to be found? Why is it that in New York one can invariably get the number one wants, and get it at once, while in London one has often to wage a prolonged and embittering battle with a slow operator, insufficient lines, and a conversation—if any conversation ensues—that is only audible when it is interrupted?

The broad answer to all these questions is that the alertness and enterprise that are essential to telephone development can not be expected from a Government department. The characteristics of the bureaucratic mind and temperament forbid it. The organization of a Government office, with a virtually irremovable staff, forbids it. In anrow professional outlook, its unwillingness to concentrate responsibility, its nessorible stilling of initiative, forbids it. A Government department can not raise and discipline its staff to the

Mr. GALLINGER. That is an object lesson that I think every Senator ought to take to heart. While I am opposed to Government ownership of railroads, in Alaska or elsewhere, I wish to go on record as being ready to vote any reasonable gratuity in any proper form to the Territory of Alaska that would enable private parties to construct necessary railroads and to establish other public utilities that would benefit the

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, what Alaska needs is a policy, not an appropriation; judicious land and mineral laws which shall be fair to the people of the Territory and shall subserve the interests of the whole United States, and not a railroad built at Government expense.

The passage of this bill at this time would be altogether premature, because the resources of Alaska are locked up as effectually as would be the case if steamship lines were forbidden to touch at her ports-at least, the resources which this bill proposes to develop—and neither Alaska nor any other country in the world could reach its fullest degree of development under such conditions as exist there.

In the year 1900 an act was passed authorizing the sale of coal lands at $10 to $20 an acre in tracts not to exceed 160 acres. This was followed in 1904 by another act authorizing surveys at the expense of the entryman. Railroads were projected and commenced. In 1906 two orders withdrawing coal it has increased, but I can give instances where it has kept lands were issued, but on May 28, 1908, an act was passed authorizing consolidation with a limit of 2,560 acres.

We are all familiar with the long drawn-out controversy as to the good faith of entries, but none of these tracts have been utilized for the furnishing of coal.

I desire to express myself at this time in favor of a policy of leasing lands which shall apply to mines of coal, to mines of iron ore if they are discovered, and possibly to mines of copper; also in favor of giving on timberlands, if valuable timberlands are discovered in Alaska, only the right to cut off the trees, the Government retaining the fee-simple title.

Some arguments have been made in the course of this discussion to the effect that methods which involved the leasing of lands had proved unsuccessful. The condition in our own country, including outlying possessions, affords the very strongest argument that can be offered anywhere for the policy of In the first place, we have the mistakes of the past. Much of the present tendency toward combination and monopoly is due to the possession of the most available sources of raw material, as in the case of iron ore. We have seen the forests which contain the best timber concentrated in the ownership of a very few persons.

I maintain, however, that this system has been very successful in other countries as well. A similar objection was raised when the leasing system was proposed with regard to coal lands in New Zealand and in the Australian States, such as New South Wales, Western Australia, Queensland, Victoria, New South Wales, Western Australia, Queensland, and Tasmania.

I will read briefly on this subject from a report by Mr. Secretary Fisher, which is printed as Bulletin No. 36 of the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines:

ment of the Interior, Bureau of Mines:

The coal lands in each of these countries have been taken up and are being developed and mined under the leasing system; and under that system coal is not only being mined for home consumption, but it is being exported to our own Pacific coast and to other countries bordering on the Pacific. The difficulties that stood in the way of leasing the coal lands in those countries were imaginary difficulties, and they disappeared when the matter was put to a practical test.

Again, in Nova Scotia, where the conditions for investment are even more unfavorable than they are in many parts of Alaska, those who were opposed to the adoption of a leasing system said that it would be impossible to lease public coal lands on any basis; but when the experiment was tried, parties came forward to take out the leases, and are operating the coal lands.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I should like to yield to the Senator from Idaho, but I wish to set forth a considerable amount of material, and 15 minutes is a very limited time.

Mr. BORAH. Then I will not interrupt the Senator; but if he has any literature as to the effect upon prices under a leasing system I wish he would read it to the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. I can give an argument right here and now on that point. Coal lands have been sold in Wyoming at from $200 to $400 an acre, and coal lands in other portions of the country for much more. Any reasonable rate for leasing would not impose a larger burden on the operator who mines the coal than the payment of so large a price.

If a lease is made at a reasonable price before the increased cost and value impose their burden on the operator, does the Senator from Idaho believe that will be worse than the of the land? There have been repeated instances in the United States in which coal lands which were worth $40 an acre 20 years ago are now selling for $1,000 or $1,500 per acre, or even The interest upon that and the necessity of obtaining a profit on the increased cost is more than should be imposed in a reasonable plan for leasing.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, you can take figures and speculate and prove anything in the world you want to prove if you are a good figurer, but the leasing system has been tried in a great many countries and experimented with in different ways. ask the Senator if he can point to a single instance where, as a practical fact, there has been any favorable reduction of price to the consumer under the leasing system? Has the leasing system benefited the people at large, the ultimate consumer? I have never been able to find any support of that proposition.

Mr. BURTON. Decidedly so. While I have not marshaled figures in this regard, the Senator from Idaho must realize that the price of coal has increased very greatly in recent years, partly because of the enhanced value of land and partly because of the greater cost of labor. I will ask him, on the other hand—though I do not wish to give him the opportunity in my own time-to give instances in which, under the leasing system, the cost has increased out of proportion to that which exists where there is private ownership.

Mr. BORAH. I can not give the Senator any cases where even pace with the man who owned the land, and never in a single instance have I been able to find that it has resulted in any benefit whatever to the consumer. They "gut" the mine; they destroy the mine. It sometimes pays a better revenue to the Government; but so far as the price is concerned, it has never benefited the consumer so far as I have been able to find. I want some evidence that the purchaser of coal or fuel is going to benefit. I do not want to simply build up a revenue for the Government.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Idaho is making a very broad statement, and he naturally confines his argument to general rules and principles. If there are some privately owned mines side by side with those leased by the State, it is almost inevitable that the price charged in the two shall by the same, because the price will be determined by the general average of cost to the two producers. If there is a mine where the owner holds his acreage at a thousand or two thousand dollars an acre, and side by side with that there is one owned by the State or the Government, where there is a certain rental of a few cents a ton, let us say 10 cents, the price of the two will be equalized; but the tendency is that which arises from all competition, namely, to put down the price. Otherwise, the arguments for competition are altogether futile.

I will read somewhat further on this subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I should prefer not to yield. I prefer not to depart from the general line of my argument for the whole 15 minutes, but I will yield to the Senator. Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the difference between selling Government lands and leasing Government lands is that in the one instance the State has the power of taxation and can maintain government over the land and in the other it has not, so that if it is to be a leasing system it unquestionably will be a detriment to the State. The very illustration the Senator makes of land in Wyoming selling at $400 an acre shows that. Is it right that county government, State government, and school government shall not have the right to get a single dollar out of that land at that high price which the land is estimated by the Government to be worth, and at which it is sold by the Government? Yet if you have the leasing system, that is the result it will have, whereas if you have the sale system the State gets the benefit of the taxation,

Mr. BURTON. The State has a right to establish such a system of taxation as will give it a revenue from lands whether owned or leased. I wish to say to both the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Idaho that there is a question involved here which is more important than cost and more important than taxation, and that is the danger of monopoly; the danger that coal lands or other lands or materials may so come into private ownership that these great necessities of life may be put beyond the reach of the people at a reasonable cost.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that in my State the very withdrawal of lands has brought about a monopoly in the companies that now own title to the lands and that our coals are selling now for $1 a ton more than formerly. That means a tax upon the people of my State of $10,000,000 every year, because that is the amount produced there. Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for the opinion of my friend from Colorado, but that would only be possible in case of mismanagement somewhere. If you have an amount of coal there that is disposed of under a leasing system at a reasonable price, there is no possible tendency in the system to raise the cost. It may be that the agents of the Government or of the State have withheld some of the best mines from use or in some way have pursued an injudicious policy, but it is not the policy that has made the price of coal higher. It is the method of administration. I quote further from this statement of Secretary Fisher:

I quote further from this statement of Secretary Fisher:
The statutes of Colorado, Montana, and Idaho provide for leasing
State lands containing stone, coal, coal oil, gas, or other mineral.
Colorado and Montana require a minimum royalty of 10 cents a ton for coal mined on such land. Montana prohibits the sale of its coal lands, but authorizes the lease of the surface for agricultural or grazing purposes. It also requires the locator of a mining claim for gold, silver, and other metals, at the expiration of one year from the date of the location, either to purchase the claim at $10 per acre or take a lease thereof at such price and upon such terms as may be agreed upon between him and the State board of land commissioners.
Idaho also authorizes leases of State land containing precious metals.

It goes further, as I understand, than coal. Mr. BORAH. If the Secretary of the Interior has found any marketable coal in Idaho, we should be very glad to have him point it out to us. There is no coal in Idaho except that which is hauled through the State on the Oregon Short Line Railroad or some other railroad.

Mr. BURTON. He does not say that. He says:

Idaho also authorizes leases of State land containing precious metals. Mr. BORAH. But what the Senator read just before that was that Idaho, Montana, and Colorado were leasing their coal

Mr. BURTON (reading):

The statutes of Colorado, Montana, and Idaho provide for leasing State lands containing stone, coal, coal oil, gas, or other mineral.

He refers there to the general statutes on the subject, rather than to any specific mineral.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the leasing of coal land in the State of Colorado has been very unsatisfactory. I want to say, further, that there is a great difference between the State leasing and the United States Government leasing, because of the fact that if any revenue or profit is derived by the State it is given directly to the county and to the school district where the land is located, or, at least, it is divided among the schools, and as sections 16 and 36 are scattered all over the State equally it is an equal distribution; but it does not turn out in that way when the Government does it, because it is exempt from taxation.

Mr. BURTON. Of course, in addition to all that, it is especially unsatisfactory to those who desire to obtain these lands and obtain a monopoly of the coal trade and obtain the highest prices possible for the coal.

I ask unanimous consent to add some further extracts, as I shall not have time to read them. While I am making the request, I should like also to add some material, which probably I shall not have time to read, in regard to agricultural lands and agricultural production in Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have no insuperable objection to Government ownership as such. The advantage of private management is that it is more alert; that it evokes the more eager efforts of those who are engaged in the enterprises involved; that it is less subject to favoritism and political influence, and that it squares more thoroughly with the developments and methods of modern business life.

I have been somewhat familiar with railway systems which are under Government management in other countries. In the first place, in most of them they have a very elaborate system of civil service. There is a system of promotion, say, after service in the army. It may be added, though I do not know whether that makes the argument stronger or weaker, that a sufficient number of employees are more readily obtained and wages are less. Those in control are less progressive and respond much more slowly to the complaints of the public. Requests for enlargement and betterment of the service are less exacting. Not only, however, are the conditions more favorable for Government ownership where it prevails, as in Italy, Germany, and Austria-Hungary, but the service is not so good as it is in the United States and in Great Britain, where there is private ownership.

That we may come to a larger measure of public ownership and management at some time I do not deny; but I think it will not be until there is an absolute change in the efficiency of the administration of municipal, State, and National Government, and until promotion is made strictly in accordance with merit. The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not regard a vote for this bill as committing one in any way to the proposal of general Government ownership of railroads. I think the situation of Alaska is peculiar. It has great natural undeveloped wealth, and the development of that wealth depends upon a proper system of transportation.

It is the duty of the Government, as the owner of the Territory, as a governmental matter, to open up roads of some kind. If the Government embarks upon that enterprise the roads should be of the best kind to meet the end desired. It is absolutely essential that transportation, not only of people but of commodities, should be promoted. In order to develop these resources and to transport the products of the Territory, it will be essential to have roads of moderate grade.

The roads, therefore, should be either macadamized roads of moderate grade and of the highest standard or roads of steel. In the evolution of transportation, I regard a steel road as occupying the same status in the economics of the Government as a dirt road occupied 50 years ago and as a macadamized road of the highest standard occupies now.

In order to secure the proper grades and the proper construction a macadamized road will cost almost as much as a steel road, or possibly quite as much. As the steel road will be much more efficient, I favor the construction of the latter; and therefore I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, reference has been made to the cost of the Panama Canal. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] correctly stated that the first estimate of its cost was $135,000,000, but he failed to state that that estimate was based upon an entirely different canal from the one we are constructing. That was to be a lock canal with a depth of 35 feet, and the locks were to be very much smaller than the locks we have constructed. The estimate as to the cost of the present canal was, as I remember, about $375,000,000 after the commission determined the kind of canal that it was necessary to construct in order to meet the demands of modern commerce.

The canal we are now constructing is 42 feet deep and very much wider than the canal first suggested. The locks are 1,000 feet long and 110 feet wide, which is very much larger, indeed, than those that were originally designed. We have not expended $400,000,000, as was suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, but only about $330,000,000 at present. It is estimated that less than $400,000,000 will complete the canal, and that the estimate which was made as to the cost of the construction of the canal as now designed is approximately accurate. So I do not think the objection that we do not know what the cost will be or that it will be much more than is contemplated is justified.

Of course I am in harmony with the amendment that will be offered by the chairman of the committee limiting the amount to be expended and fixing the limit upon the mileage.

So far as Government ownership is concerned, I am somewhat surprised that so many Senators seem to view with alarm this proposed construction of railways in Alaska. If Government ownership is as unwise as it is believed to be by a number of Senators who have discussed the matter, then it will be demonstrated to be unwise by this Alaskan experiment, and instead of opposing it, if they are confident in their theories, they ought to favor it, because certainly if it prove a failure it will be a conclusive argument against any further experiment along that line.

I am not ready to say that I am in favor of the Government acquiring the railroads of the United States and operating them. Indeed, I would oppose the operation of the railroads by the Government. I am not certain that I would not favor acquiring the railroads at a reasonable price. The Mexican Government, before the revolution which destroyed the administration of President Diaz, owned a railroad across the Tehuantepec Isthmus, something over 200 miles long, and it was operated under a partnership between the Government and an English company, and operated with success. That was a Government-owned road operated under a partnership contract. Its officers were in no way officials of the Mexican Government.

Then our own experience in the management of the Panama Railroad and the Panama Steamship Line demonstrates that Government ownership is not a menace. That has been operated by a corporation, the Government owning the stock, and no criticism has been offered here against the administration of the affairs of the Panama Railroad in the 10 years that we have

It seems to me that we owe it to ourselves to open up the resources of Alaska, and this is the first step. Complaint has been made because we have not taken other steps at the same time that we are taking the first. It is not necessary to go further now. The other steps will inevitably follow. If we can construct a railroad into the interior of Alaska and open up its wealth, it certainly is a good thing to do.

I shall make some suggestions later on as to the best method. in my opinion, for the operation of this road when it has been constructed, but it seems to me that it is the best way possible for us to determine whether or not we desire to take any further steps along the line of acquiring the great commercial highways which govern and control the commercial development of our country. In going into this Territory, and without any competition acquiring the ineffective and inefficient roads that are there, and providing some means of developing the coal, we are experimenting, if you please, with Government ownership and Government operation, and working out a better method than that which we now have. It seems to me that it is impossible for us to defend the organization of the great fuel resources such as have been acquired by the transportation companies in continental United States, especially in the State of Pennsylvania; and we owe it to the people of the United States to see if we can not find a better way of utilizing this natural wealth than that which we have developed in our own commercial affairs.

So I shall most heartily support the measure, and I believe with the amendments that are to be suggested by the committee the bill is very much improved and will be very desirable legislation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I feel that I should on my own account say just a word or two before this measure is disposed of. I am on record in the Senate and outside the Senate on several occasions, where I put myself on record in public speech, against the Government ownership of railroads in the United States. I am not going now to state the reasons for the belief that it would be unwise, impolitic, and even dangerous to the stability of our governmental institutions to put the vast transportation companies of the United States into Government ownership and control. I can not look with favor upon a policy of that kind; and yet I am disposed to support the measure now before the Senate.

Alaska is a vast country in area, and it has great possibilities in agriculture, in minerals, and in other sources of wealth. Development is the one crying need in Alaska. Opportunity to reach the sources of wealth that they may be developed is a great commanding necessity in that vast empire of ours. As I understand it, practically the whole of Alaska is in the ownership of the United States, the property of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator a question there? If practically all of Alaska is in the ownership of the United States Government and in its ownership as trustee for the benefit of the entire people of the United States, including New York, Missouri, and Mississippi, can the Senator differentiate between voting money out of the Public Treasury derived from the sale of lands belonging to the people for the building of railroads in Alaska from a like proposition for the building of railroads in Missouri or Mississippi?

Mr. STONE. I think I can differentiate to my own satisfaction between the two propositions stated by the Senator from Mississippi. Granted that Alaska is in the possession of the Government and that this great property of the whole people of the United States is to be administered by it, still it becomes the duty of the United States Government as trustee to so manage this great estate of the people and the Government as to make it profitable where now it is wholly unprofitable, and to make it useful where now it is not useful.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, if the Senator will pardon me, does he mean profitable to the people of Alaska or profitable to the people of the United States?

Mr. STONE. I speak of the whole people. I think it is to be made profitable to the whole people of the United States. I think, Mr. President, that you can open up and develop Alaska in its agriculture and in its coal and in its gold and in its useful metals. Those products will be brought into the United States and enter into our consumption and uses for the benefit of the entire people. If we have this vast estate of the people of the United States in the hands of our Government as trustee, I repeat, I think it is within the province and a part of the duty of the United States to develop it so as to put it to useful ends, so that it will be a source of advantage to the country. The properties of Alaska in private ownership, the possessions held by private individuals or corporations are infinitesimal in extent or value as compared with the vast aggregate which belongs to the people of the whole country.

Mr. President, I think this great trustee spoken of by the Senator from Mississippi, the Government of the United States, can construct roads into and through and across Alaska so that the people of all the States of the Union may find access to its available wealth and contribute to its development, for in doing this the United States is merely improving its own property, its own estate. I think there is a very wide difference between that and the Government undertaking to construct a line of railroad from Washington to some distant point like Seattle or San Francisco or out to St Louis or Chicago. The purpose there would be necessarily not to develop any estate belonging to the Government or the people, but for transportation purposes, to open up competition with established lines of transportation, or something of that kind, which, I think, is outside the province of the Federal Government, and besides is full of danger to the well-being of our people and of our Government. The things are wholly different.

I am disposed because of this wide difference between the two things to give my support to the bill before the Senate authorizing the governmental construction of a railroad in Alaska when I would certainly oppose the construction by the Government of a line of transportation in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say a few words especially to this side of the Chamber. The Democratic Party has just gone into power, and among other things that it has promised is an economical administration of the Government of the United States, as economical as possible consonant with efficiency and consonant with progressive legislation,

Here is a bill to devote $40,000,000-four-fifths of the entire income tax of the United States-to one outlying and poor and unpopulated Territory. If that is the march of economical progress you are going to start upon, where are you going to stop, and when and how are you going to avoid increasing either tariff taxes or income taxes in this country?

I know that in this bill it is covered up, that it is proposed to issue bonds to do it; that you shall tax posterity upon the general principle that "posterity never did anything for you, and therefore you do not need to do anything for posterity." If you are going to pay out money, it ought to be paid out of the money now on deposit in the national banks to the credit of the United States Government. No sensible, sane individual who wanted to spend $40,000,000 and had the $40,000,000 lying in hand would go out and borrow it and pay interest for it. The sole object of the bond provision is to conceal the cost from the present generation-to cover it up and hide it and fool the American people. So much for that branch of the question.

Suppose you pass this bill to give $40,000,000 to construct railways in Alaska, and you go back to Georgia, to Virginia, to Indiana, to New Hampshire, to Utah, to Mississippi, and the people there say to you, "You have given $40,000,000 to about half a million people in Alaska to build for them transportation

Mr. BACON. There are only 30,000 white people in the

Mr. WILLIAMS. Take the Eskimos, the Russians, and all. and make it half a million, and let it go at that. am told, about 30,000 white people up there, but I do not want to encounter any race prejudice; I have encountered enough of that. [Laughter.] Here is a State with a million and a half population; here is a State with two millions; here is a State with three millions; here is a State that wants to get a railroad from the Mississippi River to the coal fields of Alabama; here is another State that wants to get from the Mississippi River with a railroad to the ranches of Texas; here is a State that wants to get from tidewater upon the Atlantic to the coal

Their people say, "You have voted $40,000,000 for 500,000 suppositions population, then why can you not give us $2,000,000 to build this little bit of a railroad?" What is your answer going to be? "Alaska is Alaska, and you are you." "Alaska is undeveloped." So was Mississippi once undeveloped; and it is a historic fact that the United States Government never sent even one company of regular soldiers to enable her to develop herself, while she was sending them to the Northwest all the time. Their reply is, "When we were in that condition you did not develop our resources out of the Treasury, and why should you develop Alaska?" Then your answer to that is, "Alaska can not be developed unless we do help her." Then your further reply is, "This is funded upon Alaskan resources"; but the reply to that is what I intimated a moment ago in my interruption of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], that the property owned by the United States Government in Alaska is not the property of Alaska at all, and never was, but it is the property of the people of the United States-paid for out of the Treasury by them-and the Government of the United States holds it only as a trustee. If you can mortgage the property of Alaska to build railroads in Alaska, you can mortgage the same property to build railroads in Mississippi. If you are going into the general business of building railroads, all right; let us have the fight squarely and honestly before us. Do not sneak it in by the Territorial route. If you want to build railroads at the expense of all the people, Mississippi wants her share of them; she needs them; and she could consume profitably in the way of railroad construction not only $40,000,000, but $200,000,000, if you will let her have it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that the Government of the United States did assist Mississippi to the extent of 406 miles of railway by a grant to the State or to corporations within the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; by land grants; and I am perfectly willing now for the Federal Government to secure the interest on bonds for a limited period of time to build railroads in Alaska; I am perfectly willing now to deed alternate sections of land in Alaska for the building of a railroad, as was done in other Territories; I am perfectly willing to do anything that was ever done by a precedent established in this country to help Alaska; but I am not willing to establish the new precedent of Government construction and ownership and possible operation of railroads.

Where are you going to stop when you start out into this sort of thing? O Senators, I ask you where you are going to stop? Suppose I were to introduce a bill next week with a preamble reciting that "Whereas the Federal Government is charged with the duty of providing for the Navy and Army, and "Whereas clothes are by law necessary to be worn by sailors and soldiers," "Therefore be it enacted that the United States Government erect a certain number of sweatshops for the purpose of producing clothing for the Army and Navy." I again ask, Where are you going to stop? Where is the ultima ratio? To what point does the reductio ad absurdum lead? Is there any stopping place at all? Is there anything that does not connect itself somehow, directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely, by false or pretended construction with some grant in the Federal Constitution?

I am not contending that this legislation is unconstitutional; it is perfectly constitutional, because Congress has not only absolutely legislative but absolutely aldermanic power over the Territory of Alaska. Here are Democrats who 20 years ago were fighting populites all over this country when the populites were demanding Government ownership of railroads. fought them in Mississippi on every hilltop and down in every shadow of every valley, and we whipped them to a finish, because we fought them in the open. Now, here are Democrats standing around and wanting to do just what the populites then asked, wanting to turn this Government over to State socialism-not the socialism of Marx, not the socialism of the French socialists, in which there is some reason, but State socialismupon the theory that a State can manage transportation, industry, manufacturing, and other things better than they can be managed by private enterprise.

You built your cable line up in Alaska; you built it upon the theory that the Army and the Navy and the Government and the people needed it. I do not know whether I am correctly informed; but if I am incorrectly informed, I shall subsequently correct it. I have corresponded with the Signal and have not yet got a reply; but I am informed that while we appropriated $1,080,000 to construct that cable line six years ago we have within that six years collected back the entire cost of construction plus $50,000, and that meanwhile the United States Government has had all of its business free. If a private corporation had charged 36 cents a word, which is what that cable company has charged for that service, from Seattle up to Alaska, when you can get a cable message through, as I am informed, from Seattle to London for 28 cents a word, and had recouped a million of principal plus $50,000 in six years, this country would have risen up on its toes in indignation against the exploitation of that monopoly.

This railroad is either going to be profitable or it is going to be unprofitable—one of the two—there is no escape from that. If it is profitable, it is to be made profitable at the expense of all the people of the United States and of private railroad enterprise in Alaska, because the private railroads must pay $100 per mile per annum tax, while this, being a Government institution, will pay nothing. The tax alone would give it a very good competitive profit. Suppose it is unprofitable, upon the other side, where is the money coming from? It is coming from the people of Arizona, from the people of Mississippi, of South Carolina, of Nevada, and of the remainder of this country.

The revenue in the Treasury does not fall, like manna, by the will of God from heaven. There never yet was a dollar in the Treasury that was not taken out of some citizen's pocket in order that it should be placed there. What right have you to tax my constituents in the State of Mississippi $40,000,000 to build a railroad in Alaska when you are not willing to tax the people of Alaska their share of what they pay into the Treasury in order to build for the people of Mississippi $40,000,000 worth of railroads? Are you going to answer me by saying that the lands up there belong to the Government? They do not, except as a trustee. They belong to me in Mississippi; they belong to you in New Hampshire; they belong to you in Utah and to you in New York. And the money in the Treasury, to whom does it belong? Does it belong to the Government? No; except as a trustee. It belongs to the same people all over this

Oh, for the great Democratic Party, the party of Thomas Jefferson, the party of individual enterprise, the party whose corner stone was that the most sacred thing in the world was the individual and individual enterprise, the party which believed that government was organized solely for the purpose of preventing depredations by one individual upon another and that all that was necessary for government to do was to see to it that every man had a fair field and equal opportunity. It seems strange to me that a party founded upon that principle should propose to go out and engage in the operation of private enterprises. There is just one exception. When a private enterprise is necessary for naval or army defense, then it is all right to acquire it. If you find that you can not keep your Navy up to the right stretch without manufacturing armor plate, all right; if you find you can not keep your Army up to the right stretch without manufacturing rifles or gunpowder, all right. Self-defense with a nation, as with a man, is the supreme law; but there is no other excuse for it in the world.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not I ought to reply to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], but I feel impelled to say something in answer to the suggestion which he has made that this bill is intended to conceal something. That is absolutely unfounded by any part of the record.

The Senator complains that Alaska is here before the Congress of the country asking for an appropriation to increase its transportation facilities. It seems to me that that plea comes with poorer grace from the Senator from Mississippi than it could come from the mouth of any other Senator in this body. As a matter of fact, the people of his section of the country have demanded and have received at the hands of Congress and the people of the United States have assented to its actionmillions of dollars for the improvement of the Mississippi River. What was the purpose of that expenditure? It was for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Mississippi River, a Government waterway or transportation line, if you please. only that, but the people along the Ohio have petitioned Congress for large appropriations to aid in the development of transportation-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not be interrupted now.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I was only going to say that we never wanted to operate the Mississippi River as a private and local

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am going to show what you do operate before I get through.

They have not only asked that, but the people along the upper Ohio have appeared before the Congress of the United States year in and year out asking for large appropriations, which Congress has given them, for the benefit of the transportation facilities of the upper Mississippi River, in order to enable the people of Mississippi, of Louisiana, and all along the Mississippi River, to receive coal from West Virginia and the upper stretches of the Ohio River, and to aid the people of the lower Mississippi Valley to regulate transportation charges by rail. Not only that, Mr. President, but after we have appropriated money—and I have never opposed it; I believe in assisting the people along the Mississippi River to improve navigation and to regulate the rates by rail—but after Congress has made these appropriations, if you please, and after levees have been built to keep the Mississippi River within its channel, then. for sooth, there come back the same people and demand money, not for the purpose of improving the channel, but to pay the people on the other side of the river, whose lands have been washed away by the very improvements which Congress has made at the request of the people of that country. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that not very long ago he introduced a bill, the terms of which I do not exactly remember, but which was intended to appropriate large sums of money for the purpose of reclaiming the lands down there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think I can find the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was to pay back the price of their land to the people who had been ruined by the operations of the Federal engineers, whose land had been totally destroyed by being put into the channel of the Mississippi River.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Ruined, Mr. President, if you please, because Congress had appropriated money to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, and these improvements resulted in changing the channel of the river and washing out the lands on the opposite side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know something about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The lands were ruined because the levees were not built on that strip as they were built in other places, and that strip was thus dedicated to the public use without compensation—virtually condemned, without its share of levee construction and without legal condemnation, to the bed of the

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I happen to know something about it. I was born in Mississippi. I have stood on the banks of the river at Natchez, Miss., and looked across a river 40 miles wide.

Not only that, but I have walked along the levees, if you please, and seen that those levees have changed the channel of the Mississippi River and washed out the lands on the other side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has nothing to do with my bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has a good deal to do with this

Mr. WILLIAMS. My bill would pay riparian landowners in that stretch of country where the Government had not built levees for the overflows which the lack of levees had caused, thereby confiscating the lands of riparian owners in the Natchez

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know about the demands which have been made by the people of your State, and my native State, for improving the Mississippi River in order to improve the transportation of that country and to regulate freight rates. exactly what Alaska is doing. She is asking not for a gift, but she is asking to borrow $40,000,000 for the purpose of improving that country and regulating the freight rates that are charged by transportation companies in Alaska. So that the charge, Mr. President, that there is something furtive, something concealed, in this bill, something put in it to deceive the people of this country, comes with very poor grace from the Senator from Mississippi

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will never be repaid. Why do you not appropriate the money out of the Treasury, instead of issuing

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Those people are not here as mendicants; they are not here asking any charity; they are simply asking to do what is frequently done here, and that is to borrow on the credit of the United States a sum which Alaska proposes to pay back. Do you pay back the moneys which we give you every year to improve your streams?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Everybody knows that it is the business of the United States Government to improve rivers and harbors.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no doubt about that, and never has been.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It just depends on whose ox is gored.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; it does not. The States are not even permitted to interfere, however beneficially, with interstate water transportation.

Mr. CHAMBERIAIN. We are simply asking what the Senator has always asked, with this distinction and this difference: We are asking that you lend Alaska the credit of the United States for $40,000,000, promising to pay you back every cent of it out of the resources of Alaska. What we give the Mississippi, what we give the Ohio River, what we give the other great waterways of this country, is absolutey sunk, and not only sunk, Mr. President, but after we have improved them and damage is done to the people along the way, you come back to us and ask us to pay that as well as to improve your waterways.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not give it to us. It is a part of your duty as a Federal Government to provide for rivers and harbors

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I resent the insinuation which the Senator has made, that there is something secret, something concealed, some ulterior purpose lurking in the provisions of this bill; that it is an attempt upon the part of the people of the Northwest to get their hands into the Treasury of the United Alaska belongs to the people of the country; it belongs to all the people of this country, and we of the Northwest insist that we are entitled to have the same benefits from the development of that great country that the people of the State of my friend the Senator from Mississippi have derived from the improvement of the great waterway bordering Mississippi on

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is not a waterway bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a transportation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; and so is my walking from here to Pennsylvania Avenue transportation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And so is steamboating on the Mississippi River.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and so is a dugout going through the Chapola; but the two things have nothing to do with one another.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have improved the Chapola and good many other streams.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chapola is a fictitious stream, and a name which I just invented.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that every man who has been inclined to favor this bill has been, directly or indirectly, accused of violating the fundamental principles of the Government, and outraging the memory of Thomas Jefferson, and being otherwise concerned in doing violence to common sense and reason and good government, I should say nothing upon this bill; but for just about five minutes I should like to talk upon it.

It is a strange time in the history of our country to declare that a public highway is a private enterprise. There is not a hundred miles of railway in the United States that is in any sense of the term a private enterprise. There is not a railway of any length in the country that did not obtain its right to exist because it was a public enterprise and because it was a public highway.

We have granted to all of these railways the use of one of the highest functions of government, that of eminent domain; or, to state it more accurately, we have exercised on their behalf the right of eminent domain, upon the principle that railways are public highways. They are as much public highways in law as the streets of this city, the highways of the country, or the boulevards that lead from one town to another. It is only because they are public highways, so recognized in law, that they are permitted to take the property of the citizen and condemn it and utilize it for railway purposes

Therefore, when any man stands upon the floor of the Senate of the United States and declares that this bill is an invasion of private rights he talks in a language that, I am afraid, I could not characterize justly without using unparliamentary expressions.

We were told here the other day by one Senator that if the Government built these railroads, they would be run at a loss and that nothing can be done by the Government as cheaply as it is done by private citizens. Mr. President, I might grant that nothing can be done by a government as cheaply as it can be done by a private citizen, although I do not grant it; but, for the moment conceding it, I have this to say to the Senator who advanced the argument:

While in a great many instances a private citizen can do work cheaper than the Government, as a matter of fact the public-service corporations of this country do not do work half as cheaply, in many instances, as the Government of the United States or the government of a State or the government of a city could do it.

The reason can be easily ascertained. If you will turn to the spectacle of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co., which was recently capitalized fraudulently and wrong-fully for five or six times its actual value, stocks and bonds being issued upon which the road was expected to pay interest and dividends, and that interest and dividend charge being again shifted upon the people who pay transportation rates upon the road, you will have the reason why a public ownership can be a cheaper ownership and a more economical ownership not than private ownership might be but than private ownership is.

I can go over the cities of the United States where waterworks plants were owned by private concerns and point to the rates they exacted from the public, the interest and dividends they paid upon fraudulent stocks and bonds, and I can compare that charge with the charges that are paid under municipal ownership, and I can demonstrate from almost every city in the United States that public ownership has brought a less rate, a more economical management, less stealing, less peculation, and less fraud in practically every instance than existed under private ownership.

We have been told, too, upon the floor of the Senate in the last few days that a railroad in Alaska never could pay, that the public in the end would be taxed, and that the money would be wasted. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for one illustration he gave us in his very recent remarks. He tells us that we laid a cable to Alaska, and that we have actually paid for the cable, and that we have actually laid aside a profit, and that we still own it. I put that up against the fears of the gentlemen who say that if we build these railroads they will be run at a loss, as an example demonstrating that we can use business principles and follow business ideas in the management of these great concerns. If our rates have been too high, it is easy enough to cause them to be lowered; but, high as they have been. I undertake to say that they have been lower than they would have been had that cable been laid by private enterprise and run by a private monopoly. The fact that cable rates may be less across the ocean to England argues nothing, because of the immense business that is transacted over those lines, whereas the lines to Alaska are of course more limited in their

I am surprised, too, that the shade of Thomas Jefferson should once more be invoked, especially upon the proposition that it is undemocratic for the Government of the United States to promote the building of highways, for if there was one dream that was dear to the heart of Thomas Jefferson it was the construction of great public highways across this country. In the Constitution of the United States we reserved the right of the Government to establish post offices and post roads, and in the very dawn of this Republic we had begun building public highways. They were then public highways that did not have steel rails laid upon them. They were public highways that were only macadamized or only planked, but they were the highest kind of highways known to the people at that time, and they differed in principle not one whit from the highway that has rails laid upon it, and over which the rolling stock of a railroad runs every day.

That is all I wish to say, Mr. President; but when any man stands in the Senate of the United States and denounces Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the Senate of the United States and Demostands in the United crats because they believe that a public highway can be properly owned by the people of the United States, he is arguing from a false premise to a still more false conclusion.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a number of Senators have requested that they be not detained here later than 6 o'clock. As there is nothing pressing before the Senate except this bill-I mean, it is not taking the right of way of any other important measure-I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada. Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to introduce a bill.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that no other business than the Alaska railroad bill is in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, unfortunately, is compelled to rule that if there is an objection nothing can intervene until the unanimous-consent agreement is out of the way.

There is an objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move, then, that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 23, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer: God of the universe, Father of all souls, open Thou our minds and hearts, that we may be wise in our thoughts, quick to conceive, strong to act in accordance with our convictions; that we be profitable servants unto Thee and unto our fellow men, and thus fulfill our appointed mission, satisfy our conscience, and feel the thrill of Thine everlasting approval. In His name. Amen. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 337 (H. Rept. 182).

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 500 copies of the decision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, affirmed by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, in the Grace Cox Indian inheritance case construing the act of June 25, 1910.

The resolution was agreed to.

PURIFICATION OF PUBLIC WATER SUPPLIES.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends up another privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 384 (H. Rept. 183).

Resolved, That there be printed 11,500 copies of House Document No. 1236, Sixty-second Congress, entitled "The Purification of Public Water Supplies."

The resolution was agreed to.

PROBATE RULES, FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some rules and regulations made at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who visited the State of Oklahoma during the first week in January and secured from the county judges of the Five Civilized Tribes' portion of the State an agreement to a set of rules which are the equal of any rules governing probate courts to be found anywhere, and which we are sure will eliminate much of the frauds in the probating of Indian estates.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have it printed in the RECORD or as a document?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. As a document. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mur-RAY] asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document certain rules, regulations, and so forth, promulgated by the committee that was in Oklahoma a short time ago investigating Indian affairs.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is not a pleasant duty for me to interpose objections to frequent requests for the printing of matters in the RECORD or elsewhere, but I am going to ask my friend from Oklahoma if he will not permit his request to take its regular course through the Printing Committee as a resolution? We can meet any day and give him a hearing, and we would very much prefer that it be done in that way. The custom of asking unanimous consent to print all sorts of public documents is wholly contrary to the procedure of the House in other matters. The Printing Committee is on the job every day, and the gentleman from Oklahoma can have a hearing as soon as he wishes it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. BARNHART.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. These resolutions go to the heart of almost a national evil, or at least a national evil repute alleged to have existed through the Indian country. It has gone all over the country that great frauds have been practiced in our State, and we must in truth say they have; and certainly this Government is interested to the extent of promulgating rules that, at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, have been adopted readily by our judges. This request is that those rules may be put into a document, so that these judges may send them to all of the probate attorneys and all of the guardians of these estates.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma will be granted. There is in that State, I presume, $100,000,000 worth of property going to heirs, and these rules will tend very much to the settlement of these estates.

It would be impossible for the judges to act intelligently on a motion made before them on these rules unless they have the rules printed in some way. It will reach them much quicker this way than in any other, and it would be authoritative also. The commissioner was before our committee, which is now engaged in making up the annual Indian appropriation bill, and the statement was explicit that the rules are necessary, and especially so for the benefit of the judges in that country

If the gentleman will yield, with the Mr. BARNHART. permission of the gentleman from Oklahoma, I want to ask what objection could the gentleman from Texas have to a resolution taking the regular course, as the one which we reported for the gentleman from Texas? Certainly, he would have no objection to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only that in this way it would reach Oklahoma a few days earlier.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I think for the present I will object.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request to print it as a public document, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I shall object to that. Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If the Government can not pay for the work, I will.

Mr. BARNHART. It is not a question of whether the Government can pay for the work. If the gentleman will introduce the resolution and let it take its regular course, the Committee on Printing will give a hearing to the gentleman to-morrow morning, and it may be reported. At the present I insist that it shall take its regular course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. BARNHART. I object.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Fess, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James B. Mulford (H. R. 3357, 59th Cong., 1st sess., and H. R. 18180, 62d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11338).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Hay in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, the title to which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. At the close of the consideration of the bill on Tuesday last, the gentleman from Tennessee offered an amendment, to which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] reserved a point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment, because of the omission in the printed words leaving out the words "post-office inspector." to amend the amendment by adding those words after the words Railway Mail Service."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment by inserting the words "post-office inspector" after the words "Railway Mail Serv-

Is there objection?

Mr. GOULDEN. May we have the amendment read? The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I will offer in place of that amendment another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his request?

I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12, insert the following: "That hereafter the Postmaster General shall have authority to employ acting employees in place of all employees or substitutes hereinafter mentioned who are injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the employee's salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and to enable the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives, for the benefit of those dependent on him for support, of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Railway Mall Service, post-office inspector, letter carrier in the City Delivery Service, rural letter carrier, post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger who shall be killed while on duty, or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of pointing out to the House what appears to me to be a very ragged and unscientific way of legislating on this question. As a member of the Committee on Claims I have had a good deal of experience along this line of compensation. It might be of interest to the House to know—and of course the House does know, but I wish to call it to its attention—that we have a general statute enacted, I believe, in 1908 providing for the compensation of beneficiaries of certain employees who are in the Government service in Panama, for instance, and in certain hazardous occupations. The rule laid down in the general statute that we now have is to pay the family of the person killed in the service an amount equal to a year's salary of the deceased. This proposition in this bill would be not to pay a year's salary, but $2,000. The Committee on Claims, of which I happen to be a member, is constantly confronted with the proposition of claims from different departments of employees of the Government who are injured in the service. It does seem to me that if we are to legislate upon this question at all it should be done by a general statute covering all of the employees of the Government and fixing a uniform rule and a standardized compensation for those who are injured in the service. It is inequitable that one statute should give a year's pay and that another should give a minimum of $2,000, that one general statute should provide for no compensation for a year or two years after injury, and that another statute should provide for full pay for a year and 50 per cent for the second year, and all the while the Committee on Claims is selecting some cases to be paid and others not to be paid. There is necessarily a general confusion all along the line in satisfying the demands of those who have claims against the .Government on account of injuries received while in the Government service.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Does the statute to which the gentleman refers make any provision for an employee who is injured and whose injury results in total disability?

Mr. DIES. I do not believe so.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it does—a year's pay.

Mr. DIES. I have not had the statute before me in several months, and I do not recall, but my impression was that it provided only for a year's pay when death resulted.

Mr. MANN. No; it provides a year's pay if they are not able to perform duty.

Mr. DIES. The thing which I wish to call to the attention of the House is that by general legislation this whole subject should be treated in one bill to correct the evil if evil exist. As I understand it, the heads of all the departments are anxious that legislation should be enacted covering this matter, and it does seem to me very unscientific to place this legislation on this appropriation bill when the whole subject is crying for general legislation. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is only amendatory of the law that now exists. It seems to me there is no good reason why, when railway mail clerks have the benefit of this statute, other supervisory officials of the department should not. This is subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman desires to make the point of order on this extension of the law to other employees of the department, now is the time to make it. There is no sense in taking up time in discussing the matter, and the gentleman might as well have made the point of order to begin with.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads should say that I might as well have made it to begin with. I am not afraid to make it.

Mr. MOON. Well, make it now.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withhold it for a moment.

Mr. DIES. I only withhold the making of it because I thought some gentleman might want to give expression to his views. I do not think we need be hasty about the matter.

Mr. MOON. No; but it is subject to a point of order, and the gentleman announced his intention to make the point of order; and I say to him if he is going to make it, make it now. Mr. DIES. I am going to make it, and the gentleman will find I shall do it in due time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withhold it, and that we may be able to persuade the gentleman not to make the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the point of order?

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Texas will reserve the point of order.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of enabling the committee to hear what the gentleman from Illinois has to say.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope we may persuade the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Diss] not to make the point of order. Here is the situation: When I came to Congress there was no provision at all for the payment of any employee of the Government who was injured while in the line of duty, nor did the Committee on Claims report favorably any bill for the payment of people who were either injured or killed in the Government service, except occasionally. There was the case of the Ford Theater disaster where the Government did make an appropriation. In the course of time the sentiment of the country and of the Congress changed on that subject, and we had a compensation bill passed providing for the payment of a year's salary to certain Government employees injured in the service who were injured in certain hazardous occupations. Since that time we have extended that law to persons in the Bureau of Mines, I do not remember now for certain whether we ex-tended it to those who are engaged in fighting forest fires, but that proposition has been before the House. Since that time we have provided that railway mail clerks should be paid $2,000 in case of death, and they are paid when injured in the service.

The same applies to steamship mail clerks. We have had reported a bill to make compensation generally. After the first law was passed providing for a year's compensation the Committee on Claims adopted the policy of reporting private bills in conformity with the general law where the general law did not cover the case or where the injury occurred prior to the passage of the law, and for quite a while the Committee on Claims insisted that they would only report the amount of a year's salary, but they have abandoned that idea, or did in the last Congress and to a certain extent in the preceding Congress, until now, in the last Congress at least, I think there have been no bills reported in this Congress. The Committee on Claims reported various amounts regardless of a year's salary where the Government employee was injured in the line of service.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think we ought to have general legislation on this question rather than this haphazard way of dealing with it?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is quite haphazardous, although I think it would be desirable to have general legislation, but it is not so easy always to get general legislation that covers all Government employees. Now, we have adopted a policy so far as Congress is concerned of pay in the Railway Mail Service and in the steamship mail service this coming year-one year's full pay and an additional half year's pay, or in case of death $2,000, and the amount is not excessive.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman also we did adopt that policy in building the Panama Canal?

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. DIES. That is the general statute?
Mr. MANN. No; in the Adamson bill—the Panama Canal bill—there was inserted a provision, which was in the bill which I originally drew, giving the President authority under regulations to be issued by him to pay compensation to persons injured on the Panama Canal in the line of duty.

Mr. DIES. Engaged in what is known as hazardous undertakings or hazardous employment?

Mr. MANN. No; not as to that provision; it is not confined to hazardous employment. The President has not yet made the regulations

Mr. DIES. I thought the gentleman had reference to the act of 1908.

Mr. MANN. But I am informed by the Secretary of War that he expects that the President will soon make the regula-tions. Now, there may be a distinction between one kind of Government employee and another. It may be desirable to give compensation to persons who are probably engaged in some hazardous employment in the Post Office Department rather than to some clerks in the department at Washington. The amount here is not excessive. I doubt whether it is desirable to make a general law covering all Government employees, although I am free to admit that if we provide $2,000 for employees of the Post Office Department we ought to, at least, give that same amount to persons engaged in hazardous employment under the Government.

But it is not so much piecemeal legislation. I think the gentleman will find that it is to the advantage of the Government as well as of the employee to adopt legislation in this manner. I hope the gentleman will let the House have a vote on it.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order. and the Chair sustains the same. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 12, after the figures "$44,470,000," insert: "Provided, however, That no carrier or clerk in first and second class offices who has been in the Postal Service as a regular carrier or clerk for three years or more shall receive less than $1,200 per annum."

Mr. MOON. I make a point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 350, at $840 each; 1,450, at $720 each; in all, $1,250,000.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 900, at $840 each; 900, at $720 each; in all, $1,404,000."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by me would grant an increase in pay to 550 additional watchmen, messengers, and laborers. Under existing law but 250 of these men out of a total of 1,800 are receiving $840 per annum. committee, however, has increased that number to 350, but they have not gone far enough.

The laborers in the various post offices throughout the country are paid less for the work performed than are the employees of express companies, and even though they have had an enormous amount of additional work imposed upon them since the inauguration of the parcel post their compensation has not been increased. In New York and other large cities of the country these laborers handle a tremendous quantity of mail matter, and in a number of instances they have been obliged to work many hours overtime without receiving extra compensation for the additional services rendered. In one of the branches of the New York post office one of the laborers who had worked 55 hours overtime, as well as 3 Sundays, was recently taken sick and obliged to absent himself from duty for a day, and, although he had worked this overtime, on his return to duty he found that a substitute had been assigned to do his work, and on receipt of his salary the time that he was absent on account of illness was deducted therefrom. York City, where the cost of living is perhaps higher than other cities, there are but 55 out of a total of 385 laborers employed there who receive $840 a year, whereas if the amendment proposed by me is adopted that number will be increased by 138 and the appropriation by $154,000. I know of several instances where men holding these positions in the post office at New York City have been employed there for 10 or more years at $60 per month and have failed to receive an increase in salary owing to the fact that there were such few $70 places allowed

I sincerely hope that my colleagues who believe in giving justice where justice is due will vote for the amendment proposed by me, so that the men who do the laborious work in the post offices throughout the country will be justly compensated for the work performed.

That is why I offer this amendment. It is no more than fair. These men worked last month, in December, in some cases 60 hours overtime and received no compensation therefor, as the law does not provide for any compensation in such cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York

has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, by this amendment to which the point of order has been reserved-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] reserve the point of order?

Mr. SABATH. May I inquire what the point of order is?

Mr. MOON. The point of order is that it changes legislation. It is new legislation. I will not discuss that, but I want to discuss the merits for a minute. There is a good deal of merit in the proposition offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. We have increased the salaries of the higher officers from time to time and of the clerks from time to time, but we have done but little for the common laborers in the Post Office The cost of living, as has often been said, is such that a small salary will hardly support a man and his family. This does not amount to very much; and while the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads may be charged with favoritism in not pressing this point of order, he will plead guilty to that in the interest of these people. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] ought to be passed by the House. Therefore, I withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in charge of contract stations, $1,100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$1.100,000" and inserting "$1,300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 21, strike out the figures "$1,100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,300,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree to this. This item takes care of what are called "contract stations" or usually called "subpostal stations" in the cities. The committee has increased the amount over the current law $90,000,000. That increase is fairly sufficient possibly to take care of new contract stations, or the number of stations which are required, but is not sufficlent to make any additional compensation to clerks in charge of those stations. Members from the cities have been very liberal in the support of propositions in regard to rural delivery and other matters pertaining to the postal service in the districts that are usually called the "country districts." The parcel post, which is constantly referred to for increase of expenditures, is, however, putting a very great burden upon these contract-station clerks.

In many places it requires the service of an additional clerk and sometimes of two clerks much of the time.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. Is it the gentleman's purpose to increase the pay of the clerks or the number of clerks to be employed?

Mr. MANN. My purpose is to give a chance for increasing the pay of some of the clerks. They have a schedule under which the pay would be increased if the schedule were lived up to, but as Congress has made appropriations in the past the appropriations have not been large enough for the department to live up to its schedule of pay, and the result has been that while clerks have had the promise of an increase as their business increased they have not received the increased pay, because the appropriation was not sufficient.

Mr. DIES. I ask the gentleman for information, because I do not know. What compensation are the clerks to be affected by the gentleman's amendment now receiving?

Mr. MANN. I think they commence at $50 and go up. I think the average pay that a contract clerk receives is $50.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit, that in a station located in a large department store the compensation is $1. In most of the stations, however, the pay is $50, although there are a lot carrying amounts between $1 and $50.

Mr. MANN. Most of them run from $100 to $300 and $400. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more. Mr. MOON. Very well. I hope the House will give it to the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The Government ought to keep faith with these people, at least to some degree. They do an enormous amount of work for the Government. In many instances, or in most of the cases, the fees of the money-order service alone will more than pay the amount required to be paid to the contract clerk. Most of these contract stations, it is true, are in drug stores. The department claims the extra business coming to the store is a sufficient inducement. I know that in my district we find difficulty in getting anyone to take and keep a contract station, because the man who takes a contract station and receives for it two or three hundred dollars a year and finds that he has to employ an extra clerk or two at an expense of $500 or $1,000 a year is very apt not to keep it. There is difficulty in replacing those. The department has added very largely to their work.

I remember going into a station here in Washington—it is true, just before the Christmas holidays—when there were at least four clerks engaged in Government work, in weighing and stamping and taking care of the parcel post and other holiday mail. is true that that condition lasts only for a few days, but there ought to be sufficient pay provided so that the department can come somewhere near to living up to its schedule. In my judgment if Congress does not do that it will be asked, and probably will yield to the asking, to fix some schedule itself which will be far more expensive than merely increasing the appropriation.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of contract, as understand. The First Assistant Postmaster General provides this pay at from $1 to $1,000 a year. This bill carries an increase of $90,000 in the appropriation over last year. I believe that that increase is altogether sufficient to cover any increased necessity for this service. The First Assistant Postmaster General in his testimony indicates that that is all that is needed and all that is desired. That amount is fixed, and I do not see any necessity for loading down this bill with extra appropriations which the department does not want and does not need.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOON. I do.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how many of these stations there are in the United States, approximately?

Mr. MOON. No; I do not know how many there are.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman believe that that $90,000 increase over the present law will do more than provide for the extra clerks to be employed in the handling of the parcel post and other mail, including the natural increase of business, in these substations?

Mr. MOON. Yes; but my information on that subject would not add much to the substantial knowledge of the House on that question, nor would the information of any other Member of the House add much to its knowledge. It is a matter that the department has to deal with, and a matter which it is dealing with. It has asked for an increase of only $90,000. They say that is all they need. That is all they have asked for.

Mr. GOULDEN. I can say, however, that in my own district there is difficulty in securing men who will take these contract offices for the compensation paid them, because the compensation is too small.

Mr. COX. As the chairman of the committee has said, the committee has given all that the department asked for this serv-The department only asked for an additional $90,000, and the committee gave it. I want to call the attention of the committee to the hearings, on page 85, to what Mr. Roper, First Assistant Postmaster General, said on this subject:

Assistant Postmaster General, said on this subject:

The Chairman. The next item is "Compensation of clerks in charge of contract stations." You ask for $1,100,000, an increase of $90,000. Is that due to the parcel post?

Mr. ROPER. This appropriation is used for the purpose of paying clerks in charge of the contract stations, which are usually numbered stations, and smaller named or lettered stations. The contracts for the year 1914 have nearly all been secured, and there is apparently an unexpended balance of about $67,000. As I recall, contracts entered into now require the clerk in charge to handle such parcel-post mail as may be offered for mailing, and it is believed that the contracts for the year ending June 30, 1915, will be at a much higher rate.

Mr. Cox. Are these clerks in charge of contract stations in the civil service?

Mr. ROPER. No, sir.
Mr. COX. How do you contract with them?
Mr. ROPER. We adjust that on the basis of the business.
Mr. ROPER. We adjust that if the Post Office Dep Mr. Chairman, I believe that if the Post Office Department felt that they needed more than they asked for-to wit, $90,000they would have asked it. I do not believe that the increase in the parcel post will bring about an increased demand for this kind of work to the extent that would require the appropriation asked for by the gentleman in his amendment. While I know that the gentleman from Illinois usually investigates these questions very carefully and closely before he offers an amendment upon the floor of the House, yet as this work is altogether under contract, and as the contracts were secured under the appropriation made for the service for the year 1914, and as the department is only asking an increase of $90,000, I feel that will be sufficient to take care of the increased amount of work. I do not believe that the amendment of the gentleman ought to carry.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I yield for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will probably recall that I called the attention of the First Assistant Postmaster General to the fact that they were not giving anywhere near the number of contract stations that were required in the great cities.

I recollect that.

Mr. MADDEN. And that they were not paying anything like the compensation that they ought to pay to those stations that they did establish.

I recall the gentleman's conversation on that Mr. COX.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the First Assistant Postmaster General said he realized that they were not paying as much as

Mr. COX. I also recognize the ability of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] and his usefulness on this committee, and that he is not extravagant in any sense of the word at all, but only desires efficiency in connection with economy in the administration of the Postal Service; but I again repeat that I sincerely believe the committee in reporting this bill have reported an abundant amount of money to take charge of all the increased amount of work which may be thrown upon contract stations by reason of the enactment of the parcel-post law. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois ought to carry.

Mr. SABATH. I will ask the gentleman whether there was evidence before the committee that these contracts that have been entered into are not lived up to by the Postmaster General ?

Mr. COX. I do not recollect any such statement.

Mr. SABATH. I am given to understand that contracts were entered into some years ago and agreements were made that they were to receive $100 the first year, $200 the second year, $300 the third year, and so on, in accordance with the amount of business.

Mr. COX. I do not know anything at all about that. It is all under contract.

Mr. SABATH. But the Postmaster General has not kept faith with them.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. COX. Yes.
Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say there was an unexpended balance, or would be at the end of the year.

Mr. COX. An unexpended balance of $67,000, according to the statement of First Assistant Postmaster General Roper. Mr. MANN. I know of a number of places in my district where there ought to be these stations, but they have been told that they could not be established because there were no funds. Mr. COX. I do not know anything about that. I am only reporting what Mr. Roper said.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be recognized for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. One more question. I will ask the gentleman whether he considers that it would be fair, where the Government establishes a contract station—and it is a contract station in name only, there being a regulation which fixes the paywhether he considers it to be fair for the Government to really live up to its regulations?

Mr. COX. Of course I would make it absolutely the duty of the Government to live up to its contracts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the Government has not done that.

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about that.
Mr. MANN. Then I will tell the gentleman. Originally the contract pay was based on the total business. Then they cut out the sale of stamps and made a regulation providing for pay based on a certain amount of money-order and registry business, but they could not live up to that regulation because there was not a sufficient appropriation. Several times the pay has been decreased and the amount of business increased, and they are not able to live up to it now. I think they have abandoned the regulation because they have been charged so many times with bad faith. Where a man sells a large amount of stamps, disposes of a large amount of money orders, and registers many packages, and increases the business, does not the gentleman think there ought to be some method provided whereby he can receive an increased compensation?

Mr. COX. I think, in the first place, the Government ought to live up to its contract. If the Government has broken any contract which it may have entered into-

Mr. MANN. I do not say that the Government has violated any contract, but it established regulations as to compensation and has not lived up to those regulations.

Mr. COX. The Government should live up to its regulations. Mr. MANN. They can not live up to them if they do not have money enough with which to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last This item during my 10 years' experience on the Post Office Committee has always engaged my special attention. It is not the first time that I have moved in the committee, and on occasions that motion has prevailed, to increase the estimate of the Post Office Department. During the last administration it was the policy of those who had charge of this branch of the service to change the rules of the department in awarding allowances to this meritorious service. If this service had been performed by the Government, it would have cost-and I make no exaggeration as to the amount-more than twice and probably three times the total appropriation carried in this bill.

Because it is performed by those outside the Government service, by those who happen to use it as an adjunct to their regular business, as an accommodation to the Postal Service, utilizing their employees because it may bring business, the department officials have kept on reducing the allowance until, in some instances, they decline to do the service at the rates paid. Because of added burdens and diminishing returns there are many instances where drug-store proprietors are refusing to perform the service in localities where it is most needed.

Formerly, as the gentleman from Illinois stated, the pay was based on the amount of work done, on the amount of money orders, and the number of registered packages dispatched from each station. But under the new rule of compensation the scale of work was continuously and regularly enlarged, thereby reducing their compensation. They have continued in most instances to do this work, and now additional work, in the way of parcel post, has been imposed.

Recently, as anyone here knows who is acquainted with conditions in large cities, during the Christmas period at many of these small postal stations, where the pay is only $200 or $300 a year, there were sent out in one day four bags of parcel post, and unless you make this appropriation larger you are not going to be able to give any increase for this added service. The increase carried in the bill will merely provide for added service to keep up with the needs of localities where additional stations are needed.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What does the gentleman say when there is an increase of $90,000 and an unexpended balance of over $49,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. The department is proceeding under the old scale adopted by the last administration which had scaled down the rate of compensation to these deserving employees, or rather deserving servants of the postal service. Unless we increase the total appropriation there is no opportunity for them to provide for an increased allowance based on the number of transactions. Nay, more. The last administration adopted a method whereby they submitted to them a proposal that they should perform the work for a certain period at a certain price. Prior to that time every person was paid a uniform amount based on the number of money orders and registered packages that went out from the respective stations. There are many instances where the managers of these stations will perform the same amount of work and get varying allowances, because they do not wish to lose the advantage of the patronage that comes from the sale of stamps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if we wish to do what is right toward this meritorious service, we will increase this I believed in the committee that it was not adequate, and I still believe that if we are to compensate the large number of persons doing this outside service we should give them the same compensation they were receiving a few years ago. and the only way to do it is to increase the total appropriation and thereby indicate to the department that Congress is willing that the scale of payment should be increased and the present reduced scale of pay be revised and revised upward. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois will

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know how many clerks are employed under contract?

Mr. STAFFORD. About 5,000. I have the number and the rate of wages paid the respective offices.

Mr. NORTON. How much does the gentleman intend to increase the number?

Mr. STAFFORD. That will be based upon the growth of the service. The idea is to increase the compensation that these people are entitled to. Is the gentleman in favor of it?

Mr. NORTON. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman represented a large city and had some of these stations in his district where he would have acquaintance with the conditions of these stations, he would be in favor of it.

Mr. NORTON. But the gentleman's statements are so general that I can not tell. Anybody can make a general statement such as the gentleman has made.

Mr. STAFFORD. What information does the gentleman de-

Mr. STAFFORD. lowance, located in large department stores.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question.

Mr. STAFFORD. But my time has expired.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can answer it in my time. The appropriation at present is $1,100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOON. That is $90,000 more than it was last year?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Is the gentleman aware that the unexpended balance on this appropriation this year is $67,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I am aware of the unexpended balance at the present time.

Mr. MOON. The unexpended balance now. necessity, when there is a large unexpended balance over the previous appropriation and when the new appropriation provides for the natural increase of 10 per cent, of adding any more to it, when the department is not asking for it, and when the department insists it can get on with the amount that we have given it?

Mr. STAFFORD. To indicate, as I stated before, to the department officials our desire of increasing the allowance, and that they should not further increase the scale of work for the same pay. Assistant Postmaster General Grandfield, as shown in the hearings in prior years, increased the amount of work for the same pay, and the result was that some of these people were obliged to give up the stations at their stores. We do not necessarily follow every estimate. When he provided his estimate, I remember on one occasion I offered an amendment in the committee increasing it $30,000, and it was increased on the showing then made. I have narrated the history of this serv-ice, and if we desire to give to these managers of contract stations their due, with the added work thrown upon them by reason of the increase caused by the parcel post, you will stand by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am in favor of this amendment. I have had numerous complaints which I have lodged with the Post Office Department in Washington from stations that have increased business such as would entitle them to much more compensation than they now receive. I have been faced with the proposition that the inspectors of the Post Office Department have called upon these contract station clerks and have said to them, "If you do not sign a contract for the amount of money you are now receiving, we will go around the corner and establish this post-office station in some other place," and men who, by the scheme of the Post Office Department, were entitled to $100 and $200 and $300 more than they were receiving have been practically forced not only under this administration but under the previous administration, my own party, to accept contracts rather than lose the station. I know of instances during the past Christmas holidays where, in some places at these contract stations, would be seen piled up a truck load of parcel-post packages, and the Post Office Department was compelled to send its truck out to take them away each day for four or five days. Last year these same places did not have half a dozen packages. These men are receiving in many cases $100, and yet they do a business for the Government worth at least $1,000.

Mr. Chairman, there is no proposition yet offered in this bill that is more worthy of favorable consideration than this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a contract service. The Government of the United States can not force any man to enter into a contract to perform this service. It is let out by contract, and it takes two parties to make a contract, so that the Post Office Department makes an allowance to each one of these postal stations, and they make the best contract obtainable, with a view of obtaining the most efficient service that they are capable of making in these great cities. Something has been said about the contract stations where the compensation was $1. Yes; that is true; and why? Because people compete for the location of the post-office contract stations in their places of business, usually a drug store, and I have heard no complaint come from the department that the department has been unable to obtain satisfactory and suitable contracts for the performance of this service. It takes two to make a contract, the person who bids and the department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It takes two to get a rural carrier, does it not? No one is obliged to be a rural carrier.

Mr. FINLEY. No; nor is anyone obliged to come to Congress. Mr. MANN. No; that is true, but the gentleman's argument applies to all.

Mr. FINLEY. No, Mr. Chairman, no; the gentleman, I submit, does not mean that.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. This is not regulated by law, it is a contract service, and is on a parity with Star Route Service contracts.

Mr. MANN. No; there are star-route cases—
Mr. FINLEY. It is on a parity with the Star Route Service of the country, where they have to enter into contracts.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken, it is not that at all, and I am surprised that the gentleman is not sufficiently familiar with it to know.

Mr. FINLEY. There must be a contract entered into. I submit the gentleman from Illinois does not mean that statement.

Mr. MANN. I do mean it, because I am familiar with the

Mr. FINLEY. I am also familiar with the service.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid not. Mr. FINLEY. I say it is, and the Government can not force anybody to take one of these contract stations.

Mr. MANN. Nor can the Government force anybody to be a rural free-delivery carrier.

Mr. FINLEY. But there the party stands an examination and goes in the Government service under existing law-

Mr. MANN. He goes in of his own volition-

Mr. FINLEY, Certainly. Mr. MANN. In both cases.

Mr. FINLEY. But here you are trying to give people something for services they perform and which they are not obliged to perform. In other words, they can go out of the Government service at any time.

Mr. MANN. Anyone can, including us. Mr. FINLEY. So that argument of the gentleman from Illinois is fallacious, because there is no comparison between the carrier or the city clerk in the city post office or the city carrier and the person who enters into a contract with the Government to give to the Government postal service in one of these contract stations. Mr. Chairman, I submit that there has been no complaint. Here is a surplus amounting to 6 per cent of last year's appropriation unexpended. Here is an increase for this service of between 8 and 9 per cent provided in this bill over last year, making altogether something like 15 per cent more than was spent last year for this very service, yet gentlemen come here and undertake to say that more money should be appropriated. For what purpose? Because these people are on a parity with other employees in the Postal Service. Why, Mr. Chairman, that argument will not do; not at all. I submit the department has been liberal; they have informed the Post Office Committee fully, and the Post Office Committee have reported to this House a bill that carries the needed appropriations for this service, and I hope the amendment will be voted down. service, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. This is a peculiar service and a very essential one. In the great cities of the country there are places as much as a mile square densely populated where you can not find a place to buy a postage stamp, and these contract stations are place to buy a postage stamp, and these contract stations are established for the purpose of giving the people living in such areas an opportunity to buy postage stamps without going too far to do so. Now, I think it is economy to the Government to have as many of these contract stations as they can establish, because the more we have of them the more stamps will be sold, and, of course, the more stamps sold the more revenue will come to the Treasury.

The establishment of numerous such stations is an encouragement to the people to patronize the post office. Some of these contract stations in my neighborhood sell about $60,000 worth of stamps a year, and the men who sell that amount of stamps of stamps a year, and the men who sell that amount of stamps get only about $600 a year. Sixty thousand dollars of receipts in a post office would place that office in the first class and perhaps entitle the postmaster to a salary of three or four thousand dollars a year. These contract stations are established primarily to accommodate the public, and while it is true that the men who are appointed clerks are usually merhaps to the principle of the salary of the salary state. chants in the neighborhood and, in the first instance, take the appointment because they think it will add to their business, they soon find that the work becomes so burdensome that they are unable to do it without employing additional help in their stores. And it frequently happens that the pay which they are obliged to give to the person employed is twice the amount they themselves receive for the work. The Government pays no rent for the stores occupied by these contract stations; it does not even pay adequate compensation to the men who are appointed clerks. It seems to me to be a false economy to endeavor to keep this appropriation down, because I look upon it in the nature of the appropriation made for special-delivery messengers. Everybody realizes that special-delivery messengers pay their way, as the appropriation made for that service all comes back into the Treasury because of the added compensation paid for the special delivery of the messages. Now, this is simply establishing a station at a point where it will add to the revenue of the department and at the same time give to the people of the neighborhood the accommodation which the establishment of the station provides. There can be no doubt about the fact that no such number of stations are established as ought to be in existence, and everybody will agree who knows anything about the facts that in the stations which are established the compensation paid for the work performed is in no wise adequate to the service rendered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomson] is recognized.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this country is altogether too big to offer what is an unfair contract, carrying an inadequate compensation for the services rendered, and then attempt to defend itself by saying that nobody will have to take this contract, and that if a man does not like it he can leave it.

It is quite true, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] said, that the Government can not force a man to take one of these contracts, but nevertheless men are frequently forced to take them, not by the Government, but nevertheless forced, as my friend from New York [Mr. Calder] has pointed

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Yes, sir. Mr. DIES. If the present manner of awarding these contracts to the lowest bidder is not followed, what plan would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I do not understand that that is the plan which is followed.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman must know that the parties who make the lowest proposition get the contract. The suggestion is to let the party who gets the contract follow his own business. They can afford to pay the Government $100 a year, many of them, for the contract, because of the attraction of people to their stores for business. It is in no sense an office, It is merely a contract to sell stamps and supplies.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. MOON. There is no salary attached to the place.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. MOON. A man takes it at his own figure. That is all there is to it.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. No, Mr. Chairman; I disagree with the last statement of the gentleman. That may be true technically, but, nevertheless, for all practical purposes the figure is dictated, and the storekeeper knows, as my friend from New York [Mr. Calder] stated, if he does not name a figure that is acceptable to the post-office officials somebody around the corner will be given an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DIES. What plan has the gentleman to offer as a substitute for the plan followed now?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I do not care what the plan is so long as the compensation which is offered is an adequate

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the plan now followed?

Mr. MOON. It is a personal contract between the department and the contracting station.

Mr. MANN. It is no more a personal contract than any other employment is.

Mr. MOON. Of course the statute provides what the compensation shall be, as in the case of the rural contracts re-ferred to. The gentleman understands the distinction between the various contractual relations under statute and those that are not under statute.

Mr. MANN. There is no contract about it in either case.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman would not pay them what they will do the service for, he must determine the amount that

Mr. MANN. . The department has made regulations in the ast as to compensation based on the business being done. They have not lived up to those regulations, and do not do so

Mr. DIES. The proposition of the gentleman is to increase the appropriation by $200,000.

Mr. MANN. To permit the department to live up to its regulations fixing the compensation. Mr. DIES. But the department does not ask for any increased appropriation. Mr. MANN. Oh, the department has never asked for an increase in a great many instances. Mr. DIES. In this case it has asked for an increase of $90,000. Mr. MANN. The department has not asked for an increase of appropriations that does not reach the length of a page or

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to vield further.

My experience in this matter is not different, I suppose, from that of other Members of this House who come from large cities. I have had a number of complaints from men who have these contracts to the effect that the amounts that they were practically forced to accept were not adequate. I went personally to a number of these offices—places of business where these stations are conducted—and talked with these men about these contracts

has expired.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in view of the interruptions, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomson] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the gentleman's five minutes all debate be closed on this paragraph.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have five minutes, Mr.

Chairman, and I object.

Mr. SABATH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from

Mr. SABATH. I also desire a few minutes' time. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will amend his request.

Mr. MOON. Very well. I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph be concluded in 15 minutes. That will give all gentlemen five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] moves that all debate be concluded on this paragraph in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion,

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomson] has stated that he has been informed by the men running these contract stations that they are practically forced to accept the conditions and contracts exacted by the Government. What forces them to accept? What does the gentleman say about

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say two things: First, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] has said, they know that if they do not take these contracts and continue these stations in their places of business at the terms stipulated, the Government will run around the corner and get somebody else who will be willing to.

Then the whole question is a mere matter of com-Mr. COX.

netition?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Yes. But, as I said before, the Government is too big an institution to force these men into that kind of competition.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman another ques-Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. COX. If the Government can go around the corner and get equally good service at a less price, why not let the Gov-

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me for a moment, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] a question.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman from Indiana think there are men in his district who can be found to serve as a Representative in Congress for less money than he is receiving?

Mr. COX. I have no doubt that can be done, and they might render better service. But the gentleman is stating a hypothetical state of facts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's services are valuable.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

I do not think the Government ought to go around the corner and find some one else who is willing to do this work for a compensation that is utterly inadequate. These men are forced to take these contracts at an inadequate amount. I know of a number in my district who take these contracts and pay out more money to their clerks who do this work than they receive for the contract.

Mr. COX. Then they are philanthropists in the strictest sense of the word.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I know from the experience I have had with these men in my district that many of them are holding on to the contracts that they have had for some timesome for a longer and some for a shorter length of time-and are doing the work under unfair conditions, the unfairness of which is increasing because of the increase of the parcel-post mail, because they have been told that after the parcel post has been allowed to run along for a little while, so the Government can size up the amount of business that it will probably result in, the basis of these contracts will be changed and the compensation increased; and they are hanging on under these unfair circumstances in the hope that that will be the case; but it can not be the case unless some such amendment as is proposed by my colleague from Illinois is adopted.

Mr. COX. They will still have to meet the man around the corner.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. No; the man around the corner will be eliminated then.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this situation with the official connected with the Post Office Department who has charge of these contract stations. I went to see him because of the large number of complaints I received from the men in my district who hold these contracts, and he said he realized that the basis was unfair, that the compensation was inadequate, and he hoped that after the parcel post had gone along far enough to demonstrate how much of an increase thereought to be such an increase would be made; but he called my attention to the fact that that could not be done unless we here made some provision for it, such as is suggested in this amendment, and he urged me to support such a proposition when the matter came up, because he realized from his standpoint that it was needed. I trust the amendment will be adopted,

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I know that we would all like to accommodate our genial friends from Chicago and other large cities in this matter. I can understand why they would all like to be popular with the postal employees of their respective cities, and yet I am unable to understand why they should urge this increase in this appropriation. If you increased this appropriation $10,000,000, it would still be discretionary with the Post Office Department to establish these contract stations and to determine the compensation of these quasiemployees. Last year there was an unexpended balance in this appropriation of $41,000, therefore the contention made by my friend from Illinois that there was a failure to increase the salary of these employees because the appropriation was inadequate is not well founded. There was $41,000 unexpended, and therefore the department could have increased the salaries of these employees if it had wanted to, if in its discretion it thought it a desirable thing to do.

The other day at the hearings the assistant postmaster in charge of this matter testified that there was $67,000 unexpended They have asked for an increase over the last year's appropriation of $90,000. There being $41,000 left over, that makes $131,000 provided for in this bill more than was expended in the last year, and it seems to me that to adopt the amendment proposed here would only swell the appropriation, without any benefit to anybody. The department officials may be appealed to to increase the salaries or to establish more contract stations.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman mentioned an unexpended balance of $67,000. Does the gentleman mean that that exists to-day, with five months of the fiscal year still remaining?

Mr. STEENERSON. I mean exactly that.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does not the gentleman suppose that will be exhausted before the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. STEENERSON. The balance is now $67,000, but there was a balance of $41,000 left over from last year.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does not the gentleman think if the postoffice officials had done their duty properly by these contract stations there would not be any $41,000 or any $67,000 unexpended, but that this additional $100,000 would be required?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not think anything of the kind.

I think the department officials are trying to administer the law properly. The Post Office Committee have got to assume We act on the principle that the men in charge of this work of administering this law and expending these appropriations will do their duty, and that they have asked for as much money as they need. If we give them more than they ask for, they can not properly expend it, and you will do nobody any good, except to make an undue amount in the appropriation. That is the way it looks to me. I should be very glad to accommodate all these gentlemen from the large cities. It is true we have treated the rural districts liberally, and they are not complaining; but certainly if we want to do the city employees any good, we want to do it in some other way and not by making any appropriation that will not be expended. We could not compel the department to expend this money if we voted it under the proposed amendment.

Mr. FARR. The gentleman refers to the large cities. This provision would apply to any city or town, regardless of population, that has a substation not sufficiently compensated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the reason why the $41,000 was not expended is because the former Assistant Postmaster General did not keep his word with these employees. If he had lived up to the contracts he entered into, there would not have been any surplus left.

I desire to say that these men in these contract stations who are receiving $100 and $200 a year are performing a greater amount of work and transacting much more business than a great many of the postmasters who are receiving $1,000, $1,200, and $1,500 a year for their services. I myself have only 12 of these stations in my district. For three years I have been en-deavoring to secure more of these stations, and at all times I have been informed that there were no available funds with which to create these contract stations. The result is that the people of my district have not received the service to which they have been entitled.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SABATH. Certainly.
Mr. MOON. There is an unexpended balance of $67,000.
Mr. SABATI That only tends to show that the for Mr. SABATT That only tends to show that the former Postmaster General and the former administration practiced a false economy. They desired to make a showing at the expense of the people and at the expense of the service.

The record does not show that.

Mr. SABATH. I will explain to the chairman of the committee why the record does not show it. These clerks are not organized. They have no one to come here and appeal for them. They have no one to come down here and state the facts. department, as a rule, and especially under a Republican administration, does not borrow trouble in trying to ascertain where they can increase expenditures and the salaries of poorly paid employees. For that reason the committee has not received the information that it is now receiving.

M., STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman does not blame the former administration for the expenditure in the current year? Mr. SABATH. I blame the former administration not for the expenditure in this department, but for the failure to spend money appropriated for this service.

Mr. STEENERSON. The appropriation was sufficient.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; but they did not expend it, because they desired to make a showing of economy at the expense of the service and to cover up reckless expenditures in other departments.

Mr. CALDER. The gentleman blames them for setting a bad precedent?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; because they have entered into contracts; they pledged the Government to do certain things. They established these stations at $100 a year, and some of these men have been in the service for three, four, and five years without having an increase which the Republican administration promised and failed to give them, notwithstanding the money was in the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken; and on a division. (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were 50 ayes and 55 noes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that is so close that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. Moon and Mr. MANN

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 51 ayes and 85 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $1,750,000.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by publishing two letters of Mr. W. D. Brown, the editor of the Rural Free Delivery News, dated January 12 and 20, 1914, and statements of letter carriers showing actual cost of necessary equipment and maintenance for 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to ob-

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I want to make myself understood. I ask to insert in the RECORD two letters from Mr. Brown, editor of the Rural Free Delivery News, and statements from rural carriers in my district as to the actual cost of necessary equipment and maintenance for 1913. I realize that we may not reach that portion of the bill to-day to which they will be applicable.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if that is the same matter inserted the other day by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If it is, I will not ask to have it inserted again.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, of course, to the gentleman from Michigan extending his remarks in the RECORD, but I shall object to that part of his request which includes the letter of Mr. Brown and the statements made by the rural carriers. I shall object to those two things.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does not the gentleman think that it will prove a valuable source of information?

Mr. COX. I suppose every Member of this House has been served with a copy of that. I got one with flaming headlines, marked "very important."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I hope every Member who has received these statements of the rural carriers will be permitted to insert in the RECORD at least 10 of them from different portions of their districts, and in this way we could get an excellent idea and understanding of the facts throughout the entire country and be enabled to treat the rural carriers fairly and give them adequate compensation.

Mr. COX. I do not suppose there is a Member of the House who within the last 72 hours has not received these data, and I shall object to it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How are we to know what data each has received, except as I have suggested

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

The Clerk read as follows:

For unusual conditions at post offices, $90,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, this question of taking the assistant postmasters out of the classified service is not a question of political expediency, but it is a business proposition. Where is there a business house, an industrial house, a commercial house, a banking house, or any other kind of business in the country that selects its employees by applying civil-service rules? Can you point to one where they are selected by civil-service examination? What more reason is there that school-teachers should not be selected by a civil-service examination and kept in the same place, when you once put them there, all the days of their life? There are too many reasons to think of discussing them. I say this is not a ques tion of political expediency, but it is a business proposition that should appeal to every business man. You know and everyone knows that in every community in every district there is a technically educated man who walks around in the community, and he knows everything. He can tell you everything. He is really an educated man and he does know things. But what business qualification has this particular individual? You have seen him; he is familiar to all. You have seen the crowd that gathers around him. Often the throng stops to hear him talk, You have seen some gaze in wonder, "and still the wonder grew that one small head could carry all he knew." And yet is that man capable of filling a position of assistant postmaster? Why, the banker would not take him in a banking house; he would not be taken in a commercial house; he would not be taken in any kind of industrial establishment, because he lacks business qualification or some other objection. Yet you want to take him into the post office because he can probably stand a better technical examination than anyone else in the community

Would the banking establishments take a bank robber or a train wrecker or one of the bums on the street simply because he can stand an examination? Yet one of these fellows that burns around on the streets may be able to stand a better examination than the fellow at the counter in the bank. Many of them can, but they have no banking qualifications. You know it is the truth. Many bank robbers can stand better examinations than the fellow behind the counter, and yet he is to be taken into the Government employ as assistant postmaster simply because he can stand the best examination. Why should they be forced on the public, kept there in office all the rest of What more right have assistant postmasters to be placed in the classified service with life tenure than Members of Congress? Assistant postmasters in large cities receive large salaries. Considering the expense of a Member of Congress, the salaries of assistant postmasters in large cities are more. The people should have the right to vote upon the tenure of office of their repre-The people are usually very careful and considerate of the services of their officers. The average length of term of office of Congressmen from Georgia is about 16 years in the last two decades. Only five Members of Congress south of the Potomac River, covering the entire Southern States, were defeated in the last election. No Member of Congress from Georgia has been defeated for the last 10 years who has not served at least 12 years. Several have retired voluntarily or died whose periods of service had covered 15 or 20 years. The people of the States are very considerate with their Representatives in Congress, as the record shows; they recognize the need of experienced and efficient representatives. At the same time, they are entitled to the right to vote on his service. A Member of Congress should not be placed in office for life without the right of the people to vote on his return.

I believe that all postmasters should be elected by the patrons of the office, and as he is responsible for the proper management of the office and efficient service, he should be allowed to name his assistant.

I am surprised to hear Members on the floor of this House advocate placing all postmasters under civil service, thus giving them a life tenure of office. The salaries of many postmasters throughout the United States are greater than those of Members of Congres Life tenure of United States judges frequently makes them independent and autocratic. The United States court would be more popular with the people if the judges were required to be elected by the people. It would be a great improvement upon the system. If the appointment for life is good for the Nation, then why should not all State officers be appointed for life? What is good for the States is good for the Nation, and yet, Mr. Chairman, you know the States would not stand for their offices being filled by examination with tenure for life. The civil service, when properly applied within reasonable limits, is good. The life tenure of rural carriers, for instance, is not objectionable, but I am bitterly opposed to civil-service postmasters and assistants.

There are hundreds of thousands of employees of this Government under civil service. In a few years there will be hundreds of thousands more. The Member of Congress is the only representative of the National Government elected by the people at the ballot box. This Government, in my opinion, is entering upon a strange and dangerous road. We are no longer guided by the milestones that point to a government by the people. Forty-five thousand fourth-class postmasters were covered by civil service by order of President Taft after his defeat. Memlers of Congress are censured by their constituents for not giving them Democratic officers, and yet one by one all Government employees are securing life tenure of office and now it is boldly advocated on this floor that even postmasters should be classified.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I judge from the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat that in his locality an education is considered a damage and an injury gen-As I understand him, school-teachers are not examined in his State, and they are not required to pass an examination and are not graded accordingly. They are in my State, and we are proud and glad of it, and that is the way we get good schoolteachers there

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I beg to correct the gentleman. I did not make any such statement. The teachers in Georgia are graded the same as in any other State. There is not a State in the Nation that does not grade its teachers. I did make the statement that there is just as much reason why a teacher should be selected and put under the civil service and kept in the village for the balance of his life, whether the community were satisfied with him or not, as there is to force on the people of the community an assistant postmaster.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentleman to conclude his speech in my time. What the gentleman asserted was that there was not any community that would have their school-teachers selected by examination. I do not know what he meant, but that is what he said. The proposition he is discussing is simply this: Whether assistant postmasters will understand that the reward of efficiency in office is to be continuance in office, or whether they are to understand that they are to be continued in their position for the reason, not of efficiency in the post office, but of political service.

That is the question before the House.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. How does the gentleman justify the action of the President covering the assistant postmasters into the civil service as against the right of the employees in the Post Office Department, many of whom had been there for years, and who thus were not given a chance to secure these positions?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand what the gentleman means. None of the employees of the Post Office Department were eligible for these positions.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I mean this, that when assistant post-masters in first-class offices were covered into the civil service they took precedence over the rights of clerks and subordinates in those offices.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, has the gentleman now got his question the way he wants it?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I want to know how the gentleman can justify the act of the President in covering the assistant postmasters into the civil service as against the rights of subordinates in those first-class offices to secure that position by civil service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not justify the fact of the order being so long postponed. It ought to have been made by President Cleveland, by his Republican successors; it ought to have been made a long time before it was made. [Applause.] That is the only trouble with this order, that it was not made early enough, otherwise we would have done what ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman think these people should have been covered into the civil service without an examination?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Were not they all so covered in?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, they had an examination. Mr. COX. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Nineteen hundred were turned into the civil service by an Executive order, without being examined at all, in 1910.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says in many cases they were not examined. Does he mean no examination what-

Mr. COX. No; never stood any civil-service examination of any kind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is in error about that. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. If I am in error, the Post Office Department is in error, because there is where I got the information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I got my information from a gentleman on the committee who sits here.

Mr. MOON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that about 200 of these assistant postmasters were covered into the service by an Executive order of President Taft on the 21st day of February prior to the inauguration of the President on the 4th of March. There are lying now in the Post Office Department a number of reports made by Republican inspectors as to the utter incompetency of some of these men, and two of them from one district in North Carolina.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If that be so, put them out, and you will meet with my approval.

Mr. MOON. And will meet with our approval.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Set the standard of efficiency as high as you desire, and you can not set it too high to suit me. Put the standard of efficiency up, and if they do not come up to that standard then remove them from the service. Now, the gentleman from Maryland the other day in discussing the question of taking over the telephone and telegraph service spoke of the great advantage of Government control in that matter. He stated that a standard could be set, that a standard could be enforced by the Government, and by means of that we could obtain a higher efficiency under Government supervision than we otherwise could. Raise this standard, gentlemen, and discharge those who can not come up to it. And let me make another suggestion of which I will approve. If you want to put first-class pestmasters under civil-service rules—that is, after you have filled them with Democratic appointees-you will do that with my sanction and my approval, and I hope you will. [Applause].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowances to third-class post offices to cover the cost of clerical services, $1,700,000.

Provided, That no allowance in excess of $300 shall be made where the salary of the postmaster is $1,000, $1,100, or $1,200; nor in excess of $400 where the salary of the postmaster is $1,300, $1,400, or $1,500; and that no allowance in excess of $500 shall be made where the salary of the postmaster is $1,600 or $1,700; nor in excess of $800 where the salary of the postmaster is $1,800 or $1,900: And provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, expend not exceeding $400,000 for the employment, at a maximum salary of $600 per annum, of assistant postmasters at post offices of the third class where the salary of the postmaster is $1,800 or $1,900 per annum. $1,900 per annum.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GRAY. That is your right. Mr. Chairman, I disclaim any intention to gain any special advantage for my district. I believe Members of Congress not only represent their own districts specially but all districts generally. I want to call attention to a condition that is not only prevalent now in my own district but is often prevalent in a great many districts. For the year ending June 30, 1913, the salary of the postmaster at Brookville, Ind., was $2,000, and the maximum clerk-hire allowance there was $1,800 per annum.

In the spring of 1913, near the close of the fiscal year, there was a great flood in that district, and the mails were cut off for a great length of time, and the postal receipts fell off $392. By reason of that decrease in receipt, the post office there was relegated from a second-class to a third-class office. The salary of the postmaster fell from $2,000 to $1,800, and the clerk-hire allowance from $1,800 to $800 by operation of law. I am not assuming any special knowledge or superior wisdom to pronounce judgment upon salaries and allowances or to say how much the clerk hire of this office or in any other office should be; nor do I claim to speak from any special experience in such I do claim, however, to have some power to reason matters. from analogy. Here in this office the next year-

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] to state that in a third-class office the clerk hire amounted to as much as $1,800 at any time?

Mr. GRAY. That is the allowance, as limited by law.

Mr. FINLEY. Why, Mr. Chairman, I submit the gentleman from Indiana must be mistaken as to that proposition.

Mr. GRAY. I may be in error, but I understood this was $1,800, the amount of the allowance, and I know it is the limit fixed by law. Now, in the next year, with the same amount of business to be transacted, and not only this, but with the parcel post added and the amount of business growing and expanding and increasing, under existing law this clerk-hire allowance was cut down from $1,800 to $800, and the postmaster who received $2,000 a year before for transacting less business now only receives $1,800 for transacting more business and is compelled to pay out for clerk hire a considerable part of his salary to maintain the proper efficiency in the service.

Now, if you say that $800 is enough, I say there is something wrong here and a gross inequality and a false gradua-tion of clerk-hire allowance is most apparent. If $800 is enough, then $1,800 is too high a limit for transacting the same business in a higher class office. I presented this matter to the Post Office authorities, and they told me they were powerless to give relief, because under the appropriation bill they could only go as high as $800. They further told me that many cases were presented of the same kind, and yet they were restricted. They said in this case there ought to be relief granted. but there was no warrant of law for it.

Mr. Chairman, this is purely an administrative feature of the Postal Service. You can not fix clerk-hire allowance any specific amount by law any more than you can fix a railroad rate. Such rates and allowances are determined by many conditions, and so I believe it would be justice to increase the limit of this allowance from $800 to $1,500, at least, for transacting the same amount of business in a third-class office for which $1,800 may be allowed in a second-class office. This is one of the errors of precedent and long usage which, following prior example, is continued in appropriation bills from year to year. I know that by reason of the force of custom men are slow to make changes, even for the betterment of the service. I submit, however, there should be a change here, and the reason for the same is apparent at a glance.

As long as a limit of $1,800 for clerk hire in second-class post offices is maintained, there can be no reason urged against a higher limit in third-class offices where substantially the same business is shown transacted. Further argument is unneces-There is no escape from the justice of a raise in the limit for clerk hire in third-class offices to be granted upon a proper showing under a sound discretion in the administration of the Postal Service.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Saunders having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 541) granting to the Emigration Canon Railroad Co., a corporation of the State of Utah, permission, in so far as the United States is concerned, to occupy, for a right of way for its railroad track, a certain piece of land now included in the Mount Olivet Cemetery, Salt Lake County, Utah.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 94. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, evise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved bill and joint resolution of the following titles

S. 3484. An act to amend act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, being chapter 231 of Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large;

S. J. Res. 5. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to consider the need and report a plan for national aid to vocational education.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post offices, $5,200,000.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Add, after line 18, the following proviso:

"Provided, That $6,000 thereof shall be paid for the purpose of making preliminary inquiry as to what it would cost to furnish to each patron who regularly secures his mall at the same post office weekly a post-office box free of charge.

"Provided, however, That the same shall not apply to any post office located in any town, village, or city in which there is a free delivery: And provided further, That no person residing more than 1 mile from the post office at which he secures his mail and within 1 mile from the post office at which he secures his mail and within 1 mile by the nearest practical road to a rural free-delivery route shall be entitled to a box free."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. LINDBERGH. Will the gentleman withhold it for a Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman want to be heard?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes; I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Not on the point of order. I want to say something on the subject of the amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for five minutes. Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I only wish it to pave the way for a bill that I have pending (H. R. 6855) for the purpose of furnishing to the people free post-office box rent in towns where there is no free delivery. The chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee has promised to allow me a hearing on that bill before his committee as soon as practicable after this bill is out of the way.

There can be no possible doubt about the justice of furnishing boxes free under the circumstances provided in the bill. The bill is short, and I quote the text, as follows:

That, beginning the 1st day of January after the enactment of this bill, the Government shall furnish to each patron who regularly secures his mail at the same post office weekly a post-office box free of charge: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any post office located in any town, village, or city in which there is a free delivery: And provided further, That no person residing more than 1 mile from the post office at which he secures his mail and within 1 mile by the nearest practical road to a rural free-delivery route shall be entitled to a box free nearest practical road to a rural free-delivery route shall be entitled to a box free.

That the Government shall, within one year from the 1st day of January after this act takes effect, buy the boxes from the postmasters who have furnished the same at their own expense: Provided, That such boxes are suitable for the service: And provided further, That the same can be purchased at their reasonable value, not to exceed the cost to the postmaster.

The importance of such a measure, and the justice of it, as well as the practicability, never occurred to me until I read an editorial written by H. S. Saylor, editor of the Buffalo Journal, in Buffalo, Minn. I have misla'd Mr. Saylor's original article and can not place it before the House. I have one of his later articles, setting forth pertinent facts, the main part of which I quote, as follows:

The Journal has several times called attention to the injustice of the charge for box rent to patrons of offices in which there is no city delivery, as from all offices with an income exceeding $10,000 a year there is city delivery, and farmers have the rural delivery. Village residents have no way of getting mail except by calling at the post office, and it seems like discrimination to charge them for the privilege.

When a bill was introduced providing for free delivery in all villages of 1,000 or more inhabitants the writer wrote Congressman Lindbergh the following:

"Except as a matter of pride and the revenue drawn from the Government to the small towns for the salary of the carrier, I do not know of any good reason for the establishment of letter-carrier service in towns of but 1,000 population. Families living half a mile or more distant from the post office may now have mail delivered by rural carriers, and of families living within half a mile, with but few exceptions, some member passes the post office daily. Business houses are all located so near the post office that delivery would be very little convenience to them, especially if but once daily. The fact that cities and rural districts are served with carriers is not a good argument for delivery in villages when the service is no great convenience to the people there.

"But the people living in small villages have a real grievance because of the charge for box rent, and the more mail received, with its resultant larger revenue to the Post Office Department, the higher the charge for the box. The resident of the village does not object to calling at the post office for his mail and being the only citizen not served by carriers, but he does object to paying for the privilege. Boxes are more for the convenience of the postmaster than the patron, as their use systematizes his business and saves time in handing out mail. Box rent is a proper charge in a letter-carrier

Only yesterday I received a copy of a letter written by one of my constituents to the Postmaster General. This letter, like the Saylor editorial, clearly states the logic of the situation, and I prefer to use the thoughts of such gentlemen rather than my own arguments, as they live in villages of about 1,200 population and see the daily effect of the service of towns where free delivery is not had. This letter was written by F. H. Lindsley, a prominent man in business in Delano, Minn. It is as follows:

JANUARY 17, 1914.

To the honorable Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I wish to call your attention to the present unjust and unnecessary condition of the box renters in towns of above 1,000 population, where there is no free delivery.

Taking as a basis of my remarks Delano, Minn., with a population of 1,031 at the last census. 10 years ago, the rental charged for an ordinary-sized lock box was 25 cents per quarter. The department has raised that rental until at present that same box costs 45 cents. Wherein is the injustice? I will presently illustrate. The farmers at this same post office have rural free delivery and no box rent to pay—no tax levied on them by the Federal Government whatsoever.

Take one step higher, and the cities have free delivery, with no Federal tax whatsoever. In those cities, if a person chooses to rent a box of the Government, well and good. He is only paying for the special service which be demands from the Government.

Go back to our town of 1,000 population without free delivery. There is no choice but to be ground under the rules of the department to the extent of a tax of $1.80 per annum. The postmaster can not serve us unless we rent those boxes.

You may say that this is a small tax but it is unavoidable. The postmaster at the class of offices named would be absolutely unable to serve the public if they all refused to submit to this tax and refused to rent a box of the Government at any price.

As it is, he is greatly handleapped by that percentage of the population who receive large quantities of mail and who refuse to rent a box and do get their mail at the general delivery, box rent free.

The injustice of the whole matter lies in the Government charging any rent for boxes where there is no free delivery. Because people live in a town of the class indicated, are they to be taxed when the rural population and the dwellers in cities where there is free delivery go scot-free?

Now, before we talk of cheaper postage, let us face this injustice and let us have the box-rent system, in towns where there is no free delivery, abolished.

REFORMS THAT SHOULD BE INSTITUTED IN THE POSTAL SYSTEM.

First. In every town of permanence, where there is reasonably to be expected that a post office will permanently be maintained, the Federal Government should own the post-office building.

Second. On payment of a reasonable fee, to wit, the cost of a box, the head of each family should be entitled to the use of a box suitable in size to contain the average daily mail of the patron. After the payment of the box it should be rent free. This provision should be in force only in towns and post offices where there is no free delivery. Cities and rural routes should be left as they now are.

These changes are necessary for efficiency in the service, the reasonable requirements of postmasters and equality of service, and to avoid the discrimination that is now practiced by the department.

We are perfectly aware that this inequality and discrimination has been growing up for years; however, within the last two years it has been accentuated by the steady rise in the demands of the department in the demand for more box rent, as the records of the office at this place and elsewhere will amply prove.

The postmaster's salary has been increased with no better service to the public, with shorter hours with the office open, and local increase in box rents from the patrons. We feel it is time to have some changes made in this matter of box rents, and then at a later time other matters can reasonably be considered.

I will send a copy of this letter to Congressman Charles A. Linders and the continuance.

Wery respectfully, yours,

F. H. Lindsley.

continuance. Very respectfully, yours,

I realize that the amendment I offer to this bill is subject to a point of order, but it does not seem to me that it would come with good grace from gentlemen having in their towns free service to object, and I hope the point of order will be withdrawn. Certainly justice rather than technicality ought to govern the Members of this body.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I would also add that they have to pay annually about as much as the cost of the box.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is a fact. They do have to pay annually about that much.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Certainly.
Mr. STAFFORD. Following the logic of the gentleman's argument, would it not extend to the rent of boxes in all post offices, even though they had city delivery service?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do not take that to be true where they have city delivery service, for the parties there secure their mail by carrier delivery and do not need boxes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. But they have them.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not necessary in the little local offices that do not have city delivery. They can get their mail at the general window without the accommodation of the box, but does not the logic of the argument require that all boxes should be free?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No. They do not get their mail there unless they go to the post office, and they are not required to go to the post office at free-delivery offices, for their mail will be

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LINDBERGH. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Take the small offices where the compensation is $50 or $60 a year, would that apply there?
Mr. LINDBERGH. I suppose it would not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that in those offices there is no occasion for having separate boxes.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is true in regard to those offices where the mail is not frequently called for, and in those cases the rule which I ask to have provided, possibly, should not apply. I have not inquired sufficiently into this to be sure about what ought to be done in those cases.

The amendment which I offer only provides at this time for making inquiry as to what it would cost the Government to furnish box rent free under the circumstances named. The bill pending, which I before referred to, makes provision for the securing of boxes, and, in my judgment, ought to pass. Mr. SELDOMRIDGE, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Sel-DOMRIDGE] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I desire to call the attention of the committee to this language, on page 12, regarding the limitation on the rental of buildings for third-class offices:

That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post office for rent a sum in excess of $500 nor more than $100 for fuel and light in any one year.

I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads that it would be impossible under the rules to present an amendment changing this limitation; but I wish to say that since I have been a Member of Congress I have visited many of these third-class offices, and I have been greatly surprised at the character of accommodations afforded the public. Many of these third-class offices are located in buildings which are exposed to danger from fire and burglary, and, in view of the increased parcel-post business, there is danger of loss to the Government from the insecure and insufficient accommodations afforded. I think that it is unbecoming to the dignity of this great Government that in these small cities and towns the people should be obliged to come into personal contact with a governmental instrumentality in accommodations that are so unworthy and undignified.

If I could prepare an amendment which would be accepted by the House, I would favor the removal of this limitation and would provide that the Postmaster General should have the power and the right to secure in these small cities accommodations for postal facilities which would be worthy and dignified and representative of the growth and development of the country rather than that the Government should be compelled to secure the cheapest accommodations possible.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment increasing the limit?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Well, I presented an amendment to the chairman of the committee, and he informed me that it would be ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I think the chairman of the committee was probably mistaken as to that. It might go out on a vote.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman's amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] has reserved a point

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Does the gentleman from Colorado desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Yes. It is to strike out the semicolon and insert a period after the word "years" in line 1 of page 12, and to strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Seldomridge].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 12, by striking out the semicolon after the word "years," line 1, and inserting a period, and striking out the remainder of the in line 1, paragraph.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, is that on page 12? The CHAIRMAN. Yes; on page 12, line 1.

I reserve a point of order on that. Mr. COX.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves a

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if no one wants to be recognized on this side in opposition, I want to be recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think we might as well have the point of order ruled on.

The CHAIRMAN. No one has made a point of order.

Mr. COX. I reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know the gentleman made any point of order. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. COX. Yes; I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there may be instances where in third-class offices a larger allowance should be granted for rent, fuel, and light than the amount limited in this proviso, but to strike out at one fell swoop all limitation on the exercise of discretion by the Postmaster General as to the amount that he may allow for rent and fuel and light for third-class offices would be such action as I hardly think will meet with the approval of this House.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Would the gentleman be willing to increase the limitation?

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless the gentleman has some figures that he can present showing the need of some general modification, which has not been presented to the committee. I do not think it is good legislation, on the spur of the moment, to increase the In fact, in the administration of this provision the allowance. department has a scale of allowances based upon the amount of salary and the amount of business done at the respective thirdclass post offices. Several years ago we increased the allowance. I can not now recall how much that increase was. We raised the allowance not only for rent of the building but for fuel and light, and this appropriation has continued to mount up higher and higher each year, and we are continually granting increases and increases. There are not many instances, and I think it would be hard for the gentleman to find any instance, where in a third-class post office you can not obtain commodious accommodations for $500 a year rental.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Seldom-RIDGE] does not propose to strike out the proviso that in first, second, and third class post offices a reasonable annual rental shall be paid quarterly for a term of 10 years, and so forth. Now, as the committee has reported the bill, it is left with the Postmaster General to fix the rental on first and second class offices, together with the expense of fuel, and so forth. Why can we not allow him to do the same thing in third-class offices; and where certain conditions prevail where it might be expedient for the accommodation of the patrons and for the good of the service of the Government to pay .. little more than $500 why not permit him to do so?

Mr. STAFFORD. I fully explained to the committee that there is a different rule applied in the case of the leasing of first and second class offices than in the case of third-class offices. The department enters into an absolute lease for a period usually of 10 years, but not more than 10 years, in the case of the larger post offices-that is, at first and second class officeswhereas in the case of third-class offices the department does not enter into a lease, but grants an allowance to the postmaster, based on the amount of postal business of his office.

Now, I claim that in the administration of that feature of the bill, so far as third-class post offices are concerned, we, as the controllers of the policy of the department, should place some limit, so that the department can not of its own volition run wild in the expenditure of this sum. That has been the policy pursued by the committee for years and years in the administration of it, always limiting the maximum amount. If the maximum amount is not sufficient, then let the gentleman offer an amendment to increase the amount, but do not take away from the control of Congress all power over the administration of this rent allowance.

Mr. HAMLIN. If it is proper to fix the maximum amount of rentals of third-class offices, why does not the same reason apply to first and second class offices?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because in one instance we pay the money directly over to the third-class postmaster, whereas in the other cases we pay it to an outside person. Postmasters are creatures of politics, and it would be subject to abuse, as was evidenced in the post-office investigation 10 years ago, where it appeared that under the Machen and Beavers régime there were instances of unfair payments of this very appropriation. To cure that condition and prevent its recurrence-I am not making any charge that a recurrence is liable to occur under this administration—it is good business policy to place a limitation on this allowance which is paid directly to the postmasters themselves.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then why not change the method of leasing

these premises

HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, as a rule I scan appropriation bills with a great deal of care as they come into the House for consideration. In my judgment, the Post Office appropriation bill is one bill in which Congress can not afford to be miserly. For the service performed under these appropriations, the poor man and the rich man, the man who writes one letter week, and the great business corporation that sends out 10,000 letters a week, pay for what they get. It is the most democratic appropriation bill that comes into this House. The Government gets most of its money back, and I agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Seldomridge] that the Government ought not to be too miserly in appropriating money for the post offices throughout the country. They ought to be firstclass looking places. Why, in my State, in towns of 2,500 or 3,000 inhabitants, and in the third-class offices in the States of practically every gentleman within the sound of my voice, these third-class offices, doing a business of $6,000 to $10,000 per annum, are a disgrace to the Government of the United States. They ought to be liberal in their rental supply. Why, in cold weather-and down South we have cold weather sometimes, and I want to disabuse the minds of a good many of my colleagues who believe that we raise only negroes and cotton

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. MOON. The gentleman will notice that the bill carries an increased appropriation of $400,000, which the department thinks is altogether sufficient.

Mr. HOWARD. I have noticed that, but at the same time I do not see the wisdom of putting the limitation that is in this bill. In answer to my genial friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford], you can regulate any abuses that may creep in by your post-office inspectors. To-day when a postmaster wants to change his quarters, if he wants better quarters, if he wants to move his office, he has to submit his request to the Postmaster General for larger quarters, and that request in turn is submitted to an inspector. The inspector goes to the location, looks if over, sees the necessity, the part of the town in which the post office is situated, and he goes into the situation thoroughly. If he thinks the quarters are adequate he reports against a change or increase in rental for quarters.

As the gentleman from Missouri says, I can not see any difference in the principle applied to first and second class post offices and the third-class office. It is the difference between Stephen, come down, and Come down, Stephen.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows what is being paid in his district for the rent of a third-class post office to-day? In my district I believe that on an average the annual rental for third-class post offices is not over $200. So I take it that $500 is in nearly all cases a suffi-

Mr. HOWARD. In answer to my good friend from Missouri, admit that in a sparsely settled district like that of my friend, where rent is cheap, you can get a pretty fair building for $200 a year; but in a district like my own, where the people are thickly settled, where the climate and soil induce them to inhabit the country, where rent is higher, you can not get a decent post-office site suitable for my kind of folks for less than $500. [Laughter.] Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in response to what my friend from Georgia has just said about sparsely settled districts that the disrict I represent has in it by the last census over 296,000 people. I am satisfied it has as many inhabitants as the district that my friend from Georgia represents

Mr. HOWARD. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I have one town in my district that has as many people as he has in his whole district—the city of Atlanta.

Mr. RUSSELL. If what the gentleman from Georgia says is true, and all of his constituents live in one city, I do not see that he is particularly interested in this question. The district I represent has 423 post offices; a large number of them are in towns, and their post offices are in the third class. I do not see any particular distinction between a sparsely settled district and a more thickly settled district, where the towns are of the same size. I represent an agricultural district, very fertile and very wealthy, and the towns are rapidly growing. I know that in nearly all of the third-class post offices in my district $200 to $300 per annum is paid as rent. I believe that in nearly all cases the $500 limit fixed in this bill will be all that is required to pay the rent for third-class post offices in the United States, and I do not think it ought to be made larger.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if I catch the gentleman's amendment correctly, it is on page 12, beginning at the word "and," to strike out all down to and including the word "year." Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this amendment ought to carry. the amendment should carry, you would open the door to the Post Office Department to pay any amount of rent beyond what they are now paying. I think when that limitation was put on the appropriation bill in 1908 it was a very wise, just, and a well-safeguarded amendment, so as to keep the Post Office Department from paying more rent than was necessary for third-class offices.

Now, I do not like very much to detail conditions in my own town, but if third-class post offices are not properly equipped, in my judgment it is the fault largely of the citizens of that town. For instance, in my town, a little place of 2,500 inhabitants, a year or 18 months ago a couple of gentlemen desired to build a public building. They submitted the plans and specifications, in fact the blue prints, to the Post Office De-partment to see whether or not the Government of the United States would rent a certain portion of the building for a post office. In fact, that building was built under the supervision and direction of the Post Office Department, and the Government is now occupying a portion of the building for which they are paying $500 rent. The whole building cost about $14,000 or $15,000, and would be a credit to any town. It is a splendid place for a post office. Now, if this amendment should carry, if this provision is stricken from the appropriation bill, the doors are going to oe thrown wide open and the Postmaster General will be permitted to pay any sum that he sees fit, or that the inspector sees fit to recommend, for the rent of thirdclass post offices.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is not that true now as to the first and second class post offices?

Mr. COX. I do not know about that. Mr. HAMLIN. Of course there is no limitation at all.

Mr. COX. Probably that is wrong. If that is so, I will support an amendment, if the gentleman will offer it, limiting the amount that can be paid for rent for first and second class post offices. I am not in favor at all of turning this thing absolutely over to the Postmaster General and permitting him to send out inspectors and let them make contracts for any amount. I am in favor of hedging them about in such a manner as will fix a limitation on the amount that can be expended as rent for third-class post offices.

Mr. HAMLIN. If that is the gentleman's position—he is on the Post Office Committee-why has there not been a limitation placed on the first and second class post offices?

Mr. COX. It is the first time that the matter has been called to my attention. If the gentleman will frame such an amendment, I will gladly support it.

Mr. HAMLIN. But I do not want to frame such an amendment. I am willing to risk the judgment of the Postmaster General.

Mr. COX. I am not. I would rather risk the judgment of the Congress of the United States and fix the amount that an inspector can pay, giving him such latitude as we think in our wisdom he is entitled to.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] commented the other day on the terrible increase in post-office robberies. Does the gentleman not think that if the Government of the United States were to make these third-class offices-and they are mostly the ones that are burglarizedmore secure, there would not be such temptation offered to people to burglarize them?

Mr. COX. I do not know about that. An argument has been made here against the poor old sinner, parcel post. Mr. Chairman, of all the unfortunate individuals that has been ever set up as a ghost, it is the parcel post. He is cursed for all of the iniquities of the post office when we come to a question of increase in appropriations, and yet he is held up and commended for the fact that it is out of his service alone that we are getting a surplus to-day. Had it not been for the inauguration of the parcel post, to-day, instead of having the Post Office Department running along practically balancing accounts, we would be wrestling with a tremendous deficit.

[The time of Mr. Cox having expired, by unanimous consent

he was granted one minute more. 1

The argument has been made that because of parcel post this limitation should be taken off, and the Postmaster General and his inspectors given authority to go out and make larger contracts for larger buildings. I do not believe it is necessary at all. Again, I call the attention of this committee to the fact that, if you take this limitation off, in my judgment, you open the doors to a tremendous expenditure of the people's money. We have gone along well for the last five or six years, with a limitation placed upon it, and, if we have gotten along with it that long, I think we can get along with it for five or six years more.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, my recollection of the limitation is that it was placed on third-class post offices in 1904. My colleague says 1908. I will say this, that it was found that many abuses had crept into the service because of the fact that in localities, various towns in the same situation, alike in almost every respect, the contract price agreed upon for the rental of the post office varied greatly. It was charged—I do not say whether correctly or incorrectly—that it was through the favoritism of the Post Office Department; but, at any rate, this limitation was placed upon the rental of third-class post offices for a wise and good reason, for a reason that would not hinder the efficiency of the service in any respect, and it was supposed to give to every third-class post office in the country about what was necessary in the way of rent for these post offices. I would not like to see this limitation taken off, and I think it should not be taken off. The limitation was placed there for a good reason. The reason is being carried out, and if you remove this limitation then there is no telling what may be paid in any locality as rent for a third-class post office.

I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado should be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class, $350,000, of which sum $25,000 may be used for the purchase of post-office equipment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words beginning in line 6, "of which sum $25,000 may be used for the purchase of post-office equipment." The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 12, line 6, by striking out all of the paragraph after "$350,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrogate the gentleman. I was going to ask the gentleman to explain why

Mr. MOON. The purchase of supplies has been transferred from the First Assistant's office to the Fourth Assistant's office, and the language here proposed to be stricken out covers both and will come under the miscellaneous items of the Fourth Assistant's office.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman intends to offer the provision at another section of the bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes; it is intended to put this language back in that section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, why did not the gentleman reduce the amount of this appropriation if he strikes out the use of $25,000 of it?

Mr. MOON. I do not know that it will be necessary to do There is a limitation on the appropriation, and the same limitation will go on the language of the other appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I know; but there is an appropriation of $350,000, of which $25,000 may be used for the purchase of postoffice equipment. Now, the gentleman proposes to cut out that $25,000 and to put it in somewhere else. Why not reduce the appropriation here?

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to it, if the committee desires to do so. Any proposition to reduce expenditures—
Mr. MANN. But is not that the logical thing to do, if that $25,000 is to be added somewhere else?

Mr. MOON. I will move to make this appropriation $325,000 instead of $350,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will vote on the amendment first offered by the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. I had understood that the committee had voted, and that it had been carried.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it had not.

Mr. MOON. Very well.

The question was taken, and the first amendment was agreed to

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 6, page 12, by striking out "$350,000" and inserting "$325,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for letter carriers absent without pay, and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade, City Delivery Service, $37,700,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 17, after the word "Service," strike out "$37,700,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$38,000,000, whereby carriers at second-class offices may become eligible to promotion to the sixth grade."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. MANN.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order Mr. MOON.

for five minutes

Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this Mr. TREADWAY. amendment is to call attention to the fact that carriers in the second-class offices can not receive within $100 as much salary as the men doing exactly the same class of work in the first-class offices do. I have an instance in my district of carriers from a second-class office adjoining those from a first-class office, having exactly the same kind of work to do, the same community to serve, and all the conditions and expense of living the same, and, I submit, there can be no good reason more.

why these men should not be entitled to receive the identical pay that the men in the first-class office receive who do the same class of work, and who serve adjoining territory. I am informed that there are 2,935 carriers in second-class offices. I therefore offer this amendment increasing the amount whereby carriers in second-class offices can be promoted to become carriers of the sixth grade. Also, in this connection, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested the last time this bill was before the House to see the interest taken in the consideration of the bill by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray], who probably at no distant date will become postmaster of our great city of Boston. This interest was shown in the way in which he interrogated the members of the committee in reference to the bill and suggestions he offered. I am very glad, indeed, that he is preparing himself for the able service which he will be expected to render, and for which he has ample capacity. The present postmaster of Boston has conducted the office with such marked ability that our colleague on this floor will require a great deal of acumen, and also of judgment, to fill the position with the same ability which the present Republican incumbent has shown. I fully expect to see my colleague make good and retain the present high standard of the office.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think it can be stated as a general proposition that the compensation of rural carriers is not sufficient, and, in fact, it can be stated in reference to a great many other employees of the Post Office Department that their compensation is not commen-surate with the services rendered. And this leads me, Mr. Chairman, to call attention of the Post Office Committee to the guaranty feature of this bill, contained in section 14, which, I believe, though recommended by the Postmaster General, would be ill-advised legislation, and would impose an additional burden upon postal employees.

In the first place, it would be objectionable because I believe the idea of Government guaranty is objectionable. I have not the time to go into that question, but I wish to point out in the few moments allotted to me the specific objections which I have to that provision. First, I think a mere inspection of the provision will show and will convince any reasonable mind that the cost to the employees of the Government will be greater if a portion of their salaries is deposited in the fund—

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOON. Is the gentleman talking on this subject or something else?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I will ask the gentleman to not raise the point on that question. I am obliged to be in a committee soon, and I think I will be there when the guaranty section comes up.

Mr. MOON. All right; I will let you have a chance. Go ahead.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I am frank to say that I am talking on something other than the immediate section now under consideration by the House.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is apparent that the cost to the employees of the Government will be greater when this deposit is made out of their salaries than it would be by paying a guaranty company a small premium on their bonds. That is the first objection. The second objection is that it would be punishing the innocent for the faults of the guilty. It will be requiring employees who are honest and careful in the discharge of their duties to pay for the misdoings and faults of those who are not.

Mr. Chairman, a very serious objection, and an objection which I desire to call to the attention of the committee, is the fact that in section 14 it provides:

That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations for the establishment and maintenance of a guaranty fund, to be derived from assessments levied against and collected from officers and employees of the Postal Service accountable for funds or property, with which to make good losses resulting from the failure of any officer or employee of the Postal Service to properly discharge his official duties, and for the indemnification of the Government and any person or persons sustaining such loss or losses by payments out of such fund.

The point I make there, Mr. Chairman, is that it puts upon those who receive Government funds, those accountable for funds or property, not only the burden of losses caused by those who handle the funds, but also the burden of losses resulting from the failure of any employee of the Postal Service to discharge his duty

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I would like just one minute

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted from this language that those who receive funds, or, in the language of this bill, who are accountable for funds or property are constituted a class by themselves, and upon them will fall the burden of making good any loss which may be caused not only by those in their class but by any employee of the Govern-ment. I think, therefore, outside of the objection to the principle of Government guaranty, outside of the increased expense which will be caused by this new method, that this section is objectionable because of the unjust burden it would place on this class of postal employees, and that now that the attention of the committee has been called to it it will agree that this provision of the appropriation bill should be eliminated.

I am opposed to that provision, and inasmuch as I do not believe I can be here when it comes up for consideration I wished to state my reasons now for such objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] insist on this point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway]?

Mr. MOON. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I get the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]? In the current law was carried an appropriation of $10,000 to pay rewards for inventions, and so forth, or new devices. The transfer from the first to the fourth assistant was carried at this point, but is that carried anywhere else?

Mr. MOON. I think it will be found in that section. If it is not, we can put it on.

Mr. MANN. Then it was not the intention to drop it entirely?

Mr. MOON. No. Mr. MANN. Very well; it can be taken care of. I do not think it is carried-

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will look on page 3, under the pay of the Postmaster General, I think he will find it.

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. Oh, no; that is not what I referred to. That is for the payment of awards for arrests, and What I have reference to is the item in the current law providing that the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to pay periodically a cash reward for the invention, suggestion, or series of suggestions for an improvement or economy in device, design, or process applicable to the Postal Service submitted by one or more employees of the Post Office Department, and so forth, where an appropriation of $10,000 is made to cover it. I did not suppose it was the thought of the committee to drop the idea.

Mr. MOON. I will say to the gentleman that it does not appear in this part of the bill. I do not recall it.

Mr. MANN. Very likely it belongs under the First Assistant Postmaster General. I do not know about that. Under the change that is made, I think it is not carried anywhere in the

Mr. MOON. We will take that matter up when we get to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For horse-hire allowance, the hiring of drivers, and the rental of vehicles, $2,000,000.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25, page 12, erase the figures "$2,000,000" and insert the words and figures "$6,280,500: Provided, That of this sum $100 shall be allowed annually to each rural carrier for equipment."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. Mr. BATHRICK. I hope the gentleman will reserve it for a moment

Mr. MOON. I will reserve it—for how long?
Mr. BATHRICK. Two minutes.
Mr. MOON. All right; for two minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves a point of order.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, in the city the letter carrier is allowed from $240 to $400, in many instances, for equipment or for horse hire. His vehicles and equipment are used upon the pavement of the cities. The equipment of the rural carrier suffers the wear out of country roads. The rural letter carrier has his salary increased in this bill by the sum of

I have in my possession some statistics of the costs to rural letter carriers for the care of their equipment. The average cost of wear and tear is $445.44 per year on about 38 cases which were submitted to me in detail, leaving the average net salary of the rural carrier $538.72 per year.

If my amendment prevails, it will allow $100 per year for equipment to each rural letter carrier in this country, which is $140 to $300 less than that which is frequently allowed to the city letter carrier. I think the amendment, in all justice to the rural letter carrier, considering the added expense and wear and tear because of the parcel post, which has added an increased income to this department, should be added to this

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For street car collection service, $10,000.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 2, after "$10,000," strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "Provided, That hereafter provision shall be made with all street car companies transporting mail for free transportation of all letter carriers when in uniform.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] reserves a point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this matter was called to my attention too late to bring it before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads while they were framing their bill. It was brought to my attention by the president of Branch No. 34 of the National Letter Carriers' Association.

I am advised that a number of the street car companies have propositions now pending with the Post Office Department for an increase of compensation for the carrying of mails and transporting of letter carriers. There is no uniformity of practice or custom in the various cities of the country with regard to the transportation of letter carriers in uniform. In some communities I understand the local transportation companies are very glad to extend, as a courtesy, the right of riding free to the carriers when in uniform. In other cities that courtesy not extended. Under certain conditions the Post Office Department furnishes to some of the carriers a certain number of street car tickets a day. In one city, at least—the city of Washington—the letter carriers are transported to and from the post office in automobiles,

The purpose and intent of the amendment I have offered is to have the Post Office Department make provision, when it is making its contracts for the transportation of mails with the street car companies-and if this amendment prevails I shall offer one to apply to contracts with the steam roadswhereby the street car companies and the steam roads will, as a matter of contract with the Government, transport the carriers free of charge when they are in uniform.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I certainly will.
Mr. MADDEN. This provision only contemplates the expenditure of $10,000 in the whole United States for street car collection service, and we have over 3,000 letter carriers in Chicago alone. They all ride on the street cars free; but the question of giving them the right to ride on the street cars is a matter between the municipality and the street car company. The Government of the United States has no right to contract that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I do not agree with the gentleman there. I think the Government can contract.
Mr. MADDEN. But we only expend $10,000 altogether in the United States for this purpose.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachuset's. I realize that, and my impression is that there will not be very much increase in the amount of the contract for the transportation of the carriers

Mr. MADDEN. We are spending $525,000 for street car fare Does the gentleman think the street car companies would contract for $10,000 worth of work for the Government to do $525,000 worth of transportation of carriers free?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Oh, no; not at all. amendment prevails, I shall offer it at still another place in the bill. , As I looked over the bill hurriedly, it seemed to me that this was the first place where it could be properly offered.

I have the impression, and I am advised by my correspondent, who is the president of a letter carriers' association, that if the Government will take up this matter by contract with the transportation lines, not only will they not increase the total amount paid for the transportation of carriers, but they will effect a saving, and that the Government can have all of the carriers transported for less money than is now being paid under the carfare provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. MOON. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experimental village-delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class that are not by law now entitled to Free Delivery Service, $200,000.

I reserve a point of order. Mr. MANN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. McKenzie. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Two gentlemen reserve a point of order, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie] offers an The Chair thinks the point of order on the paraamendment. graph should be disposed of before any amendment is offered. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It shows on its face that it is subject to a point of order, because it is for a service not now authorized by law. There is no question about it being subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOON. The Chair knows that there is now such a

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it is not now authorized by law. Mr. MOON. This paragraph is in the language of the current law and is now being executed. It is in the identical language of the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that, but the gentleman himself knows that it is not in order, because it is included in the proposed rule which he has introduced to make it in order in case anybody should interpose a point of order.

Mr. MOON. That was put there for the purpose of avoiding any trouble.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no question that it is not in order, but I want to make some inquiries about the provision.

The Postmaster General and the First Assistant Postmaster General, in their annual reports, point out that this service is neither profitable nor satisfactory and recommend that it be discontinued and make no estimate for the ensuing fiscal year. For the current year $150,000 is appropriated. Despite the recommendations of the Postmaster General and the First Assistant the committee recommends an appropriation of $200,000. Now, will the gentleman explain why the committee takes this attitude.

Mr. FINLEY. The committee placed this appropriation in the last appropriation bill. The provision has been found satisfactory in its operation in the judgment of the members of the Post Office Committee, or at least a majority of them. There is some proposition in the minds of the officials of the Post Office Department to change the performance of this service from one branch of postal employees to another branch. I believe that the proposition is to have this service largely performed by rural carriers. I want to say that in the judgment of the Post Office Committee that procedure is impracticable and will be found absolutely unsatisfactory as well as impracticable. This is current law, and the committee, believing that the service is warranted by conditions and that it makes for the efficiency of the service, have included it here. I may for the emerge of the service, have included it here. I may say that this has been the practice for a long time. I believe I have seen it ruled both ways, but I do not think there is a great deal in the point of order. That is an explanation of the reasons actuating the Post Office Committee. We believe this is for the good of the service. It is in the current law te continue a work now in progress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The mere fact that the Post Office Depertment is doing a particular service

Mr. STEENERSON. On the point of order I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Frrz-GERALD] and the chairman to the section of the existing law, which reads:

That after June 30, 1912, experimental mail delivery may be established, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to enable postmasters to employ the necessary assistance to deliver the mail in such villages, and the amount to be expended at any office shall not exceed $1,800 a year.

It says expressly that after June 30, 1912, the Postmaster General, in towns and villages having post offices of the second and third class that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service, may make such regulations, and the provisions in this bill increases the appropriation from $100,000 to $200,000. Now, in the current law it is said "that after June 30, 1912," and that makes it permanent law.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General in his annual report calls attention to the fact that under the appropriation for the current year an experiment has been conducted-in the free delivery of mail from post offices of the second and third classes located in communities that are not now entitled by law to City Delivery Service. At the close of the fiscal year the service had been established at 18 post offices of the second and 83 of the third class. A total of 126 carriers were employed for the purpose and the average annual compensation of each was $625.

The results attained during the year are believed not to warrant the continuance or extension of village delivery. There is no such need or demand for free delivery of mail in small towns and villages as there is in cities and rural districts, and its establishment does not occasion any appreciable increase in the use of the mails. An economical administration of such a service would require the limiting of delivery in nearly every instance to one a day and the employment of carriers at salaries lower than those paid to city and rural carriers. Such service is regarded as inferior by the patrons, who in such communities live near the post office and are in the habit of calling two or three times a day for their mail. The low salaries of the carriers, moreover, would not conduce to efficient service.

The First Assistant Postmaster General points out that the

The First Assistant Postmaster General points out that the extension of the Rural and City Delivery Service fosters, as a rule, the greater use of the mail and an increase of postal recelpts. This, however, has not resulted from the establishment of the village experimental delivery, as the report shows an increase of revenue at these offices of only 2.65 per cent, which is no more than the ordinary annual increase in business. On the other hand, the present average cost of operating the experi-mental delivery service constitutes 11.86 per cent of the revenue of the office.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the ge Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that the postage of local letters in these experimental places is still 1 cent and not 2 cents, as is the delivery in the city. So there would be no increase of the revenue of the postage by the stamps on local letters. I know that is a fact one place, because I saw the report of the postmaster.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true of one experimental place in my district

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I could not catch quite what the gentleman from Minnesota said, and I am trying to find the law that he referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has that law. It is as follows:

That after June 30, 1912, experimental mail delivery may be established, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to enable postmasters to employ the necessary assistance to deliver the mail in such villages, and the amount to be expended at any office shall not exceed $1,800 a year.

The Chair will ask the gentleman whether that does not make this permanent law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it does.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, no doubt an amendment could be framed which would comply with the law. They have simply copied this provision into the present bill. The Chair will note that this paragraph provides for such post offices of the second and third class as are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service. It is not sufficient to sustain that to say that Congress three years ago experimentally authorized experimental service in towns and villages not entitled then to free-delivery service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the words "are not now entitled by law" superfluous, and unless they are stricken out the Chair would have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would be glad to see an amendment properly presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have to sustain the point of order, because the experimental delivery is now allowed by Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, that act was passed in 1912, and it says "on and after June 30, 1912," a specified date. At that time these offices were not allowed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is that under that very act the experimental delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second and third class was allowed by law.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words that are not by law entitled to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee, as the Chair understands, moves to strike out the words "are not now by law entitled to free-delivery service."

Mr. MOON. I move to strike out the words in lines 14 and 15 "that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service." The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee, as the Chair understands it, moved to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

For experimental village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $200,000.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the amendment. I have already called attention to what has been said by the Postmaster General and the First Assistant Postmaster General regarding this service, that it had not only not been profitable but it had been practically of no benefit whatever to the patrons of the offices in which it had been established. It has been tried for about two years. In the first year $100,000 was expended, and for the current year $150,000 was authorized and is being expended. Yet in the face of the recommendations of the First Assistant Postmaster General, who pointed out the results of the experiment, this bill carries an appropriation of $200,000, which is not requested—$50,000 increase over the amount provided for in the current law. Everyone interested in the Postal Service desires that the facilities of the Post Office Department shall be extended so as to afford the greatest accommodations possible to the people of the country within reasonable limits. It is not expected that all classes of the service shall be pecuniarily profitable. Some portions are and some are not profitable and will be conducted at a loss, but when in a case like this it is pointed out, and it is well known to men who live in the smaller communities, that there is no real demand among the people who live there for this service, that they will not wait for mail to be delivered once a day, but naturally visit the post office two or three times a day, it seems to me indefensible to appropriate $200,000 in order to afford service of this character.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Post-master General or the First Assistant has named any community which has been granted this service, or if he knows any community that has been granted the service where the patrons of such service are not satisfied or where the patrons have made any complaint?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, neither the Postmaster General nor the First Assistant has indicated any particular community by name, but Representatives in this House who live in such communities have informed me that they know that this service is of no special benefit, and it is the activities of some Members of the House attempting to build up back fire upon men who think it may be of some benefit to them, that perhaps is influencing the actions of some in not antagonizing this provision.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this: That one of the experimental free-delivery services was established in a town in my district. It was established at the overwhelming petition of the patrons of the office, and it went into effect on the 1st of July, 1913, according to my recollection. The suggestion had been made that it be discontinued, and from the patrons of that office I have had letters asking me, if I could prevent it, to prevent the discontinuance of it; that it had been of incalculable benefit to the patrons of that office.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman from New York to state that Members of this House have informed him that this service was not satisfactory in their dis-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not make any such statement. Mr. GRIEST. I am very glad to know that the gentleman did not make that statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am stating what both the Postmaster General and his First Assistant stated—that it was of no peculiar benefit. They can make deliveries only once a day, and patrons at these offices want their mail and call for it two and three times a day. This is not a special development of the Postal Service, and is not desired. I have been informed that it has been suggested that perhaps this service, to some extent, might be worked out in connection with the present Rural Free Delivery Service, but I understand the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] to have said that that was not feasible. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the Postal Service of the United States, so far as the delivery of mail to the people is concerned, is yet quite incomplete. We are delivering mail in the city in which the gentleman lives six and seven and eight times a day. I the people are pleased with it and are anxious to have it con-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MOON. We used to do it. I do not know how often they have been cut down. Where does the gentleman live-in Brooklyn or New York

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I live in both places.

Mr. MOON. In New York and in the larger cities they get very frequent delivery of the mail. They are getting mail de-livered two and three times a day in the other cities of the country. The people of the rural districts are having $50.000,000 early expended upon them for the free delivery of their mail.

Now, in the small villages and the towns of the United States many of them having a population that is scattered over a large area, there are from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 of people who are not getting the benefits of the mail service that the people in the remote parts of the country are getting and that the great cities are getting. This is intended to cover a system of experiments by which we may ultimately extend the mail to all the people of the United States who can possibly get it under the most prosperous conditions. It is going to cost money, it is bound to cost a good deal of money. You can not make this extension without it costing money, but here for the purpose of further trying out this matter we have increased the appropriation only $50,000. Now the Postmaster General insists that he can inaugurate a system, possibly in connection with the rural-route carriers, by which these people may get the same benefits that the city people and the country people get, but if we strike out of this bill the experimental service there is nothing for him to further operate upon. He would have no law upon which to act. He would have no discretion in the performance of this duty. It is entirely essential that this law remains when the figures fixed here only increase the amount $50,000 in order that we may retain intact now the service and increase it and give the Postmaster General an opportunity to work out the plan for the final extension of the service to all the people. There is not a place I know of-of course, I do not know of all of them to which it has been extended, but I have heard of many-that the people did not protest very strongly against taking away this privilege, so I hope the House will support this section.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzersald], that the people in small villages can only get one service and approximately against taking away this privilege. ice a day under a free-delivery system unless a very great sum of money is expended annually.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FARR.

Mr. LINDBERGH. In a moment. I have letters from many persons in various villages within my district, in which they say they would be much better served if they could get free box rent at their offices. They feel they are entitled to it, and it would not cost the Government as much as this proposed service. Now, as a matter of fact, if they have free boxes they go to the post office two or three times a day. They are all of them living in proximity to the post office, and they will get much better service if they have their boxes free than to depend on free delivery in the small villages. They feel they have a right to have free box rent, inasmuch as everybody get their mail free, many of them two or three times a day, and in business sections four or five, in the cities. That is the position taken by the people in the various villages in the district which I represent, so far as I have heard from them. They state that they want free boxes, inasmuch as other people in the farming districts and cities are delivered mail free, and that is all they ask for. They do not ask for free delivery, because they can only have, as the gentleman from New York stated, delivery once a day, except in the larger villages, where they might have two deliveries, and therefore they would rather have box rent free and get their mail when they please. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARR. A number of these places in my district and within the State have two deliveries a day. I have one in my county with two deliveries a day.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do not know how that is, but they figure they would only get one delivery a day in the small villages. I am not opposed to free delivery in the villages; but in the smaller of them, and in all cases where mail can not be delivered more than once a day, I know it would cost the Government much less and I think be more satisfactory to the people to have box rent free,

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Lindbergh] is mistaken in regard to the character of service given in these smaller places. There are in most of them, I understand, two deliveries a day. I am familiar with some of them. The service has been established and is in operation in one of the small cities in my district;

tinued. When I learned that the matter was to be brought up in the House when the appropriation bill was to be considered I wrote a large number of citizens, business men and others, in this little city where the service is in operation. I think I heard from every one, and every reply was favorablevery much so. I am sure that our people are being well served and at not very much expense. The postmaster writes me that he is able to carry on the work of his office with less help, with fewer clerks, at less expense than before the service was established. And I will say, also, in my opinion the suggestion of the Postmaster General of supplying this service by the rural carriers could not be carried out. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be adopted.

Mr. FINLEY, Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, and Mr.

STEENERSON rose.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman The CHAIRMAN.

from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Firz-GERALD] states that the Postmaster General has another plan or scheme by which he proposes to work this out. I know of no law, as the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, has stated, except as contained in the last appropriation bill, and unless it is worked out under that I do not know exactly how the matter will be reached. However that is, I stated a moment ago that the scheme was absolutely impracticable to have the rural carriers perform this service.

Now, at what time do they start out? As soon as the principal morning mail arrives the rural carrier, within 20 or 30 minutes thereafter, usually gets his mail and starts on his day's journey. Now, if you will take the figures compiled by the Joint Committee on Federal Aid in the Construction of Post Roads, page 8, you will find that the average time required by a rural carrier to make his round is 6 hours and 41 minutes. Now, that would leave only 1 hour and 19 minutes. Does anyone think that, on the average, a rural carrier could do this work in that time? In some places there are no rural carriers. At some of these third-class offices and at some of the second-class offices there are no rural carriers. So when you take many of the States you will find the time required by a rural carrier to go his rounds is, as in Alabama, 7 hours and 14 minutes; in Arkansas, 7 hours and 2 minutes; in Mississippi, 7 hours and 26 minutes; in South Carolina, 6 hours and 23 minutes; and in West Virginia, 7 hours and 44 minutes. But the average, as I have stated, is 6 hours and 41 minutes. So if the rural carrier takes up, substantially speaking, all of eight hours a day, no one would expect him to work longer than this in going his round.

But is the service satisfactory? In the town of Winnsboro, S. C., in Fairfield County, in the fifth congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, I made inquiries concerning the matter. I believe they have two deliveries a day. That town is 2 miles in diameter, namely, 1 mile from the center to the extreme edge of the town. I inquired of a gentleman whom I was satisfied knew whereof he spoke, and he stated that it was of great benefit and advantage to those living away from the immediate vicinity of the post office, and that otherwise mail would not go to the residences until from 1 to 2 o'clock in the day, when the business men went home to dinner. My information, gleaned from others besides this gentleman, is that it is a satisfactory service, that it is an efficient one, and, taken in connection with the benefits and the service given to other sections of the United States, it is a necessary service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] has expired.

Mr. TOWNER, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is a misapprehension in regard to the matter before the House. As I understand, the matter now pending is the motion of the chairman of the committee to strike out from the paragraph the words "that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] to insert a new paragraph, the former paragraph having been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well. There is some misapprehension on the part of some gentleman in regard to the matter. They think that this is a matter relating to the merits of the case as suggested by the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] is recognized.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this provision of law vas recommended by the Postmaster General in 1912, and I introduced the bill that provided for that recommendation to be carried into effect. It was put into the appropriation bill for 1913, and under that authority this service was inaugurated as an experiment, and the experiment has been very successful. I will put in the RECORD the bill I introduced in 1912, which was afterwards made a part of the appropriation bill for that year. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Griest] has compiled the figures, and they show that 114 post offices in 40 States, with 126 carriers, have been served in this way during the last

These towns range in population from 1,000 to 7,000, and have gross receipts ranging from $2.500 to $9,000, it being necessary to have receipts up to $10,000, or 10.000 population, before free delivery can be had under the general law.

Now, this experiment has not been a failure. The Post Office Department officials who have appeared before the Committee the Post Office and Post Roads stated that they did not estimate for the appropriation, because they wanted to try to extend the Rural Delivery Service in such a way as to serve this class of villages, but on further discussion they admitted that it was not practicable to do so, and I think they have labored under a misapprehension. I believe that to-day, since further information has come in, the Post Office Department officials would concede that this experiment has been a success. As stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the experiment can not be continued unless we make the appropriation.

With these general words of authority contained in this provision, they can make the experiment in such a way as they deem just. They can change or modify the existing plan, or combine it with the Rural Delivery Service if they want to. We would thus authorize the department to carry on this experiment as they may deem wise. I submit that the committee ought to allow this appropriation of $200.000, because it affects the population that is now without Free Delivery Service, namely, the people in the villages. They are a very important part of the population of the country.

The cities of 10,000 population, or $10,000 postal receipts, have free delivery, the farmers have the rural delivery, and these small towns and villages without free delivery combine a population estimated at 20,000,000. These people contribute to postal receipts fully as much as any other equal number, and they are in justice entitled to consideration. It is simple justice, and I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

The bill above referred to and letter from the postmaster at

Ada, Minn., follow:

A bill (H. R. 19947) to provide for the introduction of village mail delivery.

Be it enacted, etc., That after June 30, 1912, experimental mail delivery may be established, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, in towns and villages having a population of 1,000 or more, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to enable postmasters to employ the necessary assistance to deliver the mail in such villages, and the amount to be expended at any office shall not exceed $1,800 a year.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE,
POSTAL SAVINGS BANK,
Ada, Minn., July 9, 1913.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson, Crookston, Minn.

Dear Mr. Steenerson: Experimental city delivery of mail was established in Ada December 15, 1912, and on March 16, 1913, Inspector Lucy, of Fargo, N. Dak, visited us and reported conditions after a three-months' trial of the service. The people of Ada have enjoyed the service for over seven months: we are still without the collection boxes. Our citizens are pleased with the service and would never consent to having it taken away from them. The commercial club has gone to the expense of placing street signs on all corners, and all the houses in the city have been numbered. I am receiving inquiries every day as to when the collection boxes are to be installed and the service completed.

If you are conversant with conditions in this line of the mail service, wish you would let me know why our collections are so long delayed.

Thanking you for the information and your kindness in this respect in the past, Respectfully,

C. E. WARD, Postmaster.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the law authorizing free delivery in second or third class post offices provides that such free delivery may be had where the annual income of the post office is $10,000 or the population of the city or village wherein such post office is located is 10,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a "twilight zone" about the $10,000-income office which is as much entitled to free delivery as the post office which is entitled to free delivery under the law. The city or village post office which has an annual income of $9,000 in many instances embodies all of the features which confer free delivery, except it is short on its income by $1.000; or the city that has a population of 9,000 people has in many instances all of the necessary requirements for free delivery that the 10,000-population city has, except it is short by 1,000

This provision was intended to give relief to that character of cities and villages wherein post offices of the second and third classes are established which are not up to the standard of $10,000 income or 10,000 inhabitants.

Mr. Chairman, I have seen in my district people at the post offices not entitled to free delivery standing in line for an hour at a time in order to be served with the mail. That is a waste of time on the part of the citizen, and the object of this provision is to give relief in such cases. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this provision of the bill is one of the most useful and necessary provisions in this bill.

There is no reason why free delivery should not be extended to the people in small towns and villages the same as is now had in large towns and cities, and to the people in the country. The effort on the part of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to prevent the desired extension of this service as provided by this amendment is unfair. He has his mail brought to his door and delivered to him at the expense of the United States. Although he is a Member of this House, he is no better than the man who lives in a small town which does not have such free delivery. [Applause.]

has expired.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on the Mr. COX. subject under inquiry. Having opposed this provision in the committee and reserved the right to express my views, I do not thing I violate any confidence in making my statement.

I am not in favor of it. I do not believe and can not believe that there is a widespread demand for this legislation. I believe as a rule that under similar conditions men operate along similar lines. I think we will all agree upon this proposition, that in the case of a business man in a little town of 1,500 or 2,000 or 3,000 people the first thing he does in the morning after he eats his breakfast is to go direct to the post office and get his mail, and from there direct to his place of business

The business man in the large city, of course, goes straight to his office, where he finds his mail awaiting him. What will be the result if this becomes a law? In my judgment, the carriers in these smaller towns will not be in a position to start out delivering the mail from second and third class post offices until 9 o'clock in the morning, and by that time the business man, who is the real support and maintenance of the post office at that place, has gone to the post office, got his mail, gone to his office, and answered his letters. So I do not believe there is any demand for this kind of legislation at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question only. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Have the business men in these little towns preferred any requests to the Post Office Committee touching this matter?

Mr. COX. None that I know of.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Have not a number of requests been filed with the committee?

Mr. COX. Not that I know of.
Mr. MOON. A great many demands for this service have

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman has said that the business man goes to the post office on the way to his office. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the business man's wife and children and the other members of his family at home are not also entitled to receive their mail promptly?

Mr. COX. The question put to me by the gentleman from Georgia is a very proper question. In these little towns the children as a rule go to the post office and get the mail. They go there before they go to school. They step there at the noon hour when school adjourns and get the mail again, and they go there when school closes in the evening and take the mail home. I know what I am talking about, because I live in one of these little towns. I refuse to yield any further.

The question was asked a moment ago as to what this was going to cost. The Second Assistant Postmaster General said it is conservatively estimated that the operation of a satisfactory mail delivery from all second and third class offices will cost the Government ultimately $10,000,000 a year. This is the foundation for that appropriation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I should like to, but I can not. I think the mistake was made in ever yielding to the request or demand of the Postmaster General that this service be inaugurated; but this is another proof that when once you begin an appropriation it continues to grow and grow and grow.

I would be entirely in favor of this if I believed that it was really demanded by the class of people whom it would serve, city of Brooklyn, in which lives my friend from New York or that it would really add to the efficiency of the administration of the postal laws; but I am unable to see where it will add to the efficiency in any way whatever.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I desire to detain the committee only a moment. I wish to say that the people of my district do not enjoy this service, but they want it, and I hope it will be extended to them. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in behalf of experimental mail delivery. About a year ago it was inaugurated in the town in which I live, and I desire to say that the service there has been entirely satisfactory and the people want it continued.

A few days ago I received a letter from the mayor of my town asking me whether any effort would be made to do away with this service. He seemed to have gotten the idea from some source, I do not know where, that there would be an effort made to discontinue it. He told me that if necessary he could furnish a petition signed by practically every patron of the office in my town asking that this service be continued.

I am surprised that the opposition to this proposition should have started to-day from a Representative who comes from a great city, where they have every mail facility on earth that can possibly be asked, where their mail comes to them four or five times a day. Yet when we are getting these postal facilities started for the benefit of the people in the smaller towns and cities of two or three thousand people objection is made to it.

I wish to refer to the matter suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] a moment ago. While you are talking about the business men who go down to their offices in the morning and get their mail, what about the women and children at home? They get their mail by this delivery, and when the business man goes down town in the morning and opens his business mail he does not have to send his wife's letters home to her or she does not have to wait until noontime to get her mail. She gets it in the morning and in the afternoon. The service in my city has been eminently satisfactory, and I sincerely hope the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee will be agreed to.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, one town-Peckville, Pa.-in my district is enjoying the benefits of this service. There are several other towns in that district that are very anxious to get it. The work is being effectively done. I will read a letter from the postmistress of that town, who mentions some advantages that I have not heard advanced on the floor.

that I have not heard advanced on the floor.

My Dear Sir: I am, indeed, very glad to be allowed to tell you of the success of the free delivery of mall under the experimental or village-delivery law at this office. We can not be termed a small village, as we serve a population of 7,000 and cover an area of 3 miles in length and 2½ in breadth, and since the establishment of free delivery here, August 15, 1913, we have reached every part of this territory twice daily. By comparison, we handle more mall and give better service than the average city carrier, at very much less expense to the department. Many of our patrons are 2 miles from the office, and the delivery to them has been the greatest boon. The loss of it would be a calamity you can not realize. They could not be served from a rural free-delivery route, as there is not one in this section.

The gross proceeds of this office for the three quarters of the present fiscal year show a gain over that of last year of $224.05. Considering that the revenue from box rent is lessened by carriers, and that parcelpost rates are so much cheaper, this increase is definite and decided.

I trust that the House will continue to provide for this service

I trust that the House will continue to provide for this service in this appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]. I do not believe it is a fair construction of the language of the First Assistant Postmaster General to say that he was against this provision when before the committee, because, in reading his statement before the committee, the only fair construction that can be placed upon it is that he expects to work out a plan whereby the rural carriers can do this service. I ask you, in those cases where there are no rural carriers going out of the small villages, how would you expect to get the service to the people in those villages?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARRISON. For a question.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not true that the report of the Assistant Postmaster General, or his recommendation, is based upon some reports made by some post-office inspectors, and that he had not heard from the postmasters or from the people of these villages?

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is true. I want to say, further, that I do not believe that this Democratic administration has had sufficient time to give this experiment a fair trial. I believe that the appropriation should be carried so that the experiment may continue. I can not understand why people who live in small towns and villages should not be permitted to have the mail delivered to them the same as it is in the great [Mr. Fitzgerald]. I notice in this bill that there is an appropriation carried for the pay of letter carriers in cities of $37,700,000. That is for the benefit of the constituents of my friend from New York and those gentlemen who come from the large cities. I submit that to ask $200,000 merely as a matter of experiment for small towns and villages is not going very far.

This bill is filled with equalities, and I submit that it is but fair to these people who live in the villages that this provision should be carried and they, too, be enabled to have their mail delivered to them. I hope a plan can be worked out by the Postmaster General and his assistants so that these rural carriers through the country can do this work. It will be cheaper if they can, but they have not done it, and until that plan has been worked out I think we should carry this experiment along, and I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, for the City Delivery Service we are paying $37,700,000; for substitutes, $2,575,000; for the pay of letter carriers and substitutes in offices where City Delivery Service is established during the year, $100,000; for horse hire, $2,300,000; car fare and bicycle allowance, $525,000; street car collection service, $10,000. Then we have fees for special-delivery messengers, $2,225,000; car fare for special-delivery messengers, $13,000; making about $50,000,000 for city service. On the other hand, we have $48,650,000 to maintain the Rural Route Service. Now, the request I have made here to further carry out the experiment to enable 20,000,000 people who are not getting similar benefits to get some better service is an appropriation of only $200,000. I hope, in view of these conditions, the small amount involved and the vast number of people to be benefited by the experiment, that there will be no hesitancy in supporting this amendment. I am going to move that debate on this question be closed—— Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. MOON. In 15 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want some time.

Mr. MOON. If gentlemen want to take a longer time for discussion I am willing, and I will withdraw that request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I offered an amendment to increase the appropriation in order to give adequate postal service in the cities. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] opposed it because it was not estimated for, and that side of the House voted against it, except one or two gentlemen, mainly because they were not interested in large gentlemen, mainly because they were not interested in large cities. All I asked was a reasonable appropriation for a reasonable postal service in the city. Gentlemen say they appropriate so much for carrier service in the city, and seem to think it is a matter of charity. The Government appropriates for carrier service in the cities because it is more economical than to have the mail delivered in any other way.

But, Mr. Chairman, now comes an item which is not estimated for, and which the First Assistant Postmaster General expressly, in his annual report, reports against. "It is recommended that the service as now administered be discontinued on June 30, 1914." That is the recommendation—I will not say of your Assistant Postmaster General, because I take as great delight in the gentleman as you do; I think he is an able Assistant Postmaster General. [Applause.]

And at that I beg to say that I do not agree with him in that I am willing to be more liberal in reference to the country than the country Members are in reference to the postal facilities in the cities. I can see no reason why the Government shall not carry on experimental work with a view of furnishing adequate facilities throughout the country to everyone in the land. I have seen the Post Office Department appropriation bills grow from $100,000,000 to $300,000,000 in my short service in this House. Who would have dreamed 20 years ago that the Post Office Department would ask for an appropriation of over $300,000,000 a year, which in a short time will be increased to over $500,000,000? And every dollar of it, in my judgment, well spent in furnishing facilities which the public needs, which the public makes use of, and which in the end costs the Government nothing. There is no reason in the world why we should not give that free-delivery service in those towns where it can be given without excessive cost. Speaking for a city which contributes to the postal revenues more money than is contributed by most of the States duplicated several times, I am willing to give to the country adequate postal facilities, though I deplore the fact that the narrowness of mind of gentlemen here from country districts makes them unwilling to give to the cities those adequate postal facilities which the cities ought to have.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I desire to read some letters addressed to me by my constituents in the city of Minneapolis, Kans. Dr. E. G. Ganoung writes as follows:

JANUARY 12, 1914.

Hon. Guy T. Helvering,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I understand that it is an undecided question as to whether or not we will continue with our city-delivery mail service. Am taking this means of expressing my appreciation of the service we are now enjoying, and hope that you can see your way clear to lend your influence for its continuation.

Very truly, yours,

E. G. Ganoung.

The postmaster, Mr. George W. Barker, writes as follows: JANUARY 19, 1914.

Hon. Guy T. Helvering.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Yours of recent date received and contents noted in regards to experimental city delivery in Minneapolis, Kans.

I think it is a success. We deliver mail to 1,006 people in the city, and this is over one-half of the population.

I think that most of the people want the service continued.

Very truly, yours,

Geo. W. Berker, Postmaster.

GEO. W. BARKER, Postmaster.

Mr. C. S. Minch, a baker, writes as follows:

JANUARY 15, 1914.

Hon. GUY T. HELVERING, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In regard to our city delivery, I would say I am very much pleased with same and would be very much disappointed if it were discontinued. I sincerely hope you will use your influence in maintaining same in our town.

Yours, respectfully,

C. S. Minch.

These letters, with many others which I have received since the establishment of this service, October 1, 1913, certify to the fact that it is highly satisfactory and its continuance much desired.

I could not understand, when I read the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General that this service be discontinued, on what reasoning or information he based his conclusions. On making inquiries of some of the members on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I ascertained that the reason for this recommendation undoubtedly was based on the assumption that the same service would be henceforth performed by rural-route carriers, and therefore the so-called mental village delivery service" should be discontinued. "experi-

In looking up the changes made in the new issue of the Postal Laws and Regulations, I find Order No. 7745, section 717, reads as follows:

All persons, except those who reside within the city-delivery limits of a city when City Delivery Service is in operation, may be served by rural carriers, provided they will erect approved boxes on the established line of the route in the manner required by the department.

Of course, to one who has lived in a small city and knows conditions this order seems an absurdity, and it is laughable to contemplate the horror depicted upon the faces of the city officials were they to see, some fine morning, one of their inhabitants setting up posts for the purpose of attaching mail boxes in front of their homes and homes and homes and homes and homes and homes are their setting their their setti front of their homes and lawns of their well-regulated little city in which they have taken great pride. I have a very high regard for the very able Postmaster General, and I believe he is assisted in his work by one of the brightest, most genial, and competent first assistants that the service has had in many years. However, in this particular, I think they have erred in their endeavor to economize and keep down the added expenses of their department. No one will censure their conservatism when it comes to saving the people's money unequally and unjustly spent; but, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the people are demanding of the Post Office Department service; aye, and I add to that, equal service. If that be true, then let us see if equality will be established by taking away from the towns and villages this service which they are demanding, and which, when tried, has proved so satisfactory and desirable.

This bill carries an appropriation of approximately $36,000,-000 for the annual expense in the City Delivery Service. This service accommodates almost one-half of the population of our Nation. A further provision of this bill is an item of $45,000,000 to cover the expense of the Rural Delivery Service, the same serving about 20,000,000 people. Now, I wish to ask, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, does it not necessarily follow that the people living in localities in neither of these subdivisions and who contribute just the same to this postal system should be equally cared for?

I believe the information before the committee will show that there are at least 15,000,000 people living in communities that are too small to come in the first class and too thickly settled to enter in the second class, and that would be discrimina-tion against them if this item were stricken from the bill.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this item could be justifiably raised to five times the amount carried here and meet with the hearty approval of the people.

There is no man in the city that receives his mail four or five times a day nor any man in the country that is served daily by rural carrier who would oppose this item. If he did, it would be from a prejudiced point of view and not from a standard of right, justice, and equality.

Now, let us see what could be done in these small cities and towns if the department insisted on having the rural carrier serve the pople as they start on the country routes. The statistics gathered show that in my State the average time necessary for a rural carrier to sort his mail, tie it up, place it in order for distribution and make his trip is almost seven hours. Now, gentlemen, bear in mind this does not include the time necessary every morning for feeding and harnessing horses, greasing buggles, and so forth, nor does it include a like chore So it must be admitted that the average time in the evening. each carrier works each day is about nine hours. Where, then, would I ask, can you find the time for these men to do this service, if we are to consider a Government working day as being eight hours?

There is another point in this connection that many gentlemen overlook. They seem to base all their argument on the proposition of service to the business man. True, he is the great factor in every city and the service to him should be of the very best.

But why does no one argue the accommodation this service is to the women of these various towns. Their interest should be considered the same as the business man. Oh, yes, I have heard different gentlemen say that a man in the small town always goes to the post office anyway, and when he gets his own mail he can also get that for his wife, daughters, or sisters and take it home with him at noon. And, Mr. Chairman, in all probability he will take their mail to his shop and lay it away on his desk or shelf, and nine cases out of ten he will never think of it until he sees his wife and she asks him if there was any mail to-day. Therefore I say, gentlemen, we must consider all the people, all those that contribute to the vast sum received by this department.

There are many points of interest in this bill, but I will not consume more time now, but, as the discussion proceeds, will make a few observations relative to certain phases of the bill which are of particular interest to the constituency which I represent.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that this particular office would be entitled to free city delivery had the receipts of the office been a few hundred dollars in excess of what they were last ear, and therefore I think it would be an injustice to this one office particularly, and to many other offices in like circumstances, to have this service discontinued now that it has been once established and is on a satisfactory working basis in these different towns. I sincerely hope that this paragraph will not be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the time is almost here, if it is not already here, when free delivery will be made to every village in the United States. There is just as much reason why the people who live in villages should have free delivery as there is that the people in the country should have it. The Assistant Postmaster General, when he came before the committee, it is true, suggested that he had a plan in his mind which he expected to formulate later on, through which he could utilize the rural carriers for the purpose of delivering mail to everyone in the United States living in villages not now entitled to free delivery, but he has not yet suggested the plan to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It seems to me that while he is getting ready to suggest it the delivery already established in these small villages or cities ought to be continued, and that no cessation of work so well begun should continued, and that no essation of work as well engine in the take place until we have a well-digested plan to continue it in some other form. It is said that to inaugurate this new scheme of delivery will cost $10,000,000 per annum. I do not know of any other way to spend $10,000,000 to greater advantage to the American people than by delivering their mail to their homes. I think the expenditure of the $10,000,000 would add $20,000,000 to the receipts of the department, and besides it would create happiness in every home in the land. From every town where the system of delivery has been established we get the most glowing accounts of the satisfaction the people feel on that account and avery town that really the people feel on that account and avery town that really the people feel on that account and avery town that really the people feel on that account and avery town that really the people feel on that account and avery town that really the people feel on that account and the people feel on the peopl count, and every town that realizes the benefit accruing from that delivery is praying now that it be continued and protesting Service of any city in America—$26,000,000 a year—vastly greater than the city of New York, yet I believe the people who live in the rural districts and in the smaller cities and in the villages everywhere are entitled to every consideration on the part of the postal authorities. The Congress can do no better work than to continue a service which has given so much satisfaction until the committee can report a well-defined plan by means of which we can extend this service, and the expenditure of $200,000 for that purpose will not be in vain.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to add my indorsement to this measure, and I do that after having had this experimental service in one of the towns in my district at Princeton, W. Va. This town is so peculiarly situated that no other service than this can give as effective service. This town is strung out a distance of 3 miles, and at one end of that town is located the county seat and the old part of the town. But this town is keeping pace with the general progress in West Virginia, and this town extends 3 miles to the Virginia Railroad and shops. Now, this town is built up from one end to the other. There has always been a fight there until this service was inaugurated as to where the post office of this town should be located. The people living at the county seat wanted the post office located there, whereas the people down at the railroad end of the town where the shops of the Virginia Railroad are located, which has quite a population, wanted it located there. The people in the center of town wanted it located there. This service has solved the whole question and the people are more satisfied and are now getting their mail all over that town with equal justice to all.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I do.

Mr. FINLEY. The average time required by a rural carrier in West Virginia to make his rounds is 7 hours and 47 minutes. Does not the gentleman think it is utterly and entirely impractical to try to place this service on the rural carrier?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I certainly do. I do that in view of the fact the Post Office Department itself made an examination at that particular place and found it impracticable, as it would require all the time of the carrier to deliver mail inside of the corporate limits and no time would be left for regular delivery. The department sent an inspctor to that point, and this post-office inspector, after making an examination, found the carrier would have to deliver the mails to 7,500 people before he would start out on his route. There were two carriers, and that, of course, divided would be 3,750 to each. Now, gentlemen of this House will know how much time he would have to make his rural route after performing this service.

The service now is more than satisfactory and is shown by a resolution passed by the city council, which I will ask to have printed as part of my remarks; in addition to this, I have petitions from every interest, both public and private, asking that

At a special meeting of the council of the city of Princeton, W. Va., held in said city on the 9th day of January, 1914, the following resolutions were adopted by said council and ordered to be spread upon the minutes of said council:

"Whereas it appears that our present city delivery of mails is only temporary and dependent upon the Congress of the United States for an appropriation for its continuance; and "Whereas said city delivery has been in use in our city for about 11 months and has proven so entirely satisfactory that our business concerns and residents have become dependent upon same to such an extent that to discontinue same would, in our opinion, be nothing short of a calamity and would result in irreparable injury to the best interests of our city and the whole citizenship of the same: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we hereby call upon our Senators and Members of Congress of the United States to use their best efforts to secure sufficient appropriation to insure the continuance of our system of city delivery of mails until such time as the proceeds of our post office shall entitle us to general free delivery of our mails.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our city and that the recorder be requested to furnish two copies of same to Wirt A. French, postmaster of our city, with the request that he forward same to our Senators and Member of Congress.

"Mayor of the City of Princeton, W. Va.

"S. F. CLEGHON,

"S. F. CLEGHON, "Recorder of the City of Princeton, W. Va."

I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the records of my S. F. CLEGHON, Recorder.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my testimony to what these friends of mine have already stated about that delivery is praying now that it be continued and protesting the benefit of this service. I can speak in an unbiased and unpagainst its discontinuance.

I come from a great city, the people of which would not be affected in any wise by this provision in or out of the bill. I come from a city yielding the largest revenue to the Postal with the exception of New York and Chicago, and our postal receipts in the city of Atlanta amount to $1,456,000 a year, and I have also four prosperous country counties in my district. Now, there has been established this service in one of the towns in my district. The Board of Trade of Decatur heard that they were fixing to abolish this service, and they passed resolutions and sent them up here to me asking me, for the good of the town, to save this service for them. It was a most beneficial service; and although, gentlemen, they decreased the rate on local letters from 2 cents to 1 cent in this prosperous town in which they placed this service, the receipts have grown $482 since they adopted this carrier service. Now, I want to pay a compliment to the Committee on the Post Office and Post

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I do. Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say they decreased the postage from 2 cents to 1 cent?

Mr. HOWARD. From 2 cents to 1 cent local.

Mr. MANN. It was 1 cent local, and it is 2 cents where they have city delivery service.

Mr. HOWARD. Not in my town; they made an exception. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Not under this experimental service. But it was not 2 cents in the gentleman's town, either. They could not

Mr. HOWARD. They did not have any service at all. had to come to the office, and the Government is now doing for 1 cent what they made the other fellow do to get his letter. They cut the cost of the service in two. Now, I hope the gentleman understands that. It is a proposition which almost anybody can understand,

Now, I have the highest esteem for the First Assistant Postmaster General, but I am afraid he has been misled in arriving at his conclusions that this service is unsatisfactory. I do not think you ought to hamper this rural free delivery by allowing the town folks to get their mail in the morning before these good farmers out on the route, 7, 9, or 10 miles away, get theirs, on routes where the carrier has to stop at every man's gate in the I do not believe that they should permit the men in the town to get their mail at 9 o'clock in the day when the people out in the rural districts will have to light a lamp in order to read their paper by when it is received. The town folks are read their paper by when it is received. getting the long end of the stick, and it is time that the country people were given their rights in these small towns and out in the country. I am in favor of the appropriation, and I would vote for $100,000 more, if it were necessary to give our rural population service through the Post Office Department equal to that received in large cities. [Applause.]

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

Manahanl is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. MANAHAN. I will,

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to move that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

Moon] moves that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I be allowed five minutes of the time?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, all of the Members realize that the post office is a very good servant of intelligence, education, and business in this country. In the exercise of this power of appropriation we ought to be actuated by a sense of equality and fairness. It has been very clearly shown here, Mr. Chairman, that equality has not been the rule in post-office management. The cities and the country districts have the advantage at the expense of the larger towns and villages, and that is not fair. This provision is designed, as I take it, to correct that inequality, and therefore I am in favor of it. What we want is service, and equal service. It is possible the rural free delivery service can be extended and the wages of the men increased, as they should be, and the equipment enlarged, as it should be, so as to provide for these towns in the second and third class We are all in favor, I take it, of giving the people of the United States good service, and this cry of economy against this item is not deserving of any consideration, in my judgment.

If the administration will maintain its courage in the face of the hypocritical and side-stepping surrender, so called, of big business, as exemplified by the voluntary agreement of the Telephone and Telegraph Trust as to dissolution, and will do as it should, and serve the people by taking over to the Post Office Department the telephones and the telegraph of this country, there will be no difficulty as to a lack of funds to provide the people with adequate facilities regarding the mail and the carrying of parcels, so as to do away with the express companies, which are parasites on the transportation of the country.

There is not any question, Mr. Chairman, but that if the Post Office Department is intelligently administered by patriotic statesmen, as it should be, there will be no deficiency, and there will be no occasion for the villages and towns to be discriminated against, as they now are and as they have been all along. am in favor of good service to the city and to the farmer. am in favor of extending the service further to the cities and to the farmers. I do not believe there should be any curtailment anywhere of the function of the Government in providing information by mail and, when the time comes, in carrying parcels, packages, and freight to all the people of this country. I favor free delivery service to these towns and villages, and free box rent where free delivery can not be provided.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Sel-

DOMRIDGE] is recognized.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in the struggle for recognition I have been kept off the floor until this time, but I ask leave to print in the RECORD a letter that I have received regarding this service in one of the towns in my district. The statements made by the postmaster demonstrate to my mind that this service has not only been satisfactory to the people in the city, but also remunerative from a financial standpoint. And without any further remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will present the letter and ask unanimous consent to have it appear in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter referred to:

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE, Littleton, Colo., January 19, 1914.

Hon. PAUL J. HOGAN, Littleton, Colo.

General At the service of the extent that they had a special meeting called and had issued a circular to each and every resident informing them that they should have their houses numbered, and the trustees had named what streets that did not have a name. The town was divided—certain streets what streets had no on this map placed each house, whether vacant lots were also numbered in case a house should in some future date be erected. This plat was placed in my office, and the trust had a carrier who was alive to the situation. As this was an appointive position I exercised great care in my selection, and i all satisfied that I have appointed the right man for the patrons of the receive to the extent that they patrons signified their desire to have the service. As time went by different suggestions proposed to me were tried out and were met with favorable success to all. The town trustees were very much in harmony with the service to the extent that they had a special meeting called and had issued a circular to each and every resident informing them that they should have their houses numbered, and the trustees had named what streets that did not have a name. The town was divided—certain streets were designated as north, south, east, and west. The city engineer prepared a map, and on this map placed each house, whether vacant or occupied, giving it its proper number. The vacant lots were also numbered in case a house should in some future date be erected. This plat was placed in my office, and I in turn had run in the several newspapers of the town for the patrons to call, and we would give them their house number, which they did. As it was my aim to make this an Al success I necessarily had to have a carrier who was alive to the situation. As this was an appointive position I exercised great care in my selection, and I am satisfied that I have appointed the right man for the place, as he is quick and active and attends strictly to business. Several times during the year I made trips around with the carrier on his

the attention that it should have been given is the collection box. I have on several occasions taken this matter up with the proper official at Washington, D. C., and in turn they have given me very good concouragement, as on November 14, 1913, I received a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster General stating that at any early date boxes would be supplied this office. Since that time I have not written them, as I presume they have been busy and have not had an opportunity to look after this branch of the department.

There are other matters which I could write you upon pertaining this service, but they are not of a material nature. They are matters which govern different conditions which necessarily arise during the day's business, which must be met with different ideas and handled with a different manner; but I think that I have given you the most essential things that have given this service that success which it now, has.

with a different manner; but I think that I have given you the most essential things that have given this service that success which it now has.

The prime and moving factor of this service or any other kind of service is cooperation in its fullest terms. Without cooperation no business, let alone a public office, will amount to very much. While I do not intend to claim all the credit which has been had in this service by any means, but I do say that I am and have always been a strong supporter of cooperation, and have to that end done all in my power to make this service a success and have worked very hard to accomplish my point. Newspapers, business men, department stores, and every other kind of business that I could reach that has done any great amount of business through this office I have written to and told them to address their customers by house number and street name, and in some instances the large mailing houses have sent me their mailing list, so that I could place thereon after the name the house number and street number. These concerns were with me, and it has been that all those who had anything to do with the city delivery have done just what I have asked, as I have gone to or written in such a manner that they were well in accord with the project.

There are other offices which have this service, but I do not know what success the several postmasters have had with it. All that I can say that as far as this office is concerned the experimental city free delivery has been a success, both financially as well as service, and the patrons who derive its benefit will vouch for the above statement as far as the service standpoint is concerned.

On November 19, 1913, I was given authority to extend this service to what is known as Woodlawn addition to Littleton, but, owing to the severe snowstorm, I have been unable to start this service, and the patrons who derive its benefit will vouch for the above statement as far as the service standpoint is concerned.

E. H. ALBERTSON, Postmaster, Littleton, Colo.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say word in favor of this amendment. I have one city in my district—the city of Edmond—that is now receiving this service. have received a letter from the postmaster there, Mr. A. D. Dailey, relative to this service, which reads as follows:

Dailey, relative to this service, which reads as follows:

Replying to yours of January 5, relative to experimental free delivery of mail in Edmond, will say that in my opinion the so-called experiment has proven highly successful. The service is well patronized, and the patrons of this service are so well pleased that I hardly see how you can take it away from them. This is a city of 2,500 population, and the residents here believe that they are as much entitled to free delivery of mail as are the residents of larger cities and those who reside in the country. Our city carrier serves more than twice as many patrons as any of our six rural carriers and does it at but little more than one-half the expense of one rural carrier. I believe the free delivery of mail here has also resulted in an increase of receipts, although I can not furnish facts to substantiate this opinion.

Mr. Chairman, we have now given free delivery to the people.

Mr. Chairman, we have now given free delivery to the people in the larger towns and cities and to the farmers, or at least to a large proportion of the farmers. Nearly one-half of our population, if not more, are located in cities with free-delivery service. Probably 40 per cent of our farmers are now having free delivery of their mail; so that a very large majority of our people now have their mail delivered at their doors

This system should be, and I believe will be, extended until the people of all our villages, towns, and smaller cities shall have their mail delivered to them at their homes.

The history of the growth of our Postal System in the delivery of the mail is most remarkable. Twenty years ago Postmaster General Bissell refused to expend money for experimenting upon the free delivery of mail to our farmers. Eighteen years ago another Postmaster General, Postmaster General Wilson, said, in effect, that the whole scheme for free delivery of mail to people in the rural districts was impracticable. It was not until 1897 that Postmaster General Gary, following the suggestion made by Postmaster General Wanamaker in 1891, indorsed the proposition. From that time on the system of free delivery to farmers has grown with remarkable rapidity, and it certainly reflects credit upon our people and upon our Government and must be further extended. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $966,800.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what has been done, or what is being done, if anything, to increase the pneumatic-tube service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] strikes out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I see here an appropriation of only $4,000 more

Mr. Moon. I will say to the gentleman that nothing has been done to increase it. There has been appointed a commission by this body and the Senate requiring a report upon that subject; and that report, I understand, is to come in in March. The hearings before the committee on the question of pneumatic tubes, and particularly with respect to the service in one city, show that the results have not been altogether satisfactory. The committee has thought it best not to undertake to extend this service until the report shall have been received.

Mr. DYER. The report that the gentleman refers to has come in from one of these cities?

Mr. MOON. Yes. Mr. DYER. Is that the commission that the gentleman refers to, or a special commission?

Mr. MOON. The commission that was appointed by the House. We have given all that we felt we were warranted in giving under the circumstances.

Mr. DYER. This appropriation does not provide for any more increase

Mr. MOON.

Mr. MOON. No, sir. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For regulation screen or other wagon service, $2,600,000.

Mr. MANN, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the Postmaster General recommended that authority be given under this item to combine the screen-wagon service with the collection and delivery service and with automobiles, which, I take it, was for the purpose of permitting the delivery of parcel post, in part, at least. Was that considered by the committee and turned down, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOON. Has the gentleman got the hearings?

Mr. MANN. I have not the hearings, but I have the report of the Postmaster General. On page 50 of that report the Postmaster General makes a recommendation to that effect.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman's inquiry is what?

Mr. MANN. Was this recommendation of the Postmaster General considered and turned down by the committee or not disposed of? Which recommendation does the gentieman

Mr. MOON.

Mr. MANN. It is contained in the report of the Postmaster General, where he asks that in connection with the screenwagon service this item be inserted in the bill:

That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized in his discretion to use as much of the appropriation for regulation screen or other wagon service as may be necessary for the purchase and maintenance of wagons and automobiles for the operation of a combined screen-wagon collection and delivery service.

Mr. MOON. The item in the bill is reported just as the committee agreed upon it. They did not give any further consideration to the Postmaster General's request than is shown on the face of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I can see by the face of the bill that they did not regard what the Postmaster General recommended.

Mr. MOON. We did not do that in several other instances. Mr. MANN. But, without having the special knowledge that the Post Office Committee had, it looked to me like a reasonable proposition to combine the screen-wagon service with the delivery service, especially the parcel-post delivery.

Mr. MOON. And the automobile service. It is likely that the automobile service will not be continued. That has not which carries the mail from the post office to the railroad station, with the City Delivery Service.

Mr. MOON. The committee reached the conclusion stated in this bill. The gentleman will find quite a discussion of the matter on pages 118 and 119 of the hearings.

Mr. MANN. I am never going to take the trouble to read all the hearings. I expect to try to elicit information in the House from my distinguished friend, who can condense it.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman desires, it can be read to him just as it occurred before the committee.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose the gentleman from Tennessee could give us a free translation of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the inquiry of my colleague [Mr. MANN] with respect to the recommendation made by the Postmaster General, asking authority to purchase wagons, horses, and automobiles to be used in connection with the screen-wagon city delivery service, I wish to say that the committee decided that it would be unwise and extravagant to allow the Post Office authorities to own their own equipment, and it was the conclusion of the committee that we can contract for equipment for much less money than the equipment could be bought for and operated by the department itself. That is really all there is to it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely, if I can. Mr. GOULDEN. The chairman of the committee rather intimated that the automobile service in connection with the transmission or delivery of the mails was not satisfactory. I should like to ask the gentleman about that.

Mr. MADDEN. In reply to the question of my friend from New York I desire to say that in the city of New York they have established an automobile service for the transportation of the mail from the stations and the post office to the various railway terminals, and that service is contracted for at a much more extravagant price than the screen-wagon service is contracted for.

The purpose of the introduction of the automobile service, as stated by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, was to increase the rapidity with which the movement of the mail could be made, and he said that they had increased the rapidity from 3 or 4 miles per hour to 9 miles per hour.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. To the great danger of the

Mr. MADDEN. But the fact of the matter is that the cost of the screen-wagon service is 38 cents per unit mile and the cost of the automobile service is 60 cents per unit mile, and the automobiles are not at all keeping up the schedule of 9 miles an hour, as they calculated they would.

Now, I think it can be stated without fear of successful contradiction that in a crowded city street you could move a wheelbarrow almost as fast as you can move an automobile, and the truth of the matter is that even with the pneumatic-tube service in Chicago, an investigation as to the rapidity of the movement of the mail in that way has shown that when you take into account the time when the mail leaves the post office and the time it takes to go through the pneumatic tube and the time it takes to redistribute it when it gets to the end of the tube, when the mail is ready to be loaded on the railway car, you could leave the post office with a wheelbarrow carrying that mail and reach the car upon which it is loaded for transportation into the interior of the country just about as quickly as the pneumatic tube does it. [Laughter.] The pneumatic tube is only 8 inches in diameter-

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand the gentleman, that if they could get anything slower than a wheelbarrow it would be an improvement on everything at present in use?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am stating a fact. I am not stating what could happen or might happen.

Mr. PAYNE. I am asking a practical question. Is not a mail bag filled with mail marked for its destination sent through the pneumatic tube, so that there does not have to be any redis-

Mr. MADDEN. No. The pneumatic tube is 8 inches in diameter, and they send a package of letters such as the letter carrier ties up for delivery on his route. It may be that they can put two or three such packages of letters in the pouch that is put in the tube. That is transmitted from the post office to the railway terminal, and when it reaches the railway terminal they are obliged to have clerks there to redistribute the mail that comes in those packages. Although we can transmit the mail with great rapidity, the time lost in the redistribution of the mail at the other end of the tube makes the time consumed in the transmission of the mail through the tube equal to the time that would be consumed by a man pushing a wheel-barrow from the post office to the station.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I was temporarily out when the paragraph was read in regard to transmission of mail by pneumatic tube. I want to put a few remarks in the RECORD on that subject, and I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks pages 114, 115, 116, 117, and a part of page 118, statements made before our committee by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Maddleman]. While I hold no brief to speak for the gentleman from Illinois, I want to say that he is a man who has risen by his own force of character until he is at the head of one of the largest business concerns in the city of Chicago. He is a man who has given this subject careful consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman speaking of Mr. Mad-DEN, a Member of the House?

Mr. COX. I am; a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Indiana said he testified" before the committee, which misled me.

Mr. COX. He made a statement before the committee; perhaps I should not have used the word "testimony." I have read everything that has been said on the question of the pneumatic-tube service for the last six or seven years, and all I know about it is what I have read. For the life of me I never have been able to understand what real, genuine benefit pneumatic tubes have ever performed in the mail service of this country and wondered if it was not designed solely for the purpose of taking money out of the Treasury of the United

Mr. LLOYD. Has the gentleman seen the device downstairs? Mr. COX. I have not. I am talking about the pneumatic-tube service now in force in the several cities of this country. I wanted to call the attention of the committee to the state-ment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden]. It is indeed a startling statement that the gentleman makes as the result of 10 days' investigation in his own time at his own expense last summer. The statement is as follows:

result of 10 days' investigation in his own time at his own expense last summer. The statement is as follows:

The Chairman. Then comes the item covering transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $966,800, or an increase of $4,600.

Mr. Madden. Will you allow me to ask the general a question?

The Chairman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Madden. What advantage is the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. Stewart. It is a very important auxiliary. It serves a larger use in New York City than in the other cities where it is installed. The postmaster recently told me that it was of special use during the recent strike of the mail-truck chauffeurs. It is of special utility when traffic is interfered with by snow or storm. For regular service it is used whenever mail can be handled and advanced thereby during 20 hours of the day. They do carry a large amount of first-class mail. Of course it is not practicable to transport the heavier classes of mail such as second, third, and fourth classes.

Mr. Madden. What is the special advantage outside of this strike there in New York?

Mr. Stewart. It furnishes a continuous dispatch between the post office and postal stations and between them and rallroad stations, and allows later closes and later dispatches.

Mr. Madden. How much later does it allow—12 minutes?

Mr. Stewart. It depends upon the distance.

Mr. Madden. What do you pay a year a mile for the pneumatic service?

Mr. Stewart. $17,000 a mile per annum.

Mr. Madden. What from the main post office in Chicago is dispatched by the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. Stewart. A large part of the first-class mail and some part of other classes.

Mr. Madden. Is there any time gained by transmitting it that way?

by the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. Stewart. A large part of the first-class mail and some part of other classes.

Mr. Madden. Is there any time gained by transmitting it that way?

Mr. Stewart. Yes; there would be. Some part of the mails is advanced, but not all of them.

Mr. Madden. Would you be surprised to know that an investigation that I made of the pneumatic-tube service in Chicago led me to the conclusion that it was a service of no special value, except in the matter of the 12 minutes' time saved in closing the mail; that they would have to close 12 minutes earlier if they did not use the service, but that all mail sent through the pneumatic tubes from the office to the rallway stations had to be broken up and be put up in small packages in order to put it through the tubes at all, and then it had to be redistributed for transportation over the rallroad at a cost of $60,000. A number of clerks sufficient to consume $60,000 a year in pay had to be maintained to put that mail back into form. Perhaps it might surprise you to be told that I could take a wheelbarrow from the main post office and start up to any of the ordinary railroad stations with it and load it in and get it mailed on the train as quick as the pneumatic-tube service, taking the time for redistribution into consideration.

Mr. Stewart. That last statement would surprise me if told it were so.

Mr. Cox. You will not offer that as a business man, as a business proposition?

Mr. Madden. I went over every station in our city from the bottom to the top.

Mr. Madden. I took 10 days at it, doing nothing else.

Mr. Madden. Except as between stations. I think that for the main post office and the substation it would be all right, because there you drop the mail onto the desk of the distributor for delivery in the local they are working on the final report to-day.

Mr. Madden. That was about all I wanted to say in that connection.

Mr. Finley. General, has there anything come of that proposal, where, in place of using force to drive the mail, the suction principle applies?

Mr. Stewart. There is a company which constructed the tube between the Capitol Building and the House Office Building. The tube is intended to be operated by the vacuum system. They have no other system in operation that I know of.

Mr. Finley. Have you any knowledge as to how that works?

Mr. Stewart. I have seen it operate. It seems to operate all right. You understand. It is not in regular operation. They give an exhibition if you want to see it. It was put in as an experimental line, I understand.

Mr. Madden. What is that?

Mr. Stewart. The principle is different from that employed by the Pneumatic Tube Co. having contracts with the Post Office Department.

Mr. Finley. The principle is different from that employed by the Pneumatic Tube Co. having contracts with the Post Office Department.

Mr. Stewart. Yes, sir.

Mr. Stewart. They use a vacuum system instead of compressed air.

Mr. Stewart. They use a vacuum system instead of compressed air.

Mr. Madden. The Government of the United States furnishes these companies, from whom they rent the machine, space in the Government building, however, does it not?

Mr. Stewart. Yes.

Mr. Stewart. Not as a rule.

Mr. Madden. They do not own any property upon which they build their machinery?

Mr. Stewart. Not as a rule.

Mr. Madden. The basement of the Chicago Federal building.

Mr. Stewart. The terminals must be located in the post office building, and as a rule their power machinery is located in the post office, if there is available space.

Mr. Madden. As a matter of safety, so that the Government may control the service; is that it?

Mr. Stewart. Yes.

Mr. Cox. It is not contemplated extending this service, is it, General?

Mr. Stewart. No, sir. We could not, under the law, extend this service to any other cities without the authority of Congress and specific appropriations.

Mr. Madden. Do you believe, General, from your experience and observation of the pneumatic-tube service, that the amount of benefit accruing to the people as a result has equaled the outlay?

Mr. Stewart. Yes; I think it has. I know of no place where they would be willing to give it up; and the cost per letter or article sent is very, very small. I have those figures, and would be very glad to put them into the record. That was developed by the inquiry of the commission which preceded the last one, and it is stated in their report.

Mr. Madden. Do they take into account the cost of redistribution of the mall at the end of the tubes?

Mr. Stewart. No, I think not; I think it is only the pneumatic-tube cost.

Mr. Madden. That ought to go in; that is a part of the cost.

Mr. Stewart. No, I think not; I think it is only the pneumatictube cost.

Mr. Madden. That ought to go in; that is a part of the cost.

Mr. Madden. That ought to go in; that is a part of the cost.

Mr. Madden. That ought to go in; that is a part of the cost.

Mr. Madden. That is the biggest item there is in the whole business, and, as a matter of fact, at both ends there is a good deal of cost, because the tubes are not large enough in any case to take anything but broken packages of first-class mail.

Mr. Stewart. They are large enough to take the usual tied-up packages of mail—that is, the way they tie them out of the case—so that they will come down to the operating room in the same shape that they go into the mail bag.

Mr. Madden. Those packages have got to be broken at the other end and redistributed, whereas, if they were not going to use the pneumatic tube, they could distribute all that stuff for transmission from one railroad to another on the incoming trains, and they would not have to do anything with the mail in the post office.

Mr. Stewart. I do not see how that would result.

Mr. Madden. I wish you would just investigate it a little.

Mr. Stewart. I will. You see, mail starts from the post office for the railroad station made up generally for States and railway post offices; it is tied out of the case in the ordinary size bundles and it is ready for dispatch. When it reaches the postal station at the railroad station, it ought to be in shape to be dispatched directly in pouches to trains.

Mr. Madden. If would be but it is not when you do that through station, it ought to be in shape to be dispatched directly in pouches to trains.

Mr. Madden. It would be, but it is not when you do that through the pneumatic tube.

Mr. Stewart. That would not be the fault of the pneumatic tube, but in the manner of handling it before it reached the tube.

Mr. Madden. I am only stating the conditions as I found them.

Mr. Stewart. Yes.

Mr. Madden. Of course, I am not undertaking to assume technical knowledge of how the thing ought to be done. I am just suggesting how it is done.

Mr. Stewart. I would suggest that it may be that they are utilizing one of our railway post-office terminals in Chicago for distribution instead of distributing them before they are put in the tubes.

Mr. Madden. I think, Mr. Stewart, the superintendent of city delivery would agree with me to the effect that we could save $60,000 a year in the redistribution of the mail if the mail did not go through the tubes.

the tubes.

Mr. STEWART. I will be glad to look into that.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, there is some part of the use of the tube that I agree is valuable, as between post offices and subpostal stations.

I wanted, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to this particular branch of the subject, so that when the next contract period comes around the Post Office Department will look carefully and well into this matter before they enter into a contract for pneumatic service that will cost the people of the country $60,000 by way of additional clerk hire. I do not believe that they perform any service whatever. The gentleman from Illinois made an able speech the other day, in which he presented the subject, and I desire only to supplement what he said on that occasion by calling attention to the statement he made before the Post Office Committee, and especially the tremendous cost that it imposes upon the Government to reassemble the mail

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. This discussion is proceeding upon the pneumatic-tube service. Has not that item been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been passed.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I had an amendment pending to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered an amendment after the Clerk had read the subsequent paragraph.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I was listening, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] made some comment, and then I got upon my feet immediately to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If it was a misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from Georgia, the Chair will allow the gentleman to offer the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. It is an amendment I want to offer at the end of line 7, page 14.

Mr. MOON. I reserve a point of order to it, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. MANN. I have no objection to his offering the amendment, but the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken in his recollection. That paragraph was read and the next paragraph was read, and the Clerk was proceeding to read the next paragraph when I took the floor to offer some remarks on the screenwagon service.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question about it, the Chair will resolve the doubt in favor of the gentleman from Georgia and the Clerk will report the amendment. The Chair has the same recollection as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Clerk rend as follows:

Insert after line 7, page 14, the following:

"For the construction and equipment of a system of large-diameter underground tubes, connecting the general post office, the Union and Terminal Railroad Stations, in the city of Atlanta, Ga. (the said tube system to be of sufficient size and capacity to transport all mail and parcel-post matter between these stations), the sum of $75,000, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster General."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would hear me on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the paragraph carries with it an increase from $962,200 in 1913 to $966,800 in 1914. I contend that, if the committee itself carries an increase over a former appropriation, a further amendment for an increase is in order and not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the increases carried in the bill are to carry out necessary appropriations under existing law.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I contend that it does not matter what the appropriation is intended for; that if it is an increase over an appropriation of the previous year, the amendment is in order and not subject to a point of order, because it carries with it a further increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his amendment proposes the expenditure of this money at a particular place?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that is in order?

Mr. HOWARD. I do, sir, for this reason, that the money therein stated as an appropriation for the year 1914 is certainly money expended at a particular place, for instance, Chicago, Ill. New York City, and St. Louis.

The CHAIRMAN. But that puts it at the discretion of the Post Office Department, and, as the gentleman understands, is for a work that has already begun. The gentleman proposes to put in new service at a new place where there is no service?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee has been very courteous, but I wish he would with-hold making the point of order until I can make a brief statement of three or four minutes,

Mr. MOON. Let the gentleman proceed and make his Atlanta statement.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, this is a question that I approach with a good deal of seriousness. I am not asking Congress to give to the people of my city anything. As I stated a while ago, the post-office receipts for the city of Atlanta for the year just ended are $1,478,000, and by the practice of the very strictest economy under a Democratic postmaster our expenditures for the entire service were only $376,650.28, which leaves net to the Government from this magnificent post office over $1,000,000. Here is the condition in the city of Alanta, very much like the condition that exists in the city of Chicago: We have 14 great railroads running into the city of Atlanta. We have two terminal stations-one known as the Union Station and one known as the Terminal Station. These stations are about three-quarters of a mile from the Atlanta post office itself. The screen-wagon service costs us $9,746 a year. The postmaster has looked into this question. It is agreed that a contract can be entered into by the Government for the construction of 30-inch tubes that will carry seven full sacks of mail, the equivalent of 700 pounds; that this service will be turned over to the Government for $75,000. The annual operative expenses of the system would be $2,200. The present expense for the screen-wagon service is $9,746.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman himself made any investigation as to the practicability of the size of the tube suggested?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is aware that a few years ago contracts for construction of pneumatic-tube service were authorized in Cincinnati for 20-inch tubes, and that they could not enter into them because that size would not work?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my good friend, right here within a hundred yards of where you now stand there is an 18-inch tube in operation. The concern that made this estimate for the Atlanta post office guaranteed that the service would prove efficient, and they further guaranteed that the operating expenses of this system would not be over $2,200 a year, and here is the estimate.

Mr. MANN. Where is this 18-inch tube service within 100

Mr. HOWARD. Right here from the House Office Building to the Capitol. It has a capacity of 30 miles an hour and will

Mr. MANN. But not a pneumatic-tube service like the ordinary pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. HOWARD. It is complete in every particular, with electrical appliances and everything, and the gentleman can step in and see it. It is a perfectly practical system. If we can work an 18-inch tube, we can work a 30-inch tube, because the principle applying to an 18-inch tube will also apply to a 30-inch tube. It is not a question of power, because over and above the draft or suction it takes to operate the pneumatic tube only 5 pounds pressure to the natural pressure is necessary to make the cylinder go 30 miles an hour.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the same argument he is now making was made when we passed the Cincinnati business, but when it came to brass tacks they would not construct it.

Mr. HOWARD. I can only say this in reply, that this is a contract, and if it does not work, it does not cost the Government one penny.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for three minutes longer.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Did the gentleman say this service was between the House Office Building and the Capitol?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does not the gentleman mean between the Congressional Library and the Capitol?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not; I mean it runs from the basement of the House Office Building, and before you can say "shoo cat" that will take a letter from the House Office Building to the Capitol. It goes before you can say "scat." [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a perfectly practical business proposition. The people of Atlanta need this service; they are entitled to it; it is economical to adopt it, and why not do it? The Government can not possibly lose anything and it stands to make a saving of $7,500 a year. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said a while ago, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] in eminently correct in his position that the 8-inch tube service is absolutely of no value to the Postal Service, for the simple reason that the 8-inch tube can carry nothing in the world but a very small package of letters. I hold in my hand a photograph of eight large bags of mail, aggregating 800 pounds in weight, that are to-day being successfully carried with the 30inch pneumatic tube.

Mr. MANN. Where?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know the city that it is installed in; I have forgotten. Here is a picture of it and the photograph will not lie, and it shows the amount that it will hold. they say this service is operated successfully and I do not see any reason why it would not operate successfully; and I am willing, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Tennessee will be so magnanimous as to withdraw his point of order, to test the 30-inch pneumatic tube in the great city of Atlanta; and if it does not work, then the people of Atlanta can proclaim to all the world that the pneumatic-tube business is absolutely a

rce. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words of the last paragraph of the section that has been read, for regulation screen or other wagon service. I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman, who is a member of this committee and who represents the same city, namely, the city of Chicago, as to why the subway service has been discontinued in the city of Chicago, in view of the statement that has been made that it is absolutely impossible to transport the mails from one station to the other or from the post office to the station as speedily as a person could by a wheelbarrow

Mr. MADDEN. My colleague means the Illinois Tunnel?
Mr. SABATH. I mean the Illinois Tunnel.
Mr. MADDEN. The reason why the use of the Illinois Tunnel was discontinued was this:

A contract was entered into between the postal authorities on the part of the Government and the Illinois Tunnel Co, in our city for the transportation of the mails from station to station and from the stations to the post office. At the end of the contract period the tunnel company asked a very much larger amount for doing the work than they were getting under the old contract, and the authorities decided that they would take bids for the transportation of the mail by screen-wagon service in competition with the bids which they were taking for the tunnel service. The screen-wagon service bid was about $300,000 less per annum for the removal of the mail than the bid made by the tunnel company, and the postal authorities decided it was much better to pay $184,000 a year for screenwagon service than it would be to pay $484,000 a year for the movement of the mails in the tunnel.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the former contract with the tunnel company was about $173,000 a year?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but they wanted nearly $500,000 when that contract expired.

Mr. SABATH. Was that the bid and was that the reason why that good service was discontinued?

Mr. MADDEN. It was a question whether it was good service or not, and the postmaster of Chicago says the screen-wagon service is a better service and more expeditious than the tunnel service.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the statement that has just been made with regard to the transportation on our down-town streets?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, I was talking about the pneumatic service in that instance, and the reason why it was slow in making its final delivery is that all the mail transmitted through the pneumatic tubes had to be redistributed at the end of the tubes, and that made the delay. But the department did not consider itself justified in paying $300,000 more to transport the mails from station to station within the city limits of Chicago than it could get the work done for on the surface of Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. I will try. Mr. SABATH. Namely, how much does the department pay for each and every wagon in the city of Chicago?

Mr. MADDEN. You mean the collection wagons?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir; and the numbered wagons that the department hires from day to day.

Mr. MADDEN. The wagon service for the transportation of the mails from the post office to the railroads is under contract, and the man who owns the wagons does all the work for

Mr. SABATH. How much more does he receive for other service he renders the Government, and is there a contract, and is that work given to the lowest bidder?

Mr. MADDEN. He renders no other service except that which he renders to the Government, and his wagons are at the disposal of the Government for service supposed to be rendered to the Government.

Mr. SABATH. Are there not other wagons engaged from time to time by the department?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the department does engage wagons for the collection of the mails, but that has nothing to do with the transportation of the mails, and I do not know what they do pay them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Sabath] has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $55,188,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis: But provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and terminal of the mail building, and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the second proviso

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reserves a point of order on the second

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cul-LOP] is recognized.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two about this paragraph. The sum here appropriated for the carrying of the mails by the railroads is $55,188,000—a very large amount. I would like to ask the chairman if the committee has made any investigation as to whether or not the Government can provide its own cars, pay a mileage to the railroads over which they may run, and reduce this amount very largely?

Mr. MOON. There is an experimental proposition in this bill covering that question. It is one of the sections at the close of the bill that will be subject to a point of order unless there is a rule granted for it. The committee did not go into the question of the whole appropriation along that line. There will be reports that will come in in a short while from commissions of the House on that subject. But the committee did reach a conclusion to make an experiment to the extent of $200,000 in connection with cars.

Mr. CULLOP. To build its own cars and operate them, and pay the mileage for running them over the railroads?

Mr. LLOYD. The question the gentleman asks is applicable to the railroad-car service, on page 15.

Mr. CULLOP. I mean the railroad mail cars-the post-office cars. I mean for this service.

Mr. LLOYD. The $200,000 is not experimentally for this

Mr. MOON. It is not subject to this section.

Mr. CULLOP. I should want it to apply to the entire carriage of the mails over the railroads.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this question was up before the committee two or three years ago, and I think the discussion of it then developed this fact very clearly to the country, that one of these postal cars cost anywhere from $7,000 to $8,000. The average lifetime of the wooden car is about 15 years. It earns for the railroad company $7,500 each year. Every two years in which it is in operation it more than pays the railroad company for its entire cost.

Now, that is the wooden car. The steel car-

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit me to interrupt him, that section 8 covers that question, and all the proof he is discussing is contained in the

Mr. CULLOP. Now, the steel car costs about $12,000.

Mr. COX. No; $11,000.

Mr. CULLOP. My understanding is that it was $12,000 or $14,000. If it is $10,000 or $11,000, it is so much the better. Now, it seems to me that it is a very clear proposition that the Government can own the post-office car-all mail cars-as well as the company that carries the mail, and thereby save a very large sum annually to the people. In other words, by that means it would not cost the Government one-half as much as it now costs to carry the entire mail of the country, or at least all of it that is carried over the railroads, if it owned the mail cars. And it seems to me, further, that it would be advisable for the Government to enter upon the trial of the plan. It can build its cars. It can pay the railroad companies a mileage charge, as other businesses pay for the carrying of cars over the railroads, and save by that manner of operating the Post Office Department at least $30,000,000 a year. The sum paid for the post-office car, what is called the post-office railway mail car, is out of all proportion with what the service is worth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULLOP. In just a moment. If the department desires to economize in a manner that will not affect the efficiency of the service to the public, but will benefit every taxpayer of the country; if it desires to reduce the cost of operation where it will not be at the expense of the service, it should own its own cars and pay a mileage rate to the railroad companies for hauling them. That it can do this successfully, I think, has been clearly demonstrated by the investigations that have been had. I think it can save one-half of the expense that is now incurred for carrying the mails by rail.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. At the present time the Fish Commission has a special car, and the Immigration Bureau has a special car, and those cars are paying 25 cents per mile for transit over the railroads. If that is a reasonable basis upon which we would pay for our cars, and we would pay the same for every railway mail car as we pay for the fish car, the amount paid by the Government for carrying the mails over the railroads would be $8,000,000 more than we are now paying.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the answer to that proposition is that the officials who made that contract for the Government in those instances with the railroad companies ought to be promptly discharged from the Government service for want of business capacity. The Pullman Co, makes a contract. We can make as fair a contract for the Government for carrying the mail as the Pullman Co. makes for carrying its sleeping cars on every railroad in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana

has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to have two minutes more, Mr. Chairman, if I may have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cul-LOP] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not want five minutes. I want only two

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order. There is a point of order pending, to be disposed of. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman calls for the regular order.

Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman desires to explain it, I have no objection. If he desires it disposed of without explanation, I shall insist.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has called for the regular

Mr. MOON. I'ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed for two minutes. Then we will take up the other question.

The gentleman from Tennessee asks The CHAIRMAN. unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. I take it there is no reason why the Government can not make as fair a contract, and why it ought not to make as fair a contract, in behalf of the people of this country as the great Pullman Sleeping Car Co. is able to make with every railroad in this country. And if it paid any such toll for running its cars over the railroads as the gentleman from Missouri has mentioned in reference to the two branches of the Government, the Pullman Co. could not operate its sleeping cars on any railroad in this country. But if the Government will take hold of this matter and repeal the statute that is now in force, which fixes this sum as a matter of Federal law, then it can enter upon negotiations with the railroads of this country, and if it can not get a reasonable contract for this service it can build its own cars and pay on a mileage basis and carry the mails of this country for one-half the sum it is costing the Government to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. In one moment. The sum which is now paid the railroads is out of all reason. It is out of all proportion to the advantages derived from it and out of all proportion to the pay that these railroads are receiving for similar service to the public throughout the Nation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE], a member of the postal commission charged with the investigation of the subject, states that the Government is paying for the use of these railway post-office cars at the rate of 18.64 cents per mile, whereas the cost of operation alone for the carriage of a passenger car is 19.41 cents per mile. The Government is obtaining this service for a little less than the real cost of operation of passenger cars. Now, in view of these figures, does the gentleman believe that the officials who have entered into contracts for the Fish Commission and the Immigration Department at 25 cents per car-mile should be discharged from the Government service?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; I repeat it. I think they ought to be relieved from the service for making such an exorbitant contract as that with the railroad company. There is no business man in the country looking after his own financial concerns who would not make a better bargain than that. He would not pay half as much.

INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a bill which I introduced in the House to-day (H. R. 12120) providing for an interstate trade commission and defining its powers and duties, and for other purposes, together with a statement made by myself to the press this afternoon, and a statement made by Senator NEWLANDS this afternoon to the press, on the subject matter of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Alabama asks leave to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD a certain bill and certain statements. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is the bill? Mr. CLAYTON. The interstate trade commission bill, introduced to-day

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

THE CLAYTON-NEWLANDS BILLS.

Representative Clayton this afternoon gave to the press the full text of the tentative bill as agreed upon by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (Messrs. Clayton. CARLIN, and FLOYD of Arkansas) and the majority members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and said:

"The bill will be introduced at the same time by Representa-tive CLAYTON and Senator NEWLANDS. The bill is modeled after the lines of what is commonly known as the Newlands bill, which was introduced in the Senate some months ago by Senator NEWLANDS, and involves the fundamental idea that a trade commission shall be created, consisting of five members, with full inquisitorial powers into the operation and organization of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, other than common carriers. It provides for a commission of five members, and makes the Commissioner of Corporations chairman of the board, and transfers all the existing powers of that bureau to the commission. Its relation to the Attorney General's Office and to the courts is advisory. Its principal and most important duty besides conducting investigations will be to aid the courts, when requested, in the formation of decrees of dissolution, and with this end in view it empowers the courts to refer any part of pending litigation to the commission, including the proposed decree, for information and advice."

Senator Newlands, being interviewed, said:
"The trade-commission bill and several other bills limiting the debatable ground of the Sherman Act have been the subject of laborious consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House, consisting of Mr. CLAYTON, chairman, and Messrs. Carlin and Floyd, during the holidays and before. The majority members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate have been brought into consultation with them of "The trade-commission bill preserves the essential features of the bill which I have been urging for some time, but contains amendments and additions of great value, and is, in my judgment, a distinct improvement upon the bill as it was considered and perfected by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate during the last Congress. As a whole, I should say that the trade-commission bill ought to be satisfactory to members of all parties, for it is distinctively progressive, and we have endeavored to frame it in harmony with the President's views presented in an admirable message which has received the approval of the entire country, regardless of party. While these bills represent at present the best thought of the participants in the shaping of this legislation, they are presented simply as tentative measures upon which the judgment of the proper committees of the House and Senate and of the country is invoked!

A bill to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the interstate trade commission, which shall be composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said interstate trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

SEC. 2. That on the taking effect of this act the Bureau of Corporations shall cease to exist, and is hereby transferred to and merged in, and becomes a part of the commission; and all officers and employees of the Bureau of Corporations shall hereafter be the officers and employees of the commission, and with the transfer there shall pass to the possession of the commission all the records and papers of said bureau, and the commission shall hereafter exercise all the powers and perform all the duties heretofore conferred or imposed upon the said bureau.

All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau shall stand as appropriations to be expended by the commission in the exercise of the power and in the performance of the duties which the law, prior to the passage of this act, conferred or imposed upon said bureau. And the person who at that time shall be the Commissioner of Corporations shall become a member of the commission and the chairman thereof for the term of seven years. The other four commissioners, and a fifth commissioner upon the retirement or expiration of the seven-year term of the former Commissioner of Corporations, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of the commissioners shall be seven years: Provided, That the term of the commissioners first appointed by the President shall date from the taking effect of this act and be as follows: One for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, and one for a term of six years; and the successor to the former Commissioner of Corporations, when appointed, shall be appointed for a term of seven years; and thereafter all appointments shall be for a term of seven years. Upon the retirement from the commission, from whatsoever cause, of the person who at the time this act shall take effect shall be the Commissioner of Corporations the commission shall elect one of its members chairman. The commission shall elect a secretary and assistant secretary, said chairman to hold his office as chairman and said secretary and assistant secretary to hold their offices or connection with the commission at the pleasure of the commission. The members of the commission shall each receive a salary of $10,000 per annum, the secretary of the commission shall receive a salary of $7.200 per annum, and the assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum. In case of vacancy in the commission during the term of the commissioners, an appointment shall be made by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy, and shall be for the unexpired term. The office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but it may at its pleasure hold meetings elsewhere. The commission shall have such clerks, examiners, experts, and other employees as may be necessary and as may be, from time to time, appropriated for by Congress

Sec. 3. That all corporations engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting common carriers, whether required by general rules and regulations for regular information or information specially asked in special instances, shall, from time to time, furnish to the commission such information, statements, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, management, and relation to other companies, at such time, to such degree and extent, and in such form, as may be prescribed by the commission. The commission, at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporation subject to this act to comply with the terms of this section within such time after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance as shall be fixed by the commission shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

Sec. 4. That the information so obtained shall be public records, and the commission shall, from time to time, make public such information in such form and to such extent as it may deem necessary.

Sec. 5. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with any order of the commission for the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or other order enforcing such order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof as in other cases of contempt of court.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of this act the commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, documents, or other things of every kind and nature whatsoever relating to any matter under investigation by the commission. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books, documents, and papers as so ordered), and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of this court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying.

Witnesses whose testimony is taken under the provisions of this act shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like service in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, or other things before the commission, or in obedience to the subpæna of the commission, whether such subpæna be signed or issued by one or more of the commissioners, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify under oath or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission in obedience to a subpæna issued by it in a proceeding instituted other than upon his own initiative: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testify-The purpose of this provision is to give immunity only to natural persons who, under oath, testify in response to a subpæna of the commission in any inquiry instituted by the commission.

Sec. 7. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Sec. 8. That the commission is hereby given authority, upon complaint made to it in such manner as it may by general or specific regulations provide, or on its own initiative, to institute and conduct an investigation to determine whether or not any corporation subject to the provisions of this act was organized or has established such relations with other individuals or corporations or is conducting its business in whole or in part in violation of the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," or any existing or future amendments thereof, or any of said provisions. If the commission shall find any such violation, the matter shall be submitted by it to the Attorney General, to the end that the said violation be proceeded against, prosecuted, and terminated in accordance with the provisions of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof or supplemental thereto as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That the commission shall, at any time, upon the request of the Attorney General or any corporation affected, investigate any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, with all the powers of investigation heretofore bestowed on the commission, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been in the conduct of said corporation or is in the organization of such corporation or its relations to other corporations or individuals a violation of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and in case the commission shall find such violation it shall make a finding, fully stating the same and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said act and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding as aforesaid to the Attorney General, as advisory to the Attorney General, in terminating, by agreement with the corporation affected or by suit, as provided in said act aforesaid, the said unlawful conduct or condition. Said finding shall become a public record of the commission, as provided in section 4, only upon the direction of the Attorney General or the President.

SEC. 10. That in suits of equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General, as provided in the act of July 2, 1890, as aforesaid, the court in which said suit is pending may, at any stage in the litigation, at its discretion, refer to the commission any aspect of the litigation or any proposed decree, whereupon the commission shall investigate the question or questions referred to it with all the powers of investigation hereinbefore bestowed on the commission and shall report its findings to the court, with a copy of the evidence upon which said findings or recommendations are based. Said evidence, findings, and recommendations shall be public records, as provided in section 4 hereof.

Sec. 11. That the said commission shall, on or before the 1st day of January of each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations with reference to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 12. That, with the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners, and such special agents as may be employed from time to time, all em-ployees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission hereby created and by the Civil Service Commission. The commission shall also have the power to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work, paying therefor such rent as may be provided for by appropriation.

SEC. 13. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing, according to the provisions thereof, the said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, nor to amend or modify otherwise the provisions of said act and the amendments thereof.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be recognized for two minutes, just to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Does the gentleman know what Swift & Co., Armour & Co., and similar great institutions pay the railroads for the use of their cars?

Mr. CULLOP. No; I do not know, and do not know that I have ever seen a statement of it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Tuttle] says he can answer the question, and I shall be obliged if he will.

Mr. TUTTLE. I am informed by the Interstate Commerce Commission that Swiff & Co., Armour & Co., and other packing house companies owning their own cars are paid by the railroads for the use of those cars three-quarters of a cent a mile in the East and a cent a mile in the West. These packing companies in return pay the railroads the tariff rates of freight for the goods which are shipped in the cars. They pay sufficient freight, of course, to make the traffic profitable and to enable the railroad companies to pay this rebate of three-quarters of a cent or 1 cent a mile, as the case may be.

I would like to say in regard to the Pullman contract, to which the gentleman from Indiana has referred, that the Pullman Co. has arrangements with the railroads whereby they pay the Pullman Co. 3 cents, 2 cents, 1 cent, or nothing a mile in proportion to the amount of traffic in the Pullman cars, the railroads, of course, receiving the passenger revenue. But this has no relation whatever to the Railway Mail Service; the two are not comparable, because the revenue of the Pullman Car Co.

is based on the amount of service performed.

It is also true the express companies have an arrangement on the basis of a percentage of the business done, and, contrary to public opinion, the express companies are paying more for their service per foot ton per mile than the Post Office Depart-

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TUTTLE. I will.

That was the reason exactly that made the Mr. CULLOP. establishment of the parcel post absolutely necessary, because the express companies and the railroads had joined hands, and their contract shows it, to extort money from the people who transport small packages, and their charge was a most unreasonable one-all because there was no competition in that line of business.

Mr. TUTTLE. I want to say, further, that the joint commission appointed in the last Congress has gone into this question very thoroughly, and has had the benefit of the statistics and reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the benefit of the report of the Post Office Department investigations, all of which indicate that the cost to the railroads for transporting passenger cars per mile, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has just stated, is about 19.41 cents, excluding dividends, interest, and other charges. It has been shown that the railroads to-day, in both the pay for the mails and for the railway post-office cars, are receiving but 18.84 cents for carrying this mail, and they are carrying it for less, according to these figures, than what would be a proper and reasonable rate, according to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MOON. Who are these figures made by?

If. TUTTLE. The rate of 19.41 was compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as of June 30, 1913, as the result of reports received from 64 of the great railroad lines in the country. These figures correspond generally with other authentic information.

Mr. MOON. Do they show the secret contract between the express companies and the railroads for the division of profits?

Mr. TUTTLE. They do not.

Mr. MOON. Then, you can not tell anything about it until you get that.

Mr. TUTTLE. There is no reason to believe that the Government would effect any economy by owning its own cars and paying the railroad to haul them.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. TUTTLE.

Mr. TUTTLE. I will.
Mr. CULLOP. Does not the gentleman know that since the adoption of the parcel post the express companies have arranged and put into operation a carrying schedule very largely reducing the former rates before the passage of the parcel-post law, and does not the gentleman understand that prior to the passage of the parcel-post law there was a secret contract between the railroads and the express companies by which the profits were divided? In addition to that, that the stockholders of the express companies as a rule were owners of stocks and bonds in all of the railroad companies?

Mr. TUTTLE. But that has nothing to do with the case we are discussing.

Mr. CULLOP. And thus it was charging the public and making earnings on which to pay the stockholders in both companies, because of the dual ownership, and therefore earning a double profit? Does not the gentleman know that the express companies in this country own at least $86,000,000 worth of railroad stocks and bonds? Therefore the pay for carriage on the railroads simply enabled a double dividend because of the dual ownership.

Mr. TUTTLE. I know that has nothing to do with the question of the economy of the Government owning its own railway

Mr. CULLOP. The charge was based upon the earning of double dividends upon these stocks that made necessary elimination of it by the parcel-post law, which it will certainly do. The express companies cared but little what the railroads charged for carrying their packages, because they shared in the dividends earned because of its ownership of stock in both companies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have received a number of communications recently which have been based upon the so-called publicity bulletins issued by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., under date of December 22, 1913. These communications complain that the compensation received by the railroads for carrying the mail since the initiation of the parcel post are inadequate.

There are both that applied and digures given in this circular.

from which I doubt that anybody can draw any proper conclusion, but I shall be glad if the gentleman from Tennessee would make a statement as to what arrangement has been made to compensate the railroads for the additional burden placed upon them by reason of the enactment of the parcel-post law, so that it will be available for reference.

Mr. MOON. There is nothing the committee could do or recommend under the present situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has any arrangement been made by the department, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. MOON. No; the bill carries four and a half million dollars more money than the previous bill, and it is assumed by the department that they have enough to meet this emergency. They have not been able to determine yet what percentage the increase will be. This appropriation provides for ordinary service and 5 per cent additional.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do I understand that pending the final adjustment the railroads are being paid additional money over the amount that would have been paid if the parcel post had not been initiated?

Mr. MOON. Until the quadrennial weighing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And then the payments will be adjusted upon the rates as determined at that time?

Mr. MOON. Yes, sir. Mr. FITZGERALD. There seems to be some misapprehension on this information in respect to the matter.

Mr. MOON. That is about all the department could do about the matter in view of the fact that we did not have at one time a weighing to determine it, and in view of the fact that the parcel post is not yet sufficiently developed to determine what the increase might be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this communication, which originates in Kansas City, Mo., and is sent out from the office of the vice president of the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., states that previous to the inauguration of the parcel post the total space on the passenger trains of the Kansas City Southern was divided as follows: For the handling of United States mail, 8.7 per cent; for handling express companies' business, 10.8 per cent; and for handling passenger business, 80.5 per cent. Then the figures are given showing the amounts received by the company for the various classes of service, and the statement is made that had the Post Office Department paid for the additional space occupied on the passenger trains since the initiation of the parcel post, $182,271.23, as against the amount actually received, the railroad would have received $59,024.16 additional to the amount it has been paid. This circular has evidently been given wide publicity, because I have received a number of them from constituents living in my district, in Brooklyn, N. Y. It is apparently addressed to the employees of the railroad, but it seems to me that it is being sent to stockholders of railroads all over the country.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. I will say to the gentleman that I received a similar letter from a stockholder and transmitted it to General Stewart, who wrote me last week very fully in answer to it. I regret that I sent that letter of General Stewart to the person who inquired of me, but I have no doubt that we can obtain a copy of the letter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be very desirable if that letter could be placed in the RECORD, so that information of an authoritative character would be available to send to persons who are basing their complaints on this communication.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I take it that General Stewart would be very, willing to furnish that letter. The amount offered is enough, in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, somewhat to the point of the discussion raised originally by the gentleman from New York is a matter that I desire to call to the attention of the chairman of the committee. There is a good deal of complaint of the burden that is being put on the carriers of mails over rural routes, and the railways and other people who are interested in it feel that the corporations are not being adequately paid for the service that is being rendered, and are communicating with me, and I suppose every other Member of the I have here a bit of news, clipped from a paper published in Texas, my home, which suggests a condition of a very extraordinary nature. If this story is true-and I heard something in the Post Office Department which indicates that it is then I doubt if the sum of money which I understood the chairman to mention as additional provision to meet these emergencies will be adequate. Here is an extraordinary story of an increase of parcel mail offered to the contractor between Silver City, Grant County, N. Mex., and a mining camp 50 miles away. A flouring mill out there is putting up its produce in packages to come within the weight limit fixed by the parcelpost law, and is offering it to be sent in that way over the mountains. The mining camp has had metal receptacles made to bring its fuel oil in by parcel post, because it is cheaper than it can be carried in any other way over those mountains. The contractor has been utterly swamped. The post office at Silver City has been converted into a warehouse for a flouring mill, and the contractor is utterly unable to transport the stuff. It has accumulated, and he has proposed to throw up his contract and to reimburse his bondsman, who will settle with the United States, the bond being merely for $2,000. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads whether or not emergencies like that will be met and the service continued, or will the contractor be forced into bankruptcy?

Mr. MOON. I think the department can, under the law, meet any emergency

Mr. SLAYDEN. This distinctly states that the department is insisting that he go on with the execution of his contract.

Mr. MOON. Well, probably that is right.
Mr. SLAYDEN. That means immediate bankruptcy for the

Mr. MOON. That is a matter we could not settle in this bill, anyway, nor could we make any provision of law in this bill that would cover questions of that sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of clearing up the minds of some of the members of the committee in re gard to the effect of the establishment of the parcel post and as to any increase in the payment to the railroads, I wish to say that it will be some years before the railroads receive any adequate compensation for that added burden.

Mr. MOON. I want to say this to the gentleman, that the long-line railroads insist that they are not paid enough, and the short-line railroads insist that they are not paid enough, and there is a conflict of testimony of that nature, but the Governmen is insisting, and has insisted, that they are all paid too much now.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reply to the statement made by the chairman of the committee I do not know of any recommendations made by the post-office officials in which they state that the present scale of pay to the railroads is too high—— Mr. MOON. There are documents in the last Congress showing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The point I am making is this, that by reason of the increased tonnage arising from the establishment of the parcel post the railroads are not receiving any added compensation for this service other than the little percentage increase that was provided in the last appropriation act, which authorized an allowance of 5 per cent to all those railroads whose weight of mails was determined prior to January 1, 1913.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why?
Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New York asks why. I will say to the gentleman that as he well knows the principle on which railroads receive their compensation is determined by weight every four years, and because of the conditions of weighing through the four different contract sections, most of the railroads will not receive any additional compensation for two, three, and four years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit? Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me to conclude, I will then be glad to do so. The weighing of the mails took place last in what is known as the first contract section, consisting of New England and the Middle States. England the mails were weighed in the autumn of 1912, and the parcel post was not in operation until January 1 following, therefore they receive no compensation and they will not receive additional compensation based on parcel-post tonnage until the weighing four years hence. All the railroads in New England will not receive an increase over the tonnage shown in the last weighing until July 1, 1917. In the Middle States, including the State which the gentleman so ably represents on the floor of the House, the weighing there took place last February to June, but the parcel post was not in full operation even then. The average weight of parcel post at that time was only 1 pound. Since then it has been increased to 20 pounds in the first two zones, and recently that weight has been extended to the entire country and to 50 pounds in the first two zones. Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Permit me to explain this feature and then I will be glad to yield. So the railroads in the Middle States are only receiving the added compensation based upon the weighing as ascertained from February to June. next weighing takes place in the far western section beginning this coming month—that is, in the States west of the Dakotas and running to the Pacific coast. There the parcel-post mail is comparatively light and they will receive their added compensation beginning July 1 of this year. The heaviest section, known as the Middle West, will not have their mails weighed for a year hence, and upon those weights, which will go into effect July 1, 1915, they will receive for the first time any added compensation other than this little 3.7 per cent which was provided in the last appropriation bill. The appropriation aggregated but $1,700,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Five per cent the last time.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was 5 per cent, but the average allowed by the department only averaged 3.6 per cent, and totaled $1,700,000, according to a letter sent to me by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Stewart.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whatever may have been allowed, the department is authorized to allow up to 5 per cent if the figures show it should be allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department authorized and allowed about $1,700,000

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department will allow all that it can reasonably be shown to be due.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, the year following the weighing of the mail in the middle western section will be the weighing in the southern section, and the southern railroads will receive no other added compensation except this little percentage until July 1, 1916.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood my colleague on the committee to say that, on account of the increased size of the package authorized-

Mr. STAFFORD. The increased weight of the package authorized.

Mr. MADDEN. On account of the increased weight of the package authorized, there would be a great deal of added weight; but the truth is the average weight of the packages is only 15 ounces now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon in that particular. I have here the reports of the department, taken in April, where the average weight was 16 ounces; and also those of average weighings from October 1 to October 15, which show that, by reason of the increase of weight established by the Post Office Department from 11 pounds to 20 pounds in the first and second zones, the weight has increased to 1 pound and

Mr. MOON. Now, if the gentleman has reached a point where

I can interrupt him——
Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield gladly to the gentleman now. Mr. MOON. It seems to me the discussion along this line is of no value to us now. We can do nothing in the bill on this subject, and a report is coming in on the question of railway mail compensation before a great while, upon which the House may readjust the whole matter and cover all of these questions in reference to the parcel post. Of course it is apparent to the gentleman as to everybody else that there has been an increase in transportation by railroad companies for mail on account of the parcel post, and there is no disposition in the world to give the railroad companies any less than is due to them or that they ought to have for that service. Unquestionably short-line roads may require some additional compensation, and the longline roads may or may not. There is a document in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the last administration that is quite strong on the question of railway compensation, and they insist that they are paying under the first plan now very much more than they are entitled to.

Mr. STAFFORD. And an official connected with the postal commission that is now investigating this subject claims that we are underpaying the railroads $15,000,000.

Mr. MOON. We have no vote on that now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming that the former compensation was fair and adequate, then I claim, and rightly claim, and it can not be disputed, that this added tonnage that has been imposed upon the railroads is an appropriation of property for which they are receiving no compensation.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed on this section.

There is a point of order on this question. Mr. MANN.

That is what I wanted to call up. Mr. MOON. Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman reserve it?

What do you want to know about the matter? Mr. MOON. The first proviso is a limitation and is not subject to a point of order. The second section is subject to a point of order. Mr. MANN. Of that I am aware.

Mr. MOON. This bill simply carries a provision already carried in the last bill, word for word, on this subject, and if this proviso is stricken out we will simply go back to the old law. That is all there is about it.

Mr. MANN. In the absence of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock], who would make a point of order if he were here, I will make a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I trust the gentleman will not do so.

Mr. MANN. In view of the action of the committee, which is touchy on the subject, I make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I did not understand what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] said. Mr. MANN. I said the gentleman declined to explain the matter and seemed to be quite touchy. Mr. MOON. I did not decline to explain it and did not get touchy about it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman explained it fully, that ends I make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Well, let the gentleman make his point of order and let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of Mr. MADDEN. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague will reserve his point of order for an explanation.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to reserve it for an explanation, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] insisted upon action.

Mr. MADDEN. I will explain it. This proviso at the bottom of page 14 of the bill is a limitation on the appropriation. It

That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, III., and at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000.

from the end of the railroad terminals that come from the east-for East St. Louis is the terminus of all the railroads coming from the east toward St. Louis-and all the mail coming from the west and the south into the terminal station at St. Louis is loaded in-

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, what is the gentleman insisting upon? Does he insist that this is a limitation?

Mr. MADDEN. I insist that it is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. MOON. And that the point of order is not well taken? Mr. MADDEN. I am reaching that. The gentleman has withheld his point of order.

Mr. MOON. I thought he made it.

Mr. MADDEN. No: he has withheld it.
Mr. MOON. All right.
Mr. MADDEN. The Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis hauls the mail coming from the east over the Eads Bridge and through the tunnel built under the city of St. Louis into the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., where the mail is handled and distributed, and facilities, such as space, heat, light, and water, are furnished by the Terminal Railroad Association.

There were railroads ending in St. Louis, Mo., on the west side of the Mississippi River, and at East St. Louis, Ill., on the east side of the Mississippi River, long before any bridge was built. No railroad has ever had its own tracks across the Mississippi River at St. Louis. All the west-side lines end at the Union Station, St. Louis, Mo., and all the east-side lines end at East St. Louis, Ill. The Eads Bridge was constructed, as was the tunnel, in order that the east-side lines might connect with the west-side lines at the Union Station in St. Louis, Mo. The Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis was organized in order to operate this connecting link.

The stock of the Terminal Railroad Association is owned in equal parts by 15 railroads, known as proprietary lines, but there are using railroad companies which are not proprietary lines and whose rails end in East St. Louis, Ill. The west-side proprietary lines, which end in St. Louis, Mo., and which are not concerned with the transportation of the mail over the Eads Bridge are: Wabash Railroad Co.; Burlington Railroad Co.; Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Co.; Rock Island Railroad Co.; Cotton Belt Railroad Co.; Frisco Railroad Co.; Iron Mountain Railroad Co.; and Missouri Pacific Railroad Co.

The proprietary lines which end in East St. Louis, Ill., and bring the eastern mail to that point are: Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., Chicago & Alton Railroad Co., Big Four Railroad Co., Illinois Central Railroad Co., Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., Southern Railway Co., and Vandalia, or Pennsylvania Lines. The railroads which are not proprietary lines and which end in East St. Louis, Ill., are: Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Co.; Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co.; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad Co.; and Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad Co.

Under a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis must be operated without a profit, and any railroad may use its facilities and become a stockholder as a matter of law and right without the consent of the present proprietary lines or the terminal com-All other terminal companies, such, for instance, as the pany. one at Washington, D. C., may be operated at a profit, and other railroads may be refused entrance. The tariffs of the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, under the Supreme Court decision, must be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and can be no higher than is necessary for the maintenance, upkeep, and betterment of the property, and no dividend can ever be declared.

Since the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis is not permitted to make any profit, the Government can not, as a matter of equity, require it to perform services at a loss. If any loss does result from operation, the proprietary lines must make up the deficit. This obligation is imposed in the contract between the proprietary companies and the Terminal Railroad Association, and has been declared obligatory in the Supreme Court decision. The west side proprietary lines have their termini in the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., and use no part of the facilities of the Terminal Railroad Association in the transportation of the mail.

Since the east side lines end in East St. Louis, Ill., it is necessary for the terminal company to haul the mail across the bridge and through the tunnel into the Union Station and then expend approximately $20,000 in handling the mail, and in addition thereto afford facilities worth many thousand dollars more. All the revenue for having hauled the mail to East St. Louis, Ill., is received by the east side lines, four of which are not proprietary companies and can not therefore be called upon to make up any deficit. If the Government requires this service To begin with, all the mail that crosses over the St. Louis make up any deficit. If the Government requires this service bridge from the east side, or from East St. Louis, crosses over to be performed at a loss, the west side proprietary lines, which do not make use of the terminal facilities, must contribute toward the resulting deficit, while the nonproprietary companies on the east side get all of the revenues for hauling the mail to East St. Louis, Ill., without having to bear any of the loss arising from subsequent handling and the performance of the necessary services at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo. It seems but fair that if this terminal company, which, under the decision of the Supreme Court, is made absolutely unique and different from any other terminal company, can not operate at a profit the Government should not ask it to operate at a

Experience of many years has shown that it is necessary to charge the railroads, including the proprietary lines, at least $3 per car for the use of the bridges and tunnel in order to meet the cost of their upkeep. The railroads, both proprietary and nonproprietary, now pay $3 for each baggage and passenger car so transported, and the express companies pay $3.71 per car. The Terminal Railroad Association owns both the Eads and Merchants Bridges. From the standpoint of handling mails for the Government the terminal company has treated the mail coming over the Merchants Bridge and the mail coming over the Eads Bridge as a unified proposition. Since 1894 there has been an annual deficit from the operation of the Merchants mail route by the terminal company. The terminal company receives approximately $14,000 annually for transporting the mails over the Merchants Bridge, and if the full amount of $35,000, as provided for in this bill, should be granted for the service performed on the Eads Bridge, the total compensation of the Terminal Association would be $49.000. Approximately 33,000 cars go annually into the Union Station from the east side over both bridges, 19,000 going, approximately, over the Eads Bridge and 14,000 over the Merchants Bridge. If the full amount of $35,000 should be granted, the Government would, in reality, be paying only $1.50 per car.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman what these words mean in this proviso—

The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the pres-

And so forth. What is the "present law"? Mr. MADDEN. The present law authorizes the payment of $50,000 a year for this work.

Mr. BARTLETT. How can it, then, be subject to a point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. It is not subject to a point of order; but I was explaining the item in the bill and the reasons for it.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Is this the only point in the United States Mr. BALTZ. where these conditions exist as to the carrying of mails across a bridge from one State to another?

Mr. MADDEN. It is not a question of carrying the mails across a bridge from one State to another, because the mail comes into this terminal from the other side as well. Now, the railroads from the other side are not participants in the expense of maintaining the terminal, because they do not have to cross the bridge at all. If this item went out of the bill and the terminal company was required to do the work for nothing, it would have to add to the expense of the railroads coming in from the East, while the railroads coming from the West into the terminal station would participate in the benefits of it without participating in the expense.

Mr. BALTZ. Is there not a law now which authorizes the payment to the terminal association of $50,000 a year?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the law authorizing the Postmaster General to pay $50,000 a year for this service; but this limits him to $35,000.

The $35,000 was virtually an agreement made Mr. ALLEN. last year, after the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] had presented this question.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Mr. STEENERSON. Does not this come within the Holman rule, as being a reduction of expenditure?

Mr. MADDEN. There is a permanent law that authorizes the payment of $50,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. And this is less than that?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order?

I do not withdraw the point of order. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there can be any possible question about this being subject to a point of order. Perhaps the Chair has a different view.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Here is a direct authorization-

But provided further, That the Postmaster General may in his discretion pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, III., and at the Union Station at St. Louis. Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building, and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000.

That is not provided for by law anywhere.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; there is a provision for the payment of $50,000.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Postmaster General under the existing law, regardless of the appropriation, is authorized to pay the terminal company at St. Louis for the transportation of mail across the bridge there not to exceed $50,000 a year.

This matter has been before the House on a number of occasions, and there was inserted in this bill the first proviso-Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis.

That, by the way, was the action of the House. I think myself that that probably would be unfair. That was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-DOCK]. In the Senate or in conference-I think in conferencethe item was agreed to that is in the bill. I would not have the item go out entirely and stay out, if I could. I think there ought to be a reconsideration of the subject. I do not believe the present provision in the bill is a fair one to the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no authorization of law for the payment for the use or for the lighting and heating of the mail buildings in St. Louis. Here is a direct authorization; and while it says "within the present law," the only meaning of that term is, within the sum of $50,000, to pay $35,000. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], who understands the situation as well as I do, at first conceded the point of order, because he knew that this is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair had not been called to that portion of the proviso—including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building, and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000.

The Chair thinks there is no law providing for that particular part of the proviso, and therefore the Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Chair want to hear anything on that? I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I contend that there is permanent law authorizing the Postmaster General to pay $50,000 for this work.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to call his attention to the words at the end of the paragraph:

Including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building, and ransfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall transfer service at not exceed $35,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Chairman contend that that is subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the permanent law to which the gentleman refers by which he states that this provision is authorized?

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that the permanent law authorizes the Postmaster General to pay $50,000 for the transportation of the mails across the bridge, for their handling, and for the lighting and heating of the terminal station, and the facilities that are used in the handling of the mail; and on the merits of the question alone there ought not to be any doubt about the right of the Postmaster General to pay for this service, without any denial by anybody that it is rendered. Those people pay over $20,000 a year out of their own pockets to do the work that is chargeable against the Government of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps I can give the chairman the law that applies to this.

I read from the Postal Laws, section 1320:

SEC. 1320. The Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to pay from appropriations for transportation by railroad routes for the special transfer and terminal service between the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting and heating of mail building, and the transfer service at St. Louis, at the rate of not exceeding $50,000 per annum.

The marginal reference is 1899, March 1, Thirtieth Statutes at Large, page 965.

Now, the section in reference to the mileage basis is as follows:

2. That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis: But provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting and heating of the mail building, and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000. (1913, Mar. 4, 37 Stat., 797.)

Mr. MANN. From what statute has the gentleman been read-

Mr. STAFFORD. The first paragraph, according to the marginal notes, is the act of March 1, 1899, and the second paragraph is contained in the Post Office appropriation act for the present fiscal year. Mr. MANN. If

If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of freight or expressage on postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and empty mall bags, $510.000. And the Postmaster General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the Postal Service, except postage stamps, in the respective weighing divisions of the country, immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and thereafter such postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the Postal Service, except postage stamps, shall be transmitted by either freight or express.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all the lan-Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out an the language after the figures "$510,000," on page 14, down to and including line 9, on page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 14 and 15, strike out all after the figures "$510,000," in line 24, page 14, down to and including line 9, on page 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For acting clerks in place of clerks or substitutes injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the clerk's annual salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and to enable the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Railway Mail Service, or post-office inspector who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $134,500.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think that this bill is a sort of Jekyll-and-Hyde measure. The paragraph just read bestows a blessing, and another paragraph in it pronounces a curse. I think it is an attempted assimilation of benevolence and malevolence. an attempt to give at once good legislation and bad legislation. This paragraph to provide for injured employees is radiant with the sunshine of social justice, and the paragraph that attempts to get rid of efficient assistant postmasters is enveloped in the atmosphere of partisan decapitation.

Mr. MOON. That question is not up in this section. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I am speaking about this one.

Mr. MOON. But the gentleman is speaking about the other provision.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I am speaking about both.

Mr. MOON. There is no amendment with reference to the

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have made a pro forma amendment that entitles me to speak

Mr. MOON. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the debate shall be confined to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I shall proceed to say, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, that I believe the Democratic Party should be true to its pledges. I believe the Democratic Party should be true to its pledges. I believe the Democratic Party made its latest declaration in the platform at Baltimore, and that it is about to prove itself a defaulter to its promises.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the section under consideralegislation or that legislation that conflicts with the employees of the service. I am speaking about this paragraph which attempts to do something good for them, and I am contrasting it with the paragraph that attempts to do away with the efficient assistant postmasters.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman might discuss the whole Bible in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman must remember that the rule of debate under the five-minute rule differs from the rule of debate under general debate. The gentleman must confine himself to a discussion of the paragraph which is now under consideration.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair so rules, I shall be so guided. I simply wish to express my approval of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for this beneficent legislation. It is a hard thing to realize that men give their lives to the Postal Service and have no provision made for them, and I am very glad that the Post Office Committee has seen fit to bring in a provision which will create an opportunity for men when they shall be disabled in the service to be properly compensated. I have had many men in the Postal Service complain to me about the unfairness of the service in not making suitable provision for injured employees, and I am glad that it has been done. I hope that it will meet with the approval f the Senate and become a law. But. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in conclusion that I hope the opportunity will come to me to express my disapproval of another paragraph in this bill in a more emphatic manner than is now allowed me.

Mr. MOON. That comes on section 6.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read: On page 17 strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

In lieu thereof the following:

That hereafter the Postmaster General shall have authority to employ acting employees in place of all employees or substitutes hereinafter mentioned who are injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the employees' salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and to enable the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives, for the benefit of wife, children, or dependent relatives of any rallway postal clerk, substitute rallway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Rallway Mall Service, post-office inspector, letter carrier in the City Delivery Service, rural letter carrier, post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury: Provided, That no compensation shall be pald any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that the form in which he offers his amendment is the form of an appropriation item-

To enable the Postmaster General to pay the sum-

And so forth.

That form is taken from a form where it is followed by an appropriation. I suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the words "to enable" and insert, after the word "General," the words "is authorized," so that it would read:

And the Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000-

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to accept that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "to enable" and inserting, after the word "general," the words "is authorized," so that the paragraph will read:
"But not exceeding 12 months additional, and the Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000, etc."

Mr. MOON. Does that paragraph provide for an appropriation at all?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not. Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Connecticut include the appropriation of $134,500 provided for in the bill.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. I desire to do that, and ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just sugthe gentleman desires to discuss the section, he may proceed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, in my opinion, does not go far enough. It carries the recommendation of the committee as embodied in section 7, but it leaves out of the classifi-cations who are to receive this benefit many very meritorious employees, employees who are in a much more hazardous employment than some of those who are classified in the amendment now pending. May I mention the chauffeurs who are employed by the Government in operating the parcel-post automobiles, mechanics, applicated in the leading treat officer. mobiles, mechanics employed in the leading post offices, and also the 1,800 laborers who receive the small salary of $840 a year. No compensation whatsoever is provided for those classes, but provision is made for some who do not have any hazardous employment whatsoever. No one can say that the letter carrier is engaged in any hazardous employment I am in entire sympathy with the object which is sought to be attained by the amendment offered by the gentleman, but I do not think it goes far enough. Another criticism that might properly be urged against this amendment is that, as embodied in section 7, it provides for the payment of $2.000 to the legal representatives for the benefit of the wife, child, or dependent Who is to determine whether there is any wife, relatives. child, or dependent relative existing?

Under its terms the Post Office Department must necessarily be obliged to pay $2.000 absolutely to the legal representatives and then let the legal representatives or local probate courts determine whether there is any wife, child, or dependent relative. I am not making this criticism in any captious spirit. I have studied this provision very carefully; in fact, 10 years ago I drew a similar provision when it was first carried in the appropriation hill. As to the proviso at the end, that no comago I drew a similar provision when it was first carried in the appropriation bill. As to the proviso at the end, that no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence, I ask the gentleman from Connecticut, in case an employee dies within a year and an injury happened as a result of his own negligence, is the Government thereby obliged to pay $2,000 to the legal representatives?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. The Government is not obliged to pay it at all to pay it at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet it would be obliged under the phraseology as it now exists. There is no question about it. It is a matter for serious consideration. The only limitation as to payment in case of negligence is this phraseology on page 29 of the bill, "That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence." There is no limitation whatsoever upon the payment of an allowance of $2,000 to his legal representatives in case of death. So, Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a bill, and I am going to offer it as a substitute for the pending amendment. It extends to all postal employees. I now offer it, and wish to have recognition to discuss it. I desire to offer it as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 13, insert as a substitute for the pending amendment

Page 17, line 13, insert as a substitute for the pending amendment the following:

"That any employee of the Postal Service who is disabled by accidental injury not due to his own negligence received while performing his official duties may be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of his disability, but not for more than one year, and then at half pay for the further period of disability, if any, but not exceeding one year additional; and if he dies within a year as a result of the injury, leaving a widow or children under 16 years of age, such widow and children shall be entitled to receive, in such portions as the Postmaster General may decide, the sum of $2,000; and in the event that no such widow and children survive him and he leaves dependent parents or dependent brothers or sisters, then such parents, brothers, and sisters shall be entitled to receive, in such portions as the Postmaster General may decide, the sum of $1,000; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to employ substitutes in place of such injured employees while absent during such period of disability."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this has passed the point of order, and there is not a full House, and it really ought to be voted upon by a full House.

Mr. MOON. No point of order has been made.

Mr. MANN. It has passed the point of order.

Mr. MOON. It has passed that stage.

Mr. MANN. Why not adjourn?

Mr. MOON. I am going to make that motion when the gentleman finishes; I did not want to take the gentleman off his

Mr. STAFFORD. I will take the floor to-morrow morning in advocacy of the substitute I offer.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11328, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no conclusion thereon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 23, 1914.

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 48 will be proceeded

BAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Cham-BERLAIN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, before that is acted upon, I desire to make a statement in reference to the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings. In the latter part of the little controversy between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] and myself the following occurred:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and so is a dugout going through the Chapola; but the two things have nothing to do with one another.

Mr. CHAMBERIAIN. We have improved the Chapola and a good many other streams.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chapola is a fictitious stream, and a name which I just invented.

I wish to state that I understood the Senator from Mississippi to refer to the Atchafalaya, which is an outlet for the Mississippi River into the Gulf of Mexico, and for the improvement of which an appropriation of over $450,000 has been made.

If the Senator invented the word "Chapola," I want to say that the Chapola is a river in Florida, a branch of the Apalachicola River, for which Congress from time to time has made appropriations, running from $27,500 to other amounts at dif-So, if the Senator invented the name, I simply ferent times. wish to say that he is a pretty good guesser.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe we ought to consider the bill further until we have a quorum. I make the point

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Gallinger Goff Gronna Martine, N. J. Myers Nelson Norris Ashurst Bacon Bankhead Gronna Hitchcock James Jones Kenyon Kern Lane Lea Lipplit Lodge Brady Brandegee Bristow Smith, Md. Overman Perkins Poindexter Stephenson Sterling Sutherland Bryan Burton Chamberlain Chilton Pomerene Ransdell Thomas Thompson Walsh Williams Reed Robinson Cummins du Pont Fall Colt Lodge McLean Martin, Va. Mr. BRYAN. My colleague [Mr. Fletcher] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the amendment of the com-It will be stated.

The Secretary. On behalf of the Committee on Territories, on page 8, line 5, before the word "cause," insert the words "designate and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon, on behalf of the Committee on the Territories, offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 5, after the word "located," insert the words "and acquired for the United States by construction, purchase, or condemnation or partly by construction, purchase, or condemnation."

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask in what print that is proposed to be inserted?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that it does not appear in any print. It is one of the committee | Canal, and those who were not here have familiarized them-amendments, and embodies a portion of the Commins amendment. There was some question in the mind of the Senator as to whether the President would have power to condemn or to acquire a road now constructed up there, and to remove any doubt on the subject the committee took that portion of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and embodied it as a committee amendment.

Mr. BURTON. These words are to be added to the portion included in the print in italics, I understand, on page 5

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is to be a part of that. It is a part of the Cummins amendment.

Mr. BURTON. After the word "located"? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have the amendment read again. It is

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page S, line 5, after the word "located," insert the words "and acquire for the United States by construction, purchase, or condemnation, or partly by construction, purchase, or condemnation," so that, if amended, it will rend:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to designate and cause to be located and acquired for the United States, by construction, purchase, or condemnation, or partly by construction, purchase, or condemnation, such main lines for railroads, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if that means that the President is authorized to purchase rallroads already constructed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; if he saw fit to do so. state to the Senator that there was some doubt as to whether he would have that power if he could make arrangements to purchase one or other of the lines now there. There is a further committee amendment proposed which provides that, if the President does not see fit to purchase one of the established lines now and prefers, rather, on the report of engineers, to go somewhere else and construct a line, that power will also be given him under the terms of the bill.

Mr. BACON. But he has the power, under this proposed amendment, to purchase any railroad he sees fit? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There in Alaska.

Mr. BACON. In Alaska, and without any specification as

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is left to the President to determine that.

Mr. BACON. That is what I mean. The proposition is that the President shall have the right to purchase any railroad in Alaska he may see fit to purchase, without any stipulation as to the cost of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; or to condemn it.
Mr. JONES. Let me suggest that if he does that it will be necessary to acquire it as a part of the Government line.

Mr. BACON. I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to express my protest against so broad an authority being given by Congress to anyone. It seems to me to be utterly unwise for us to agree to appropriate $40,000,000 to be spent in the purchase of railroads or in building railroads just as the President, even, might see fit. That, of course, means that he shall appoint a commission to make the purchase or a commission to determine what is to be built.

I do feel that when Congress votes the money we ought to know with reasonable accuracy what we are preparing to do, and that before we vote the money to buy a railroad we ought to know what the railroad is, what it is to cost, and what it is to be worth to operate. We ought to have some vision of the feasibleness at least of the enterprise into which we are plunging.

The bill went certainly far enough before; too far for me. If a practical proposition was submitted designating a line of road in Alaska with accurate estimates as to its cost, with accurate designation of the proposed line, with reasonably accurate estimates showing that it could be operated without loss, and under provisions where when built the Government was to lease it, I am not prepared to say that I would not support such a measure.

I had not at this time intended to say anything, but the added suggestion that the President is to have the liberty of taking $40,000,000 to buy railroads has reached to so extreme a point I am impelled to express the objection I have been feeling for

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, Senators will recall—those of us who were here at the time of the purchase of the old Panama selves with it since—that even in that instance we stipulated the price and designated the property. But in this instance it is proposed neither to designate the property nor to stipulate

I did not intend to say anything either, Mr. President, but it does seem to me that there is a limit beyond which we should not go. I do not mean to say that I am opposed to any effort to develop Alaska; but I do want it, if I give my support to it, to be kept in moderate bounds, and that Congress shall have some definite information and commit itself to some definite plan before this enterprise is undertaken. Unless it is so restricted, I shall not myself vote for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I think this bill as originally reported grants authority altogether too indefinite to the President, but the amendment now proposed distinctly betters the bill. This bill as it is now before the Senate provides that the President shall locate a main line of railroad from tidewater to the interior of Alaska. I think most people feel that there are but two points, or possibly three, from which the railroad can leave tidewater. There are railroads extending into the interior a little way from two of these points. It would be absurd, as every one will agree, for the United States to build a parallel line of road from Resurrection Bay or from Cordova toward the interior if it can buy either of these roads more cheaply than it can build another. The only purpose of this amendment is to provide that, if the President locates the line or the lines of railroad from either of these points, he shall have authority, instead of expending the money of the United States in building a new line side by side with one that is already there, to buy the existing railroads. That is so obviously right that no one ought, as it seems to me, to question it.

I have much sympathy with the view of both Senators from Georgia that, before a purchase of this character becomes completed or binding upon the United States, Congress ought to know the conditions of the purchase and the amount of the purchase price, but that can be provided for by a later amendment to the bill; and I am sure we will all agree that, if the President locates a line of railroad, he must locate it from tidewater and that he ought to have the option either to build a distinct line or to buy an existing line, for it would be a criminal waste of money to construct a new line up a narrow gorge from the Pacific Ocean when already there is a line located and constructed over such route. I take it that is the only object of this particular amendment.

There is a later amendment proposed by the committee, which also adopts part of the amendment that I shall offer, that if an existing line is to form a part of the railroad, then the acquisition of the existing line shall precede the construction of any extension of that line. That also, it seems to me,

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly. Mr. BACON. I am not so familiar with this matter as is the Senator from Iowa. I wish to say, however, that we have been strongly urged to support this measure, on the ground that it is necessary to reach the coal fields and to open them to the public. As I understand, the two railroads that are already constructed reach the coal fields.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; that is an error. Neither of the railroads reaches the coal fields,

Mr. BACON. I can not designate by name the different localities on the map, but I am quite sure that while the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] was speaking he indicated a point near the shore

Mr. CUMMINS. If I may be permitted to reply now to the Senator from Georgia, I will say that the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad would reach the Bering coal fields with a branch, and the Alaska Northern, as is shown on the map, would reach the Matanuska coal fields with a branch. I take it that the main line of neither is intended to reach the coal fields.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking about what is intended; I am speaking about what has already been done. I recollect asking the question of one of the Senators—I think it was the Senator from Montana, when he was on the floor, and he indicated the two points. One of them was within some 25 or 30 miles of the coast, in the southern part of Alaska, and the other one was some greater distance—a little farther up to the north each of which, as I understood from the Senator, did reach the coal fields. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], when on the floor yesterday, was asked the question in regard to one of these railroads, and I think he said it did reach the coal fields, but that there were such windstorms almost constantly prevailing there as to make it a very undesirable locality in which to do work.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT, Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. Mr. LANE. I wish to correct the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon]. I did not intend to make the statement which he has attributed to me. Neither one of these railways reaches the coal fields, and it is not a great distance from the coast to the

Mr. BACON. I could not indicate the point on the map, but I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon to do so, as he is the Senator nearest to the map. As to the point indicated on the map by the Senator, I understood him to say that that was one of the coal regions.

Mr. LANE. That [indicating on the map] is the Matanuska coal field, and a line of railway reaches into the interior about 75 miles. The line is perhaps 75 miles away from the coal fields now.

Mr. BACON. That line of railroad is yet 75 miles away from the coal fields?

Yes. The other line has started up the Copper Mr. LANE. River to reach the copper mines, but there is not a branch into the Bering coal fields at all.

Mr. BACON. Speaking now of the coal fields, are they not within 25 miles of the coast, and does not the railroad there reach the coal fields?

Mr. JONES. They are 35 or 40 miles away.
Mr. LANE. I do not think they have ever built that road.

Mr. BACON. They are within a very short distance of the coal fields. The point as to which I wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa-and the question I have propounded was but preliminary-was, if these railroads have reached the coal fields or near by, where they can easily be projected into the coal fields by their present owners, is there any advantage in those railroads being taken away from the private owners and vested in the ownership of the Government? Is it not rather to be desired that the railroads exist and that they be operated by their present owners rather than that the Government operate them?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not sponsor for the bill, although I do favor the Government ownership of a line of railway in Alaska. As I understand the situation, what is known as the Bering coal fields lie within about 30 miles of the shore. They are not reached by any line of railroad now in existence. They can be reached, first, by an independent line from the shore of about 25 or 30 miles in length, or they can be reached by a branch line built from the Copper River to the Northwestern Railroad that extends farther north, or into the interior, than the locality in which these coal fields lie. The Matanuska coal

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the Senator leaves that point, is it not true, however, that if you build lines from the coal fields immediately to the seashore you will not have a harbor there which you can use?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is one harbor there. There is no trouble about that part of it. I was about to say in regard to the Matanuska coal fields that they lie 20 miles, or something like that, from the shore, and the Alaska Northern has reached out so that it is already about 60 miles in length. If it is continued upon the lines suggested by the commission, it will require a branch from that main line of railroad of, I think, some 25 or 30 miles in order to reach the latter fields of coal, so that in either event the coal fields must be reached by an independent line from the shore or by branches from the main lines that are now contemplated.

Answering the further suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, I observe that, while it is perfectly true that these lines of railroad would undoubtedly be extended if there were sufficient inducement to do so, they will not be extended until the opportunity is given to do so to those who might desire to develop the resources of Alaska; and, in my opinion, they would not be extended unless the Government were to extend some such aid to them as in times past it extended to the pioneer railroads in continental United States.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator believe that those roads would be extended if the Government were to so open the coal fields, either by lease or otherwise, that they could be operated and mined and the coal transported over those roads and utilized in commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. I doubt that somewhat; but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] knows so much more about the subject, and can give so much more definite information, that I would rather the question were directed to him.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to say, to avoid any possibility of misconception, that the object of my inquiry of him was not to raise an issue as to the propriety of Government ownership or the policy of Government ownership, but it was this: If the object is the development of Alaska by the building of railroads, and a railroad is already built, that development is no more secured by the transfer of the title to the Government of the United States than it is at present secured by its existence, the title resting in the hands of private individuals.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it were true that the railroads were already built, the conclusion would inevitably follow; but the railroads are not built; they extend but a short way from the seashore, and there seems to be no immediate likelihood, at any rate, of a further extension, and therefore the Government intervenes to relieve the situation.

Mr. WORKS and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have felt for a long time that the National Government should do something definite and effective in the way of opening up the resources of Alaska. The construction of a railroad is one step in that direction. doubt very much whether it should be the first step, but the friends of the measure have seen proper to take that course. Unless fair and just laws are enacted, by which the resources of Alaska can be opened up, we had better not spend any money in the construction of a railroad. Therefore in supporting this bill I shall do so with the hope and expectation that it will be followed by legislation that will enable the resources of that great section of the country to be opened up.

At one time this whole matter was before the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member. It was given the most careful consideration by that committee in many respects, including the question of the construction of a railroad and the question of providing some means by which somebody, either the Government or private individuals, might develop the coal fields of Alaska. At that time I was very much impressed in favor of a leasing system that might be adopted that would enable the Government to lease these lands for development purposes, and I hope some just laws may be enacted with that end in view.

Senators may think it is an easy matter to determine the location of the proposed road. It is not. That matter was considered very carefully by the Committee on Public Lands, and there was a good deal of discussion as to where the railroad should be located; in fact, it was one of the most difficult questions that presented itself to that committee. There are There are different bays or harbors there with which a railroad may con-There has been a good deal of difference of opinion as to which one of them should be touched by the railroad; and the various questions as to whether the Government should build independently or purchase the existing railroads and extend them were considered with a good deal of care.

While it seems to be transferring to the executive department a very broad authority in providing that the President may determine the question of the location of this road, perhaps the President is in better condition and will be better able to determine where the railroad should be located than is Congress. For that reason I am perfectly willing to confer that power upon the President, trusting that that department will be just as conscientious and will protect the public interests just as fully as the Congress would do. Therefore I am not disturbed about the proposition to invest this power in the executive

I was not willing to go to the extent that was proposed in the first draft of this bill, and if it had been left in that condition should have voted against it; but as the amount has now been limited and restraints thrown around it that will enable the President to go only so far I am willing to give my support to the bill, although I should much prefer that there should have been included in it some provision by which, after constructing the railroad, we could proceed at once to develop the resources of Alaska in order that the coal that is there might transported over the railroad which we propose to have

Mr. BURTON obtained the floor. Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Ohio will yield just a second, I want to correct a misstatement I made yesterday.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

WILLIAMS. In stating about the cable line up there, the Signal Corps sent me this morning their annual report for 1905, and in that report they claim that the cost of maintenance and operation is and probably will be for years greater than the receipts. So the statement I made yesterday upon information must have been erroneous. I want to correct it in the Record.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senators from Georgia that the vast powers conferred upon the President by this bill are undesirable and without precedent. progress of popular government has been very closely associated with control over the public purse. It is for Congress to make appropriations after the objects of expenditure are thoroughly known and understood.

I recall two instances which might be cited as a precedent for giving the right to the President to select these railway routes and expend a certain amount of money. One was in 1898, when the sum of $50,000,000 was granted to President McKinley for military and naval preparation for the prosecution of hostilities against Spain. That, however, was in a case of great military exigency. The other instance was in 1902, when power was given to President Roosevelt to select a route and then proceed with the construction of an isthmian canal. He was directed, if he could do so within a reasonable time and at a reasonable price, to select the Panama route, otherwise the Nicaraguan route. But the estimates of the cost and all the conditions were fairly well known. Again, it was a case of competition as between the owners or projectors of two routes, and international relations as well were involved in the execution of the plan. This bill, however, proposes to set aside the sum of $40,000,000 to build railroads-or $35,000,000 I believe it is in the last print of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Forty million dollars

Mr. BURTON. There is a little difference of opinion here; some say $35,000.000 and some say $40,000,000.

Mr. JONES. The House bill proposes to appropriate $35,000.000 and the Senate bill $40,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. Well, when you have $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 a mere bagatelle like $5,000,000 does not matter much. Let us compare that with the simple matter of improving a river or a harbor. No matter how exigent it may be, no matter how great a benefit it may impart, it is necessary, first, to pass a resolution here, under which resolution a preliminary examination is made. As the law formerly was a preliminary examination was then followed by another resolution for a But in any event there must be this preliminary examination in pursuance of legislative authority. On that preliminary examination a detailed survey and estimate, an exact estimate, must be had, and then the estimate, with a full report of prospective benefits and other conditions, is placed before Congress.

That, Mr. President, is the true theory of legislative government in the making of expenditures and in the control of This purposes to give to the President absothe public purse. lute power to select routes and to go ahead and build the lines. The sum of $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, whichever it may be, is placed at his disposal.

Mr. President, I think altogether too much is attempted here. in any event. The discussion engaged in by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] opens up a very interesting inquiry. At present you have not any resources to develop. You have no laws, no policy under which they can be developed. It is generally believed—and I trust it may be true—that there is very valuable coal in the Bering River field and in the Matanuska field. The Bering field can be reached by a branch 38 miles in length from an existing railroad. Why go ahead with this elaborate plan, involving, perhaps, the construction of a thousand miles of railway, when it is altogether uncertain whether you will obtain mineral in valuable quantities, when it is still more uncertain whether the agricultural possibilities are there? This, too, when the building of 38 miles of railroad will afford a clear demonstration as to what can be developed.

I must say that I believe decidedly in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, under which existing lines may be utilized, provided they can be obtained at a reasonable price and are in the right location. In the first place, they are there. You will not have to delay your enterprise to build new In the next place, existing railways may occupy the passes and gorges, which are the sole routes available. In the next place, it would be an economic crime to seek to develop the resources of the country by duplicating existing means of transportation, whether furnished by private capital or by public taxation.

So I think that amendment improves the bill; but it does seem to me, Mr. President, that this whole plan is ill advised and contrary to experience. With a comparatively small amount we can try out these questions and discover whether the hidden wealth or undeveloped wealth is there which can be brought to the seaboard and be made an addition to the resources of the country. Presuming that it is there, presuming that there are unlimited quantities of coal and that millions of acres of land can be brought under profitable agricultural production, we are proposing in this bill to build railroads without taking any step to encourage settlers to make available these mineral and agricultural resources. It may be said that railways are necessary to development, that they were built in the western coun-But just see how different the condition was there. The railways constructed across the uninhabited prairies were built through lands of known fertility, where great development was possible in the raising of grain and of stock. There were well-established laws for the acquisition of those lands by homesteaders and purchasers. That was one class of railways constructed. Another was of railways to terminal points on the Pacific coast and elsewhere,

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. BURTON. Thus far we have found in this country that wherever there was development waiting for population private enterprise would supply what was needed. I believe that is true in Alaska. I will add that I think there is no insuperable objection to Government ownership, though I do not believe in it. But, in this case, I do not think it is necessary, and if we embark in that direction we ought to move moderately, not with a great network of lines full grown, but merely adopt the plan that is necessary to determine what possibilities exist and give them proper utilization.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. I think the Senator from Idaho was first on his feet

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to make only a very brief statement.

Mr. BURTON. Very well.
Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Ohio says that the

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Onto says that the western railroads were built through lands of known fertility.

Mr. BURTON. It was one of two objects—either through lands of known fertility or to reach terminal points.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly the Senator remembers when Henry Villard drove the last spike in the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and took the German stockholders out over the line to show them the magnificent country that the road was to open up, and collected the natives at the stopping places in order that they might see what a vast native population the country supported. But the German stockholders, instead of being encouraged at what they saw in that great Northwest as we now know it, were so discouraged that they telegraphed to their agents in Germany to sell the stock, and it caused the col-lapse and bankruptcy of Henry Villard.

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt that may have had something to do with the failure, but I do not think that is what caused the collapse of the Northern Pacific. In that great era of railroad building we were going ahead of rational, symmetrical development. Twenty years later all those railroads were useful as arteries for commerce, but in the season immediately succeeding the Civil War there was a fever for railway construction, which caused very much capital to be wasted and roads built prematurely, just as it seems to me you are proposing to act in a manner altogether premature in this case in Alaska.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Ohio has said several times in the course of his remarks that we might assume that wealth was in Alaska, that the resources were there. We do not have to assume it. It has already been demonstrated. There is plenty of evidence of that fact.

Mr. BURTON. That opens up a proposition which would require a lengthy discussion. I think there are great mineral resources there, great resources in fisheries, possibly some in timber, probably nothing more in agriculture than would be required at points near to the place of production, but here is a very surprising fact. In the year 1901 I rode over a railway from Skagway to White Horse. I have forgotten the exact distance, perhaps 60 or 70 miles. That railway connects at White Horse with steamboats on the Yukon. The little town of White Horse seemed like a Mississippi or Ohio River town. There were a number of boats moored at its wharves. That road had been in operation then for a year or two. It has now been in operation for some 14 years. The total annual tonnage that is carried by railway and by boats on these connecting lines is 32,000 tons, about a dozen trainloads with the modern maximum load of a freight train.

Mr. BORAH. I am very much astonished to know that when

Mr. BORAH. I am very much astomshed to know that when everything has been tied up.

Mr. ROOT. They get it in Canada.

Mr. BORAH. I presume they get it in Canada, because they could not get it in the United States under the present system of administering the law. If all the resources possible for the human mind to conceive of were in Alaska, under present conditions you could not haul any tonnage, because you are not permitted to loosen it and haul it. This bill is defective in that it does not, with the building of the road, provide some means to utilize these resources so that the people generally get the benefit of them. It is only a step, and it seems we should prepare at once to take the other steps.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the Senator from Idaho believe it would be well to establish a policy for Alaska before we go ahead and build railroads when they will have nothing to carry?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and the Senator from Idaho has been for that for the last five, six, or seven years, and every time he has met with the proposition, "Let us do something else first," for fear that somebody will get in there and steal all the resources. Now, there is a way to open these resources without permitting monopoly or theft.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have here a little pamphlet-I think other Senators have received it—on the Alaskan Railway Problem, by Mr. Harrington Emerson. The substance of it is that he favors a narrow-gauge or smaller road, and even ridicules the idea of building standard-gauge roads with a high grade of equipment. I do not know who he is or what he represents, but I ask leave to have it printed in the RECORD with my remarks, because it certainly adds to the information brought out by the discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ALASKAN RAILWAY PROBLEM.

(By Harrington Emerson.)

(By Harrington Emerson.)

It is ridiculous to use a 10-gallon flask as a nursing bottle for a baby. It is also not economy to use a steam hammer to drive carpet tacks. Yet Americans in their large enterprises like to do things of this kind. The great national fault is overequipment, not two blades of grass where one grew before, but 6 acres for 160 bushels of corn instead of 1 acre.

The development of Alaska is being held back on account of the national proclivity to overequip.

Alaska is a land of immense distances, great natural obstacles, sparse population. It is 1,500 miles from Ketchi Rau to Bering Straits. The great fjords, arms of the sea; immense glaciers, Malaspina, 80 miles across; high mountains, Mount St. Elias, 18,000 feet; Mount Denali, 20,000 feet; the volcanoes, Katmai, whose ashes three Algerian sunsets. The wide and turbulent rivers, Copper, Kuskokwin, Yukon; the extreme cold in the interior, 70° below zero; the rainfall and snowfall. 110 inches at Juneau, sufficiently exemplify the natural obstacles. The population is about 1 to 20 square miles.

In the presence of these tremendous conditions it behooves man to be modest. There were good Roman roads over the Alps 1,800 years before Napoleon built his magnificent wagon roads, and Napoleon wagon roads served the purpose for 80 years before 10 to 14 mile tunnels were either necessary or remunerative. Any Alaskan railroad building will be hard enough without attempting it on an absurdly overequipped basis.

roads served the purpose for 80 years before 10 to 14 mile tunnels were either necessary or remunerative. Any Alaskan rallroad building will be hard enough without attempting it on an absurdly overequipped basis.

Shall we build in Alaska railroads costing $10,000 a mile or railroads costing, like the New York Subway, $1,000,000 a mile? Even if both kinds of road cost the same, should we put in roads cheap to maintain and operate, or roads costing much to maintain and operate?

Some years ago an Alaskan mine owner wanted me to figure on a 14-mile railroad to carry, as he hoped, 10,000 tons of ore a year from mine to water. He wanted a standard. I was able to show that a 2-foot gauge road with 12-pound rails could carry 180,000 tons a year.

Many years ago I saw operating in France a 2-foot gauge passenger road, on which the passengers sat back to back on longitudinal scats. Traveling in this way may not be as comfortable as in a Pullman car, but it is an immense improvement over mushing through the snow behind a dog team, which is, however, luxury compared to packing on one's own back a 60-pound load.

In 1902 I ran the preliminary survey for a road from Golovin Bay to Council City. The total population of the Ophir Creek district was about 1,500 people, with a yearly immediate traffic of 1,500 tons, at $50 a ton, or 5 tons a day, a gross income of $250 a day—a wheel-barrow or at best a mule-cart proposition—yet an engineering lunatic, backed by Wall Street, floated bonds to build a standard-gauge road. The bonds were floated on the statement that the road could carry 400,000 tons a year—it was not emphasized that the total actual tonnage was only 1,500 tons.

Thirteen years ago Charles D. Lane set a sane example by building a railroad from Nome to Anvil Creek so cheaply that it earned its first cost in the first 30 days of operation. Later he built a similar road from Council to Ophir, which carned its first cost in 90 days. To his great indignation, the United States forced him to survey it after it was built

Where the total travel might amount to half a dozen persons a day, a full train with conductor, engineer, fireman, trackman, station agents, and interlocking signals and switches is not necessary. Three or four Ford automobiles with trailers running on light track could take care of all the business. Where the freight traffic amounts at most to a few thousand tons, 50-ton freight cars, weighing empty 25 tons, are not needed; 3 to 5 ton trucks will do the business, and a string of mules may, for the start, be more economical and more reliable than steam locomotives.

If rivers have to be spanned, mountains tunneled, swamps filled in, hills cut through, snowdrifts dug out, a miniature line with heavy grade and steep curves is far cheaper to build, to operate, and to keep open than a standard gauge.

Cash subsidies may be needed. Land grants are absurd. They do not produce cash when it is wanted. The United States Government could well advance at a low rate of interest $10,000 a mile on Alaskan roads, demand low rates for transportation of troops, supplies, and mail, and with great economy to itself promote the welfare of that great empire and its pioneers.

One of the fundamental rules, often violated, of sane capital expenditure is that we shall not invest $1,000,000 to accomplish a result if we can accomplish an equally valuable result from an investment of $10,000.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest to the Senator that there is nothing in this bill that would prevent the President from building in accordance with those suggestions if he deemed it advisable

Mr. BURTON. That calls the point to my mind that you are fixing this limit at $35,000,000 or $40,000,000. What does that mean? Does not everyone know that pressure will be brought to bear upon the Executive Government to spend the whole There is the great advantage in compariof that amount? son in bringing it back to Congress in the surveys: Just the same lobby, if you might call it such, that has favored this plan of construction of railways in Alaska will be equally potent in demanding that the last dollar that is authorized shall be expended by the President. We might just as well face it right now that you are not going to spend any smaller amount than $40,000,000

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's 15 minutes have

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Ohio, when he says that the inevitable tendency of this proposition will be to require the entire $40,000,000 to be spent, whether, in his opinion, he does not think it is also very likely that not only will the whole of that sum be spent, but it will be spent in such a way that to make it available it will be inevitable that very considerable additional sums will be spent. A main line of railroad is useful in many cases only in accordance with the number of branch lines that it may have as feedcrs. The purpose here is to build a through line. There can be very few feeders built at present, because nobody knows where the feeders can be located; but the inevitable effect of building a substantial main line of railroad, costing $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, will call for at least a similar amount to be expended shortly afterwards to supply the necessary extensions that should go with that line.

I merely wanted to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we are entering upon an expenditure of not merely the millions that are provided in this bill, but an incalculable number of additional millions.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator takes his seat, the proposition which we have before us, whether a wise or unwise one, is a concrete proposition. It has for its purpose the opening up of this Territory. Now, what do those who oppose this proposition offer in lieu of it? Are we going to still continue to let Alaska lie there unused? If there were another proposition presented here which would open up the resources of Alaska so that the people could have the benefit of them there might be some justification in refusing to vote for this bill; but even should we conclude that it is not demonstrated upon its face to be a wise proposition, it is the only concrete proposition which is presented to do the work. What does the Senator propose to substitute in place of it? I confess that a powerful argument with me is that it seems to be the only proposition pro-

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think that is a very proper question. What I would propose to put in place of it is a provision that would open the coal lands in such a way that they could be worked and coal could be taken out of them, so that it could be demonstrated in the first place whether or not the coal that would be obtained is valuable coal. In conjunction with that, there are plenty of indications that private enterprise will build all the roads for which there is business.

It seems to me the carrying out of the desire indicated by the position the Senator has described himself as being in for the last five or six years would be met by this alternative. A scratch of the pen by the President of the United States would open up these coal lands. Everybody who has testified in regard to this matter has said that if the coal lands are opened the development of Alaska will soon begin.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just a moment? In that connection, I wish to say to the Senator that the testimony of the men who were connected with the Cordova & Northwestern Railroad was that even when the lands were open prior to 1906 they were only going to go to the copper fields and build a branch line into the coal mines.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, allow me to differ with the distinguished Senator from Oregon. I did not read the testimony in that way. Whatever may have been the testimony in 1906, however, the testimony to-day is that if the coal fields are opened roads will be extended to the interior. It is repeated over and over again.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I differ from the Senator again in that regard, because the testimony of the manager of the Yukon & White Pass Railroad was that they did not intend to extend it any farther in, because it would come in competition with their line-

Mr. LIPPITT. I am not talking about the White Pass & Yukon Railroad. I am talking about the road from Seward, the Alaska Northern. Of course the White Pass Railroad in the Alaska Northern. not going to extend itself down the banks of the Yukon and parallel water transportation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is not what I am saying, if the Senator will let me explain the matter to him. The manager of the Cordova & Northwestern Railroad testified that they did not intend to extend it any farther because it would come in competition with the line which they already had through British territory, down the Yukon and up the Tanana to

Mr. BORAH. If I may be permitted; I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator. The Senator says that by a scratch of the pen the President could cancel these Executive orders and open up this coal region in order to develop it, and so forth. The President is not going to make that scratch of the pen. These coal mines are not going to be opened up to be taken possession of in the manner in which they were attempted to be taken possession of heretofore. We do not want them monopolized and we do want them developed. We shall have to face this condition of affairs with that condition of affairs also

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will permit me-I presume my time will expire in a minute or two-I desire to answer the statement that has just been made by the Senator from Oregon. Those statements have been made so frequently in this discussion, and they are so absolutely contrary to the facts as they are laid down in the record, that I think this is a good time to make a statement about them.

I read from page 305 of the Senate hearings the testimony given by Mr. Jemmett, the representative of the Alaska Northern Railroad:

far as the Alaska Northern is concerned, I want to be equally explicit.

He had been talking about another railroad.

The Alaska Northern Railroad Co. wishes to build to the interior, Fairbanks, up the Susitna Valley, just as soon as it can be allowed to do so.

What is the use, in the face of such testimony, repeated over and over again in this document, for people to stand up here and quote some other railroad representative who says they do not want to build? The facts in this case are that if the coal fields in Alaska are opened there is plenty of private capital ready to develop that country just the same as the West was developed in the last 40 or 50 years, and just the same as this country has been developed from the beginning, and just the same as Canada is being developed to-day, except that where Canada is being developed by subsidies given by the Government these people ask no Government aid. They are ready to undertake the difficult and doubtful problem by themselves.
Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LIPPITT. I have finished, Mr. President. Mr. BRISTOW. I do not doubt that the railroad would extend its line if the coal fields were opened up so that it could own all of them.

Oh, Mr. President, the gentleman I have re-Mr. LIPPITT. ferred to distinctly says that they do not care to own a bit of the coal fields. The testimony of Mr. Ryan, who is the one man who wants to build to the coal fields from Controller Bay, says his company does not even contemplate owning coal fields. for anybody attempting to monopolize the coal fields of Alaska under the present laws, which limit their ownership to 2,560 acres, it is an impossible proposition. Moreover, in my opinion, if there were no limitations nobody could ever monopolize all of those coal fields. Whether they could or not, however, the situation to-day is that the law provides that not over 2,560 acres can be owned by any one group of men. There is a known area of coal fields in Alaska some 150 square miles in extent and, in addition, some hundreds of square miles of lignite coal.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator speaks of the experience in this country. The experience in the development of the coal industry in this country is that the transportation companies control it, control the price, monopolize its production, handle the business as they please, and crush any man who does not obey them.

That has been the universal experience.

For one, I do not want private companies to build the railroads in Alaska. I want the Government of the United States to build those railroads and open the coal fields. By the ownership of these roads the Government can control transportation rates, and that will eventually control the business of Alaska or any other country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I presume that if the question of coal for the Navy were to be taken out of the discussion we would not waste very much time upon the advisability of building a railroad in Alaska. The project upon which the commission reports as the most feasible and the one which will cost the least money is the one that is farthest from the coal fields

There are 277 miles of very good railroad in Alaska now. Am

I not right about that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. About 500.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. According to this report, there are 132 miles of the Cordova-Fairbanks road, there are 72 miles of the Seward-Fairbanks road, and there are 72 miles of the Seward-Iditered railroad.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that there are practically 500 miles, including all of the little, short railways in the Territory.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well; but I was speaking of three railroads that are of sufficient importance to engage the attention of this commission. I am perfectly willing, and indeed anxious, to see something done that will open Alaska appropriately for settlement and the utilization of her vast resources. It was my pleasure to be at the head of the Committee on Territories when Alaska was given civil government and when the commission was authorized to make this inspection. I think their work has been very well done, considering the fact that they were given only a very few weeks in which to do it; but to plunge this country into a vast experiment such as the more enthusiastic advocates ask us to do seems to me very reckless.

I should like to support something that is reasonable and fair: this is not. If we lodge this tremendous discretionary power in the President of the United States, and a railroad is constructed under his direction, and such construction or operation does not turn out to be practical or helpful to Alaska, of course the next move under this same discretionary power will be to urge that it be extended still further and further until you will get 1,000 miles of railroad, costing $40,000,000.

Mr. President, if I knew where to find the magic key that would unlock those vast resources for the use of the people. I should certainly proceed instantly to do it; but I do not want the Government to experiment with such a tremendous undertaking as this when all that can be claimed for it is that it may possibly be the medium of developing that Territory more rapidly than would otherwise be the case. I have said what I have said rather reluctantly, because I feel very deeply interested in Alaska, and would willingly aid her; but I wish this plan might be limited to the present neces-

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the provisions of this bill are not what I would have them. I think too much power is vested in the President—not the President who now occupies the White House, for I have great faith in his integrity, his good judgment, his prudence, his capacity for doing things, and at the same time steadfastly remaining within constitutional limitations. The power, however, is too great ordinarily to be vested in a single individual.

For that reason I had determined to vote against this bill; but after carefully studying the questions involved and informing myself as to what would result to the American people from the development of this country so rich in minerals and agricultural resources, I have changed my mind about it and intend to vote for the bill on its passage.

I wish to say also that I am not in any way hindered by the specter of Government ownership of railroads, with all its socialistic tendencies. That old ghost has ceased to frighten me. If the building of this road by the Government shall contribute to the prosperity and the happiness of the people whose toil produces the wealth of the country, maintain its commerce in time of peace, and who fight its battles in time of war, then I say let the road be built. If the building of this railroad will add to the sum total of the Nation's wealth, if it will open up opportunities for the home builder and give employment to the idlers in the congested cities and mining districts, by all means let the road be built.

Mr. President, because I once antagonized the Populist Party, which stood for these things, I do not want to be guilty of that vanity of consistency which is the vice of small statesmen. The Populists favored in their platform a great many things which I approved then and all progressive Democrats favor now. I agreed with them on the money question, and I still think the Populists were right. I believe in the provision which the Senate borrowed from the Populists and incorporated in the banking and currency bill which authorizes the issue of bank currency on agricultural securities. I agree with Populists on the question of a graduated income tax, and our tariff bill would have been greatly improved if we had followed more closely the Populist text on that subject. I believe in the postal savings bank, which the Populists in their platform demanded; I believe in the Government ownership of telephones and telegraphs, the extension of the parcel post to the end that it may ultimately take the place of the express companies, all of which the Populists demanded; I believe in shortening the hours of labor, which the Populists demanded; I believe also, with all my heart, in the initiative, the referendum, and the recall, which the Populists demanded. And in this connection, if I may be permitted to divert a moment, I believe that one of the reasons for the success of the present administration has been due more largely to the fact that the Government has been carried closer to the people. The election of United States Senators by the people has been influential in producing harmony in the Democratic ranks and the enactment of legislation for the universal good.

I believe in limiting presidential tenure to one term, another Populist demand the wisdom of which the national Democratic convention at Baltimore approved and recognized. I am opposed to a subsidy by the National Government to a private corporation of any character, and in that I am only voicing one of the planks in the Omaha platform. I believe with the Populists that laws should be enacted to prevent dealing in futures in agricultural products, and this Senate by an amendment to the tariff bill last fall indorsed that Populist demand.

In fact, Mr. President, the Populist creed which has been so much criticized, that platform of principles which they proclaimed at Omaha, has been appropriated by the Democrats and stolen by the Progressives. Really the creed of that much despised and criticized political minority has now become, to a very large extent, the political faith of the Nation.

Actuated by the same motives which shall impel me to vote for this bill, I hope at some time in the very near future to ask the Senate to enact a law which will require the United States Government to take hold and manage the great Mississippi River, protect its banks, deepen its channel, increase and encourage commerce between the States, and protect the fertile lands lying on its banks from the devastation of an annual over-

I know in days gone by the idea of Government interference in these matters was condemned. But, Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, inasmuch as those of us on this side of the Chamber who are giving our support to this measure were taunted yesterday as having abandoned the principles of the Democratic Party, I desire this morning to read into the RECORD a brief page from history. The accusation was made by the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], who ought to know what constitutes a Democrat if anybody does. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands], and other Senators on yesterday, quite clearly, as I think, established the proposition that there is no essential difference between the construction by the Government of the United States of a road on which rails are not laid and the construction of a road on which rails are laid.

With these preliminaries I read to the Senate from the third volume of MacMaster's History of the United States, beginning at page 469. Discussing there the stirring years of the administration of Thomas Jefferson, and having adverted to legislation in relation to improvements of navigation, the author continues:

in relation to imprevements of navigation, the author continues:

While thus assisting commerce by sea Congress was not unmindful of the needs of commerce by land. To such a course, indeed, it was pledged by the solemn compact made with Ohio. When that State was about to enter the Union her people agreed that public lands sold within her borders should not be taxed for five years after the day of sale. In return for this Congress agreed to spend 5 per cent of the net proceeds of such sales in road making. Some of the roads were to be in the State, others were to join the Ohio River with navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic. As 3 per cent was speedily appropriated for road making within the State but 2 per cent was left to be expended on highways without. Yet, small as the percentage was, it had, by December, 1805, produced $12,600. A Senate committee was then appointed to consider the best manner of using it, and reported in favor of a road from Cumberland, on the Maryland side of the Potomac, to a point near Wheeling, on the Virginia side of the Ohio. This route, the committee were careful to state, was chosen from among several because it seemed best suited to the present needs of the people of Ohio.

A remark to which I invite the especial attention of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron], who seems now to be opposed to similar legislation to open up territory which is in practically the same condition as was that of his own State at the time of which we read.

This route, the committee were careful to state, was chosen from among several because it seemed best suited to the present needs of the people of Ohio, and because, starting at Cumberland, on the eastern slopes of the mountains, it would not interfere with systems of internal improvements then being carried on by Pennsylvania and Maryland. No fault was to be found with the location of the road, and, as the money was lying idle in the Treasury, a bill to regulate the laying out and making of a road from Cumberland to the State of Ohio readily passed both Houses and became law.

dent Jefferson.

Thirty thousand dollars were appropriated for beginning the work. Three commissioners were appointed to select the route. Applications were at once made to the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania for leave to build the road, and the summer and autumn of 1806 was spent by the commissioners in travelling over ground to determine the alignment. Starting at Cumberland, just where Wills Creek joins the north branch of the Potomac, the commissioners decided that the route should be over Wills Mountain at Sandy Gap, and along the line, but rarely on the bed, of Braddock's old road to the Big Crossing of the Youghlogheny, over Laurel Hill, across the Great Meadows, past the site of Fort Necessity, and on to the Monongahela at Red Stone Old Fort, or, as it had long since been called, Brownsville, and thence, by as direct a course as the country would permit, to the Ohlo, near Wheeling. It now became the duty of the President to approve or disapprove the work of the commissioners, but Jefferson would not act till the three States had consented that he should have a free choice of routes.

Apparently President Jefferson was given the opportunity to choose the route which should be pursued.

Pennsylvania did not consent till the early spring of 1807. Summer came, therefore, before the commissioners were again in the field. Their instructions were to change the alignment, bring the road through Unionville, and cut it out for half of its width from Cumberland to Brownsyille. More money was appropriated in 1810, and still more in 1811. Nevertheless, the work dragged on so slowly that the first contracts for actually building the roadbed were not signed till May, 1811. Four men then contracted for 10 miles, beginning at Cumberland, and bound themselves to have their work completed by August 1, 1812.

Thus when the war for commercial independence opened Congress had yielded to the demands of the East and of the West and had begun to make internal improvements at Government expense.

Then, Mr. President, so satisfactory to the Democratic idea was the work thus undertaken that the great Secretary of the Treasury under President Jefferson was charged with the duty of preparing a complete scheme of internal improvements, including the construction of great highways traversing the country, of which the author tells in the language which I shall read. Having spoken of a certain bill pending before Congress in the year 1807, he continues:

in the year 1807, he continues:

While the bill was still under debate John Quincy Adams moved that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report a plan for a general system of internal improvements. He was to consider the opening of roads, the removal of obstructions from rivers, and the building of canals. He was to make a statement of the number and character of works of public utility then existing in the country and was to name such as in his opinion were worthy of Government aid. The motion did not pass. Nevertheless, within 10 days a Senator from Ohio secured the passage of a resolution precisely similar in character. With these instructions from the Senate before him, Gallatin set to work. A series of questions regarding the number, length, route, cost per mile of canals and roads, rate of toll, gross receipts, and substance of their charters was drawn up and sent to the collectors of the ports, with orders to secure full answers. From the information thus obtained, Gallatin prepared that famous report on roads, canals, harbors, and rivers which is still ranked among the best of his official papers.

He refers again to certain work contemplated for the im-

He refers again to certain work contemplated for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the remainder is referred to by the author in this language:

The second suggestion of the Secretary was that of a great turnpike alorg the Atlantic coast from Maine to Georgia. This, too, was old, and had but a year before been presented to the Senate in a resolution. Having thus disposed of the subject of communication north and south, Gallatin took up that of communication east and west and southwest. Four great rivers flowing into the Atlantic should, he thought, be improved to the head of possible navigation and then joined by four great roads over the mountains with four other rivers of the Mississippi Valley. The rivers selected were the Juniata and the Allegheny, the Potomac and the Monongahela, the James and Kanawha, and the Santee or Savannah and the Tennessee. There should also be a canal around the Falls of the Ohio and good roads from Pittsburgh to Detroit, to St. Louls, and New Orleans. Northward and northwestward the Hudson should be joined with Lake Champiain and the Mohawk with Lake Ontario. A canal should be dug around Niagara, that sloops might pass from Ontario to Lake Michigan. The cost of this splendid system of inland waterways would be $20,000,000.

We know, of course, Mr. President, that this ambitious program was not carried out. The Cumberland Road, however, was constructed; and we know from the correspondence of Mr. Jefferson how close to his heart that project always lay. Surely it would be of interest to know, in brief, about what was actually accomplished on that project. I read from the Encyclopædia Americana a brief review of its history was actually accomplished on that project. I read from the Encyclopædia Americana a brief review of its history:

Cumberland Road, The, or Great National Pike originally, a road planned from the Maryland frontier at Cumberland, Md., to connect with the State roads and run to St. Louis (then just fallen into United States hands by the Louisiana Purchase), to open up the West to immigrants and provide for military and postal transportation. It was to be built at national expense, from the sales of public lands, as a fair counterpoise to the seaboard States' ability to pay their expenses by levying customs duties, and pushed forward by section as settlement advanced. Henry Clay was its most conspicuous projector and advocate, and a monument to commemorate his services to it has been erected on its course near Wheeling, W. Va. The bill for the first section passed Congress March 29, 1806; it authorized the President (Jefferson) to appoint three commissioners to lay out the road from Cumberland to the Ohio River (Wheeling), and appropriated $30,000 for expenses. At the same time another was passed to lay out one through Georgia, on the New Orleans route, and others followed in swift succession for two decades. This policy of roads, soon supplemented by canals, became the great battle ground for the Strict Construction Party, who fought the whole policy of internal improvements as unconstitutional, and the Cumberland Road, with its constant call for improvements and repairs, aroused ever fresh resistance. Finally, in 1822, Monroe, although he had signed two annual bills of the kind, vetoed a third, and for the time the improvements and new roads came to a standstill. With John Quincy Adams, who was in thorough sympathy with Clay's policy, as with every other to increase the national wealth and power, the system started up afresh, and the Cumberland Road was pushed forward through Ohio and Indiana. On the accession of Jackson, a Strict Constructionist, the vetoes began and the roads had become so decisively the coming

So, Mr. President, whatever other objection anyone upon this side may find to the bill, he ought not to be troubled with any conscientious scruples in regard to violating any traditions of the Democratic Party in voting for this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ΗΙΤΟΙΙΟΟΚ in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while the Senator from Montana is still on his feet, I wish to ask him if it is not true that the engineers who have had charge give their preferential indersement to the eastern route which seems to preferential indorsement to the eastern route, which seems to go most of the way in a section of no resources, and then to the western line, which crosses the mountains, and not to the north and south lines to Fairbanks, which reach the best coal?

Mr. WALSH. That is the situation, I will say to the Senator.

Of course I do not mean to be understood as saying that the western line has the best coal nor that the other passes through a section of no resources.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that the report indicates that the most valuable deposit of coal is where these black specks [indicating on the map] are found to the south of Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. No; the Senator is in error there. The coal to which the Senator refers is of inferior quality. That is lignite coal.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Where is the best coal in Alaska found?

Mr. WALSH. The best coal is in the Bering field and the Matanuska field, to which I now point [indicating on the map]. The Bering field is in territory adjacent to the eastern route and the Matanuska field is in territory adjacent to the western Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But a Government road is entirely unnecessary to reach this coal. It is only 20 miles from the water, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is not altogether correct in his statement. The commission finds that Controller Bay, from which a line only 25 or 30 miles could reach the Bering coal field, does not possess the characteristics to make it suitable as a harbor and depot. That is very stoutly controverted by those who are interested in Controller Bay. Mr. Ryan, who has projected a line from Controller Bay to the Bering field, insists that it constitutes as good a harbor as is Orca Bay, on which is Cordova, or as Resurrection Bay, on which is Seward. What the fact is I do not undertake to say.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not a matter which investigation in advance ought to settle?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly investigation ought to settle it.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia: Then, if we had the information we might determine that a road 20 miles from a good harbor would take us into the best coal fields.

Mr. WALSH. But, of course, Mr. President, though that were so—and in any case a branch line 55 miles from the existing railroad would take you into the Bering coal field-if you had no other purpose in the construction of these railroads except to get coal for the Navy or for commercial purposes, such a road would be adequate, no doubt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, I wish to ask the Senator another question. I am asking merely for information. I said a little while ago that this bay [indicating], 20 miles from that coal, was not a good bay, and a Senator took issue with me and insisted that it was a good bay. Now, is there not a good bay which this central line [indicating] could reach, not far from the point where it begins and to the east, without using the railroad south of it already constructed?

Mr. WALSH. I said, in the course of my remarks on the bill, that some recent surveys have led to the belief that an easy route by the construction of a tunnel 2 miles long can be laid out, giving a terminus on a harbor free from ice the entire year at Prince William Sound. If that route is feasible the line will take the course which I indicate up the Susitna Valley to the Tanana, with a branch to the Matanuska fields. Whether or not that route is feasible I do not pretend to be able to say. The people who are interested in the town of Seward will assure you in a most positive way that the idea of its feasi-bility is not to be entertained for a single moment. The information which I have been able to gather about the matter leads me to believe that probably it could be utilized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In just a moment. I wish to get the Senator from Montana to give me a little more definite information. The broad line [indicating on the map] is the line recommended just above the coal fields, and the other line goes away off to the west instead of up toward Fairbanks through the coal region. Is there any special difficulty about constructing this line [indicating] through the coal region up to Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. Apparently not. Leaving Knik Arm, the most northerly extremity of Cook Inlet, it strikes the valley of the Susitna, and then proceeds up that valley. It seems to me a reasonable assumption that that would not be difficult railroad construction. It then crosses the divide separating the waters which flow north into the Tanana and Yukon from those flowing south into the Gulf of Alaska. My recollection is that that pass is 2,800 feet in elevation, which of course, is not a very high pass; so that, so far as I am able myself to judge, the construction problem in pursuing that route would not, from an engineering standpoint, be at all difficult.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, a 20-mile road from Controller Bay would carry the road into excellent coal, and about 300 miles of railway from an arm of Prince William Sound would carry the road up to Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. I should say it would be at least 400 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. About 400 miles.

Mr. WALSH. My recollection is that it would be about 450 miles from Seward to Fairbanks, and the tunnel route would cut off possibly 90 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three hundred and sixty miles, then, would carry it from Cook Inlet up to Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why, then, is not that a better route than the other?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that the testimony shows, I think, that the route from return.

Resurrection Bay or from Prince William Sound up to Fairbanks is a fair route, with the exception of three elevations; but none of the engineers, so far as I know, has reported that the difficulties of constructing a road over them could not be The route up the Copper River selected by the Copper River Railroad Co., which has constructed a road part of the way, is a natural route for a railroad in Alaska. If it is undertaken to build over the eastern route

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are there any special resources along that line? It does not pass through the gold region, and it does not pass through agricultural lands or coal lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Along that route are the great copper mines. I think that a railroad there would be just as good for the development of the agricultural lands of Alaska as a road along this route here [indicating on the map]. Of course, the route that is recommended by the engineers would reach a larger part of the agricultural land, but it would not touch coal deposits at any point. The Senator is correct in saying that a railroad 23 miles from Controller Bay would reach the Bering coal fields

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Which are as good as any.

Mr. SMOOT. In my opinion, from the testimony I have examined, the Bering coal fields are just as good as the Matanuska coal fields. The testimony also shows that Controller Bay, as the Senator says, is just as good a bay for landing purposes and wharf purposes as Resurrection Bay or any other of the landings on the Gulf of Alaska.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if I may be permitted just a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. He is speaking in the time of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All right.

Mr. WALSH. I feel that it is only just to say, in this connection, that this western route encounters more grades than the more eastern route. The more eastern route, Senators will observe, goes up the Copper River, and continues up the Copper River until it drops over into the Tanana; so that it crosses but one divide, near the point at which I now indicate on the map, while in the case of the other it crosses more. There is a spur of mountains running down through the Kenai Peninsula which lies between Prince William Sound and Cook Inlet. It is necessary to cross that divide. Then there is another one when you cross the main range, and then the third, which I indicated before. I ought to say, however, that neither of the two lower ones is of any elevation that is of any very great consequence.

I feel like repeating what I said in the course of my remarks, that with the inadequate information that I myself had I should unhesitatingly give my approval to the more western route, particularly because it opens up not only the Tanana Valley, which is reached by the more eastern route, but the Susitna Valley as well, which I have no doubt has agricultural possibilities even greater than those of the Tanana.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is that the more western route or the central route? The Senator means the more western to Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. The more western of the two.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To Fairbanks?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question as to the several routes indicated on the map. proposed to determine now which route shall be adopted?

Mr. WALSH. It is suggested by some of the Senators that the Senate ought to determine the route and fix it in the bill. The bill does not undertake to do so.

Mr. STONE. I thought not. Mr. WALSH. The bill allows the route to be determined by the President; that is, it charges him with the duty of determining which of the routes shall be pursued.

Mr. STONE. While I am on my feet, with the permission of the Senator, I should like to ask another question.

I have already stated that I am disposed to favor this legislation, and I have been listening to various objections to the proposal. Among others is the one that nothing is to be accomplished by the expenditure of this large sum of 'thirty or thirtyfive million dollars

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Forty million dollars.

Mr. STONE. Well, $40,000,000, in constructing railroads that will run up through these canyons and over these mountainous divides, except to build them and get to somewhere—perhaps an indefinite somewhere—but to get somewhere to a terminus, and that we are building the roads and spending all this money without any object, without any likelihood of any substantial

I want to vote for this measure, and I should like to know hat there is in this objection. What are the people of the what there is in this objection.

United States going to get out of it?

Mr. WALSH. Of course an answer to that question would necessitate a review of the entire facts of the matter, in detailing which I fear I have already taken too much of the time of the Senate. I feel, however, that I ought to say at this time that, like the great project of which I read you a while ago of connecting the Atlantic seaboard by great highways with the Ohio River and the Mississippi River and the inland waterways, the project here is to connect the seacoast of Alaska with the inland waterways of Alaska for exactly the same reasons; so that if we went to these coal fields that purpose would not be subserved at all.

I will answer the Senator from Missouri by saying that here is this great river—the Yukon—2,300 miles of which are navigable, giving, with the Kuskokwim and the tributaries of the Yukon, navigable waters of 5,000 miles. We propose to connect up the navigable rivers of the interior with the coast for the purpose of developing the great region that is tributary to these great rivers. They are valuable from an agricultural standpoint. The territory marked in blue upon this map is territory that has agricultural possibilities. It is believed, and I think no one will undertake to deny, that that country will produce breadstuffs and foodstuffs enough to supply whatever population shall ever go into that country, the same as Sweden and Norway and the northern Provinces of Russia produce agricultural products sufficient to supply their people.

The great product there is gold. The country between the Yukon and the Tanana River, even with the tremendous prices they have to pay for transportation now, produces $9,000,000 in You will bear in mind that the capabilities are gold a year. restricted almost incalculably by reason of the high transportation rates that prevail, consequent upon the absence of transportation facilities. If these transportation facilities are given, great areas there that are known to be rich in gold, low-grade, as a matter of course, placers not so rich to the cubic yard will be opened up and developed.

So we propose to attract into the interior of Alaska a great population which will be consuming our products. We propose to increase in that way our commerce with those sections, to give employment to our people here in the continental United States, and to spur industry here the same as the development of the western section enriched the East and the Atlantic seaboard by reason of the opportunity it gave to sell their products. That is the purpose. Mr. STONE. All

All the vast country in there that is to be improved by opening it up through these railroads, or practically all of it, belongs to the United States?

Mr. WALSH. Over 99 per cent of everything in Alaska belongs to the United States.

Mr. STONE. Then it is to improve the property of the United States?

Mr. WALSH.

Mr. WALSH. Why, certainly.
Mr. WILLIAMS. For the benefit of Alaska.
Mr. STONE. Which is held in trust, according to the Senator from Mississippi—and I have no quarrel with him on that point—for the benefit of the entire people of the United

Mr. WALSH. I take it that the construction of the Cumberland Road, although it was exceedingly valuable to the people of Ohio, was undertaken not simply because it was valuable to them, but because it was deemed valuable to the Nation as a whole; and the event proved that it was at least as valuable to the people living along the Atlantic seaboard as it was to those living in the interior.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have not had anything to say upon this bill, and I should not do so now but for the fact that I have made up my mind to vote for the bill with the amendment which I understand will be offered by the committee, to limit the expenditure for building these Alaskan roads to the amount of bonds the bill authorizes to be issued. Not so much because of any hope I have of enlightening the Senate or of changing any Senator's view with reference to this question, but that my reasons may be recorded, I desire the indulgence of the Senate for just a few moments.

I am not troubled about the constitutional or the paternalistic arguments that have been made, nor am I troubled about the suggestion of graft and corruption which some apprehend may grow out of the Government undertaking such an enterprise as this. I have no doubt myself about the power of the Government to build and own railroads between the States of the Union; and I certainly do not feel that there can be even the shadow of a doubt about the right of the Government under the Constitution to build and operate a railroad in one of its Territories, especially when it possesses and owns practically all the property in the Territory. We do not legislate for the Territories under the same constitutional limitations under which we legislate for the States, and I dismiss the constitutional objection without further discussion, because I do not consider it a serious one.

Neither am I troubled about the paternalistic argument upon which the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] laid such stress on yesterday. I am not in favor of the general proposition of Government ownership of railroads, but this is not that kind of a proposition. The Senator from Mississippi entirely fails to differentiate between the Government building a railroad through one of the States, through the private property of the inhabitants of that State, for the benefit of private property, and the Government building a railroad through its own property for its enhancement and development.

The Senator from Mississippi was correct when he said that the Government does not own Alaska, but that the people own Alaska. That is to say, they own probably 95 per cent of all the lands in Alaska. The Senator was correct when he said the money of the people and not the Government would pay for building this railroad. That is correct; but these statements mean, when properly interpreted, that in spending the money required to build these railroads the people will be spending their own money to improve and develop and settle their own lands. The Senator fails, I think, to make this distinction, which I think is a fundamental differentiation.

I do not want to stop to discuss the expediency and wisdom of the policy of the Government building roads to develop its own property; but I do wish to say, generally, that I think the Government of the United States can not spend a dollar of its money more profitably to the people of the United States than in opening the way for the development of Alaska.

I am not troubled about the suggestion of graft and of corruption in case the Government shall undertake this great work. There is no foundation in our experience-certainly in recent years-in Government construction of great public utilities and improvements to justify the suggestion that we may reasonably look for graft if we build this railroad.

Why, Mr. President, we are just about finishing the greatest constructive work of the ages, the Panama Canal, involving the expenditure of over $400,000,000. The work has been done by the Government solely and exclusively, and up to this time I have not heard of a suspicion of graft, or even of extravagance, in connection with it. It is true that it has been discovered that the cost and the difficulties of construction were underestimated when the original estimate was made, and it has required more money than the original estimate, but the money has been honestly expended and the work has been economically conducted. The same is true of the construction of the Panama Railroad.

We are now spending about $50,000,000 a year on our rivers and harbors. A large part of that work is done by the Government; that is, all of it is done either by the Government or under its supervision through contracts let by the Government. Yet I have not heard in recent years any suggestion of graft or of corruption or of unnecessary extravagance, except that the method of appropriation by Congress in doling out this money in small sums instead of making an appropriation to cover the whole estimate has necessarily involved an increased expendi-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair).
Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have only 15 minutes. I would be glad if the Senator would wait until I get through, and then ask me his question in his own time.

Mr. President, we have been for some time engaged in the irrigation of our western arid lands, lands that belong to the Government, and we have been doing it with the money of the people, just as it is proposed in the case of this railroad-not for the purpose altogether of developing the lands of the Government, but also for the purpose of helping that part of the country and of enhancing the traffic and the productiveness of that section. We have spent millions of dollars upon those works conducted by the Government. So far as I know, there has been no suggestion of graft or of excessive cost in connection with them. I think there can be no contention about that. Compare the work that the Government of the United States has done in constructing public utilities in recent years with the work that has been done on a large scale by big private interests in this country, and I think you will find that there has been more graft in the constructive works in the case of individual enterprises than in the case of Government construction. The amount of extravagance, the amount of graft that we have had in connection with the construction of some of the great railroads in this country amounts to sums that are appalling. Yet. Mr. President, every bit of graft in connection with the great trunk transcontinental lines that have been built in this country, and all the extravagance that has been practiced in connection with the building of private railroads, result in a charge upon every producer and every citizen of the country in its effect upon freight rates.

I have not had the opportunity of hearing very much of the debate upon this bill; I have had other duties that have taken me out of the Chamber; but I have given considerable time at night to an investigation of the resources and the possibilities of Alaska, and I give it as my deliberate opinion that not since the adoption of the Constitution has the Government acquired either by purchase or by conquest any part of God's footstool richer in potentialities than is Alaska. I say as a result of my study of the physical conditions in Alaska and of its resources that I do not believe there is to-day upon this globe any undeveloped territory that is richer in possibilities than Alaska. If these great resources have not been developed quickly, if Alaska has not been populated quickly, it is not because of any paucity of its resources; it is not because there is not there that which attracts the venturesome and the enterprising and the thrifty, but it is due to the almost criminal treatment of Alaska and its people by this Government during the third of a century that we have owned and

If we had dealt with Alaska as it has been our wont since the Civil War, and even before, to deal with our newly ac-quired and undeveloped and unsettled territories; if we had dealt with Alaska like the enlightened nations of the world have in recent years been dealing with their unsettled and newly acquired territory; if we had dealt with Alaska upon the basis of reasonable justice and fairness, yea, Mr. President, if we had treated the people of Alaska as well as we have treated the people of the Philippines-whom we never expect to incorporate and never will, I hope, incorporate as a part of this Union—instead of 35,000 white inhabitants in that country to-day, I believe there would have been in Alaska today from three to four million white people. I believe instead of $60,000.000 interchange of trade between this country and Alaska in 1912 our trade with that country in that year would have reached three or four hundred, possibly five hundred, million dollars. I believe that instead of three or four hundred miles of now practically bankrupt railroad, and bank-rupted through the discriminating treatment and the legislation of this Government with respect to that Territory-instead of three or four hundred miles of railroad there now, practically in the hands of a receiver, or not earning ex-penses, we would have had in Alaska three or four thousand miles of railroad upon a profit-bearing and prosperous basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to inquire whether it is now competent under the rule for me to offer an amendment and to speak to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment is now pending before the Senate, offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I give notice that I will finish my general observations on this question upon some other amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I believe that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from North Carolina can proceed now to speak upon the bill. He has been speaking upon the amendment offered, and under the unanimous-consent agreement each Senator is allowed to speak 15 minutes upon an amendment and 15 minutes upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That might be true if an amendment were not pending, but the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the committee is pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I think a good many Senators have already spoken upon the bill, not upon an amendment, and they have not referred to a pending amendment. If the Senator from North Carolina has spoken 15 minutes on the bill he can certainly speak 15 minutes upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the spirit of the rule is to limit an address to 15

Mr. SIMMONS. I will renew my remarks after the pending amendment has been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the com-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the amendment read, please,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 5, after the word "located," insert the words "and acquired for the United States by construction, purchase, or condemnation or partly by construction, purchase, or condemnation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire, on behalf of the committee, to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from North Carolina can speak on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 6, after the word "interior," insert the following:

Of Alaska and to navigation on the Yukon, Tanana, or Kuskokwim Rivers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. President, the United States Government not only has not helped the people of Alaska to build needed transportation requisite to the development of that country, as to all new countries, and to develop their industries, but it has literally fettered and gagged the people of that Territory in their effort to develop it. I say we have not only not helped to build railroads there, but we have interposed every possible hindrance to railroad building, and, in effect, we have practically prohibited railroad building in Alaska.

How have we done this? By the most outrageous system of discriminatory legislation that any great country ever followed toward one of its territories or colonies. In the first place, by law we imposed an annual license tax of $100 a mile upon every mile of railway in Alaska. In the next place, we have with-drawn from entry all the coal and oil lands of Alaska. The only fuel with which railroads are operated in this day is either electricity, coal, wood, or oil. The usual material with which motive power for operating railroads is developed in this day, especially in our country, is oil or coal. Neither wood nor electricity is generally used for the purpose of making steam. Yet we have deliberately denied the railroads that have been constructed there, and we deliberately deny to any railroad that may hereafter be constructed in Alaska, the use of these two great natural resources of the Territory for the purpose of operating their lines.

Suppose, Mr. President, the railroads of this country were to-morrow deprived of the use of coal and of oil that are mined in our coal beds and obtained in our oil fields, do you think the railroads of this country could be operated at a profit, if at all?

The next impediment or handicap that the Government has placed upon the building of these railroads is the application to the railroads of Alaska of the commodity clause of the interstate-commerce law. I am not questioning the correctness of the construction; but that construction of the law as applicable to this Territory in the conditions which exist there practically says to every man who owns a mine of coal or a mine of iron ore or who owns a forest, if you construct a railroad to your mine for the purpose of developing it, if you construct a railroad to your oi! fields for the purpose of developing it, if you construct a railroad to your forest for the purpose of utilizing its timber supplies, you must give up either your railroad that you have constructed, parting with its ownership and control, or you must give up your mine and your forest, parting with the control of it; the law will not permit you to own both together.

In that condition, Mr. President, I ask how is it possible to induce the private owners of capital interested in coal, interested in iron ore, interested in the forest or any of the agriculture of that country, to build railroads to develop and improve their property if, as soon as they build the railroads, they must surrender under the law their property or part with their right in the railroad?

But, Mr. President, with handicaps making it practically impossible for that country to secure needed transportation, making it impossible for citizens to acquire the valuable resources of the Territory for the purpose of developing and utilizing them-with all these handicaps and impediments upon development, we have witnessed during the last 30 or 40 years a very remarkable growth in this Territory. I do not know whether it is true or not, but it is stated here that during that time Alaska, which originally cost us only about $7,000,000, has sent of its products to this country about $470,000,000. In 1912 we had a trade of $60,000,000 with this possession of the United States. It sent us $40,000,000 and bought $20,000,000 from us. What would happen there if these impediments were removed, and if it was given the same opportunity for development that our other Territories were given, we can only conjecture. I do not want to go into that domain.

President, there is but one of two ways, to my mind, by which we can secure proper and needed and indispensable railroad facilities to develop this magnificent and rich asset of ours, and that is either by the Government building this railroad itself or by subsidizing somebody else to build it for the people of that Territory and of this country.

know it is said if you will remove these impediments to railroad building, if you will take off this special annual tax of $100 a mile, if you will open the oil fields and the coal beds to entry, if you will annul the application of the commodity clause of the interstate-commerce law, private enterprise will come in and build these roads.

Mr. President, that has not been the experience in new, rugged, undeveloped, and unsettled countries either in this country or anywhere else in the world in recent years. Our own experience in developing the magnificent country we acquired in the Northwest was through a system of bounties and subsidies such as the world had never seen up to that time. Canada is developing a country very much like that of Alaska on her side of the border through a system of subsidies even greater than we indulged in in the middle of the last century. Great Britain, Germany, and France had the same experience in securing needed railroad facilities for their colonies in Africa. Great Britain had the same experience in securing needed railroad facilities in developing India. Take every unsettled country that some civilized nation has come into possession of, and seeks to develop with reasonable rapidity and settle, and the experience has been that after waiting a while the parent counhas found that these necessary instruments of commerce could not be secured except with the help of the Government or by Government construction.

What did Canada do, Mr. President? She has subsidized the privately owned roads of Canada to the extert of $208,000,-000, and in addition to that she has given for every mile of these privately constructed roads a land grant for about 5,600 miles of the soil of the Dominion.

We can get railroads constructed here in our thickly settled and developed country. To get private capital to build rail-roads in a country like Alaska, with so many inducements to the investment of capital in a thousand channels and lines more profitable and less venturesome, is impracticable. So I say if we are to get these roads built in a reasonable time, either we will have to build them by the Government or we will have to subsidize somebody else to build them.

Mr. President, in the state of public opinion, with the strong crystallization of sentiment in this country against subsidizing private enterprises, I do not believe that it is feasible to consider now the construction of railroads in Alaska by subsidizing the roads. And why should we want to do it by subsidizing them? If the United States owns all of the territory there, and it owns 95 per cent of it, why can not the United States venture the amount necessary to build railroads to develop that land of its own, the people's land, enhancing its value and making certain return on a large basis in the future as well as settling almost a continent and developing one of the most magnificent trades we have ever enjoyed? What is the objection to it? Will we lose anything?

We own practically the whole of it, and if, with the whole pledged and mortgaged, so to speak, for the success of the enterprise, we, owning it all, can not afford to build these railroads, how can we expect private individuals, who own only a mine or an oil field or a gold mine, to risk their money in such

Are we going to lose the money invested in these railroads? Mr. President, that is out of the question, it seems to me. We are simply lending our credit, just as we did to the builders of the great trunk lines that we subsidized. We have here not a lien upon the railroads built, but the ownership of the railroads and the whole property through which they run. We will own both the railroad and the property. When the railroads are built that property can be sold by the Government at a greater price than it can be sold to-day, and it can be sold much faster than it can be sold to-day. There can be no possibility of loss.

I am not terrorized, Mr. President, by the suggestion that this is a large sum of money. It is not a large sum of money, considered in connection with the great object to be accomplished the opening up of a Territory seven, eight, I believe nine times as large territorially as the State which I represent. The amount is not large compared with the amount that we invested in the Panama Canal. It is not large compared with the amount that we contributed by way of subsidy, only taking a lien upon I the basis of their reports.

the roads as our security, in the construction of the Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific Rallroads. It is not large from the standpoint of a great governmental undertaking to accomplish a great governmental work, an era-marking national undertaking

But we are told if we pass this measure we will be confronted with all sorts of applications for large sums of money for the purpose of building public highways and improving our waterways. We are spending every year in the improving of our waterways in this country as much as the total amount that this bill proposes that the President may spend in constructing these trunk lines to open up this magnificent domain.

And, so far as the appropriations for good roads are concerned, Mr. President, I hope the time is at hand when Congress is ready to appropriate twenty, thirty-five, forty million dollars, if need be, annually, until the dirt roads of this country have been brought up to the standard of those of Germany, England, and such other countries as rank in the same class with us in the family of nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair). The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will now kindly consent to answer the question that I desired to ask him when he occupied the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I can, I will be glad to do it. I will state to the Senator that I am not familiar with the details of this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from North Carolina referred approvingly on one or two occasions or more to the large appropriations that we are making for the improving of our waterways and harbors. I quite agree with him in that. In all of his experience in river and harbor improvements, and he has had a great deal-he has been on the Committee on Commerce for a long time-I should like to have him state to the Senate whether in all the years that he has served on that committee he has ever known a single instance where the Government of the United States entered upon the improvement of a river or harbor without first having a survey made?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that question has been asked here before.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want the Senator to answer it. Mr. SIMMONS. I commented upon it. I will, if the Senator will permit me, answer the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not take it that it is such a hard question to answer. I do not think anybody would want to run from the answer. There is a law, I will state to the Senator, adopted many years ago requiring first, as he has said, a survey and investigation and a report by the Army engineer upon the route.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. And an estimate as to the amount of money required to be expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, Mr. President. Now, what was the necessity for that law? It was to prevent just such things as we are about to do now. It was to prevent entering upon the improvement of rivers and harbors without any knowledge at all as to the cost, without any knowledge at all as to the commerce to be served, without any knowledge at all as to what the ultimate result of the commerce and business would be.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President— Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly what the Senator from North Carolina is insisting upon in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do. Mr. SIMMONS. In doing that it would not be fatal, because I have no idea that the President will ever expend a dollar of this money until a most thorough and searching investigation had been made and a satisfactory conclusion reached. I will state to the Senator that the very thing that the Army engineers do in connection with a survey and laying out routes has been already done by the commission which was appointed for this Government. The department made an investigation, and they have indicated which route, in their judgment, was the most feasible and which was the least feasible. I think the Senator from Alabama should take the pains to read the report of this commission, if he has not read The commission has, in my judgment, devoted more time and study to the Alaska situation, with reference to its needs for railroad transportation, than the Army engineers upon an average devote to the supervision of the rivers and harbors as

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator kindly tell us if the members of the commission, to which he refers, are in anywise competent to give an engineering opinion?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not discussed the personnel of the commission, and I do not know who composed it. I assume that the commission was a proper one to investigate a question of this character, and that those who were members of it were competent to deal with the question.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I will read to the Senator the names and occupations of the gentlemen on this commission. Maj. Jay J. Morrow, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, chairman; Alfred H. Brooks, geologist in charge of Division of Alaskan Mineral Resources, Geological Survey, vice chairman; Civil Engineer Leonard M. Cox, United States Navy; and Colin M. Ingersoll, consulting railroad engineer, of New York City. Mr. BANKHEAD. Have they made any report or any suggestion as to what the cost of the construction of these roads

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know they made a general recommendation, but did they show anything about the rate of the cost of construction per mile?

Mr. JONES. They have gone into the matter very much in

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think they have gone into it very much more in detail and more thoroughly than do the Army engineers when making estimates for river and harbor work?

Mr. JONES. Certainly. The report not only covers the engineering features but the possibilities of development, the commerce that is likely to be developed, and all that sort of thing, Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield further.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Washington, of course.

Mr. JONES. I have concluded what I now desire to say. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina another question. Has he ever heard in all of his life-and I make that general-of any corporation or private individual setting aside a large sum of money like this for the purpose of constructing a railroad, without first having a survey made and an estimate of the cost and some information as to what the tonnage or the business of the road was likely to be?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest, in that connection, that the Alaska Railroad Commission, the personnel of which has Just been stated, in their report of 172 pages go into those questions in great detail, showing not only the cost of construction but the probable tonnage, based on estimates which they have made from the present business in Alaska.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. President— Mr. WILLIAMS. May I make a suggestion in that connec-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do. Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection permit me to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that when we first began on the Panama Canal we were assured that we were going to build that canal for something like $160,000,000, but it has cost us nearly $500,000,000 since that time. The idea of building a railroad in Alaska for $45,000 a mile is absolutely absurd to any man with ordinary common sense.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi a

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; if the Senator from Alabama will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, I should not desire to do so unless the Senator from Alabama were willing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for that purpose.
Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Mississippi says that there was an estimate made as to the cost of the construction of the Panama Canal, and that the actual cost has far exceeded that little later.

estimate. Does not the Senator from Mississippi know that that has been true with reference to probably more than half of the estimates made for the improvement of every one of our rivers and harbors?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I do know it; and that adds to the force of what I intended to convey to the intelligence of the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators, that you can not rely at all upon these so-called estimates by civil engineers.

Mr. SIMMONS. You can rely upon one as well as you can upon the other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just about as well; but you can not rely at all on either when they want jobs and want work; that is all there is to it is making against it.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the point the Senator from Alabama

Mr. BANKHEAD. And it is a good point, too.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want briefly to submit merely a few observations as to why I can not consent to give my support to this measure.

I do not question the authority of Congress to appropriate money to build railroads in Alaska; I do not question the authority of Congress to aid in any proper way the development of the resources of Alaska; but what I am objecting to is that we have gone at this business without the necessary information.

It has been said here that one of the chief reasons why the Government should go into the business of constructing a great many miles of railroad in Alaska is to develop its mineral resources. Chief among those resources is coal, so we have been told. Nobody has claimed, so far as I have heard, that there is timber in Alaska that is very valuable or extensive. We all concede that there are gold, copper, and other precions metals there, but the contention has been made here that this development and this expenditure on the part of the Government are necessary in order that the Government may be able to get coal for the Navy and for commercial purposes. The other day, in perfect good faith, I asked the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAM-BERLAIN] if he had ever seen the analysis of the Alaska coal, in order that we might know what was its quality. He replied by saying yes; that he had filed an affidavit from somebody who had brought coal down from Alaska, but that it had gravel mixed with it, and, therefore, that it was not exactly a fair test.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator from Alabama misunderstood what I said to him. I said that I had seen an analysis of Alaskan coal made by the Geological Survey and one made by one of the engineers of the Navy, but there was an affidavit filed and presented and placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], showing how the coal was produced, as a matter of fact, and, notwithstanding the fact that it was poorly mined, it nevertheless made a good showing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not an analysis, Mr. President, of this coal. It is necessary, it is proper, that the advocates of this bill, who are contending that this is an admirable coal for naval purposes, should bring that proof and that evidence into the Senate Chamber and let us examine it. A test of this coal has been made, and it has been demonstrated, if anything can be demonstrated, that it is entirely unfit for naval purposes. It has been tested aboard a battleship and proven to be unfit for such purposes; it has been tested at the testing grounds at Annapolis and has been proved to be unfit for those purposes. Why? Because it is like a great many other coals in this country, it is too high in ash; in other words, the percentage of ash in the coal is so high that it makes its use for marine purposes entirely impossible. That is the case here, and it has been demonstrated by actual tests. When coal is from 18 to 20 per cent ash in its composition, it is almost utterly worthless for steam purposes, and especially for marine purposes. Why? You can not consume the ash in coal; it is noncombustible. When you put the coal into your fire box to produce heat, you burn the carbon out and you have left the ash; it is there in the box; and it takes but a little while to fill that box up with ash. Then what happens? You must draw your fire; you must shovel out the ash and recharge your fire box in order to get another start of steam.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall take the opportunity to speak a

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, it is with gratification, at least to myself, that I announce that I shall vote for the passage of the pending bill. For many years, both by pen and by voice, I have advocated measures of this character. A few years ago advocates of this policy and of kindred policies were termed dreamers with ill-balanced minds and like terms, but it remained until this day for the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] to endeavor to arraign those who advocate Government ownership as socialists. Why, Mr. President, some of our friends do not seem to have realized that this world has moved in the last 25 years. The arguments used by the Senator from North Dakota to-day are the same threadbare arguments that were heard 25 years ago. Danger of the Government going into business! Why, Mr. President, this Government is in business now in a hundred ways, all to the advantage and the blessing of the people. All the argu-ments used against the passage of this bill can be used, and were used, against the establishment of the Postal System; they were used against the parcel post; they were used against the construction of the Panama Canal and the great irrigation projects built by our Government. I hold that it is not only the right but that it is the duty of our Government to conserve and control the question of transportation and also to mine the great deposits of coal in our country for the use of the whole

The Senator from North Dakota, however, said a day or two ago that Government ownership of railroads meant ultimately the Government working the coal deposits. God knows I most devoutly pray for that result. I feel that a repetition of the late unhappy strife in the coal fields of West Virginia can only be averted by such action on the part of the Government. is well established in many instances that the owners of the coal mines and the railroad companies are in collusion in fomenting strikes and disturbances for their own profit, as was the result in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania years ago, when the price of coal was forced up to $12, $15. and even to $18 a ton; yet at that very time great pyramids of coal fairly lined the railroads reaching into the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, for which the railroad companies demanded the most extortionate rates, as high as $12, $15, and

Mr. President, I insist that Government ownership of those deposits the land over and the control of the great means of transportation is the only solution of this problem. serted that the employees would be a powerful political arm of the party in power. Possibly so; but I feel that no Senator to-day will charge that the great number of letter carriers are a serious menace or danger to our country or to our liberties. Let us have a secret ballot-one absolutely secret-and I care not how many employees the Government may have on its pay

Mr. President, I feel that there is another side to this question, which is the humanitarian side. We pass laws regulating and safeguarding the lives of miners, and yet the fact is that, under private ownership, last year there were 1,141 miners' lives, which were the toll given to private ownership.

A political power, you tell me! Why, Mr. President, the railroads of this country to-day are controlled by private ownership, and it is safe to say that every one of them is in politics up to its very eyes. I know how it was in my State. Private owner-ship of railroads led to scandals, until we were known not as the Commonwealth of New Jersey, but "the State of Camden and Amboy," the natural and legitimate legatee of the Camden & Amboy Railroad of the great Pennsylvania Railroad. In my State the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, the New Jersey Central, and the Reading were up to their eyes in politics. For 25 years of my life I have come in close contact with their opposition in instances where I have been a candidate or where our party has presented a candidate for office. We were met by, in the first instance, and had to combat with the powers of the great railroad corporations. It was the common thing to ask, "How does he stand with us?"

Let me say for myself that 35 years ago, when a candidate for the lower house of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of New Jersey, I was asked by one of the great railroad corporations from their office in New York, on Liberty Street, to come there. I was young then. They wanted to talk with me. I went. I will not mention the man's name who was then the head of that great railroad. He is now dead. His first question to me was, " Young man, how do you stand for our legislation?" I said to him-and I am proud to rehearse it to-day-"I want to be elected; I realize the potency and force of your great corporation. For all things that are decent, fair, and honorable I will be an advocate, but for you to own me and carry me around as your chattel, never, so help me Heaven." Sufficient to say, I was defeated in that and in many other battles. The same railroad powers confronted us in nearly all our political contests. So that the railroads to-day are as much a power under so-called private ownership as they can possibly be under Government ownership.

I heard my friend from North Dakota brand us as Socialists. Webster says popular usage of that term is to indicate lawlessness and revolutionary means. What, Mr. President, I ask has the Senator to say with the definition in mind of the looting, plundering, and robbing of the New Haven Railroad? has been done under private monopoly, not under public control or public ownership.

I vote for this measure because I believe in the principle it embodies. embodies. Whether or not it will pay does not worry me a particle. I simply want that it shall benefit the country and advance the general well-being of our people. Whether it shall pay or not, it will bring a better day, a brighter dawn, cleaner progress, and better advantages to those who may come after us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on behalf of the committee to the amendment heretofore reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 14, after the word "are" and before the word "located," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the words "designated and."

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Oregon. This amendment, as I understand, is in some section beyond section 1 of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; this is still section 1. We are going to perfect that section.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the page, then, as read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. On page 8, section 1, line 14, before the word "located" and after the word "are," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the words "designated and," so as to read:

And when such line or lines are designated and located he is hereby authorized to cause to be constructed.

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment originally reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also offer the amendment which I send to the desk

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page S, section 1, line 14, after the word "be," near the end of the line, it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting a comma and the words "acquired, located.'

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer another amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon offers another amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, section 1, line 18, it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the following proviso: Provided. That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 10 years.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:
If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward, so that, in any case, the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater: Provided. That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend, or obligate the United States to expend, more than the proceeds of the issue of the bonds hereinafter authorized: Provided Inther, That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to the amendment just read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that an amendment to the amendment offered would be in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will state it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Since section 1 is an amendment to the bill and since the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] is an amendment to the amendment, would not an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon be an amendment in the third degree?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the ruling is made The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say for the information of the Senator from Kansas that he recalls that the question was under consideration by the Senate in the course of the debate on the tariff bill and also on the currency bill, and it was then ruled that, pursuant to the provisions of Rule XVIII, an amendment might be offered to an amendment proposed to the report of a committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, Mr. President, I move to strike out the last proviso of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, and upon that I desire to be heard a moment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. Mr. BRISTOW. I should like, if the Senator from Iowa will yield, to ask the Senator from Oregon whether it would meet with his approval to insert in his amendment after the word "lease," in the third line from the end, I think, the words "or by the Panama Railroad," so that it would read "may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease or by the Panama Railroad Co."?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I would not like to assent to that without having an opportunity to submit it to the committee. Personally, I might not have an objection to it, and yet my colleagues on the com-mittee might seriously object. The only objection that could possibly be urged against it would be that it would complicate a situation which, under the present form of the bill, is not at all complicated, by mixing up the proposed lines in Alaska with the Panama Railroad.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, of course I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Iowa, but I shall insist that such a provision as to the Panama Railroad be put into this bill because, in my judgment, one of the vital things in the project is to make the Panama Railroad Co. available for the various kinds of work in connection with the proposed Alaska

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Iowa that I want to offer an amendment to the amendment which I think would take precedence over his amendment to strike out the last proviso. The theory of my amendment would be to perfect the amendment of the Senator from Oregon; and I think it ought to be voted on before the Senator's motion to strike out is voted on.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator withhold his amendment a moment until I can state my objection to this part of the amend-

I have no objection to that, of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as much as I am in favor of building a railroad in Alaska and in favor of giving the President of the United States somewhat extensive authority with regard to that subject, I am not in favor of giving him the authority to lease a railroad built or acquired by the United States in that Territory. I can understand how it might be-come wise to lease the Government property thus created; but we ought not at this juncture to say to the President that he can, after building a railroad or acquiring a railroad, lease it to some private company or enter into a contract with a private company in regard to its use. If that seems to be wise at any time, it ought to be submitted to Congress and receive legislative sanction. It is altogether too much to ask Congress to say to any officer or to any one man of the Government that he may take a vast property of this character and lease it upon whatever terms may seem to him to be best adapted to promote the general good.

We ought for another reason to remove this authority from the bill. We are entering upon an experiment. The fact that it is an experiment does not deter me at all, because Governments, like individuals, must from time to time enter upon experiments; but if the experiment is to be of value to us we must ascertain whether it is possible for the Government of the United States to operate a property of this sort in a way that will secure the general welfare; that is to say, whether it can operate it economically and efficiently through the chosen officers of the Government.

To say that we shall build this railroad and then immediately turn it over for operation to some corporation which, of course, will not operate it unless it can see a profit in its operation, is to defeat, as it occurs to me, one of the great objects which we are seeking to accomplish. If, after we have built the railroad, the President thinks it can not be operated by the Government, it is quite easy for him to refer the subject again to Congress and obtain the authority necessary to dispose of it either by lease or by any other form of contract. I earnestly hope we will not make an authority, which is already vast and indefinite, cover this additional power.

Moreover, I agree with the Senator from Kansas that if this property is to be operated in any other way than directly through the officers of the Government, I am in favor of committing its operation to the Panama Railroad Co., already organized, already trained and skilled in such work. I shall have no objection whatever to the inclusion of the idea suggested by the Senator from Kansas, for I look upon the operation of a railroad by the Panama Railroad Co. as the equivalent of an operation by the Government of the United States itself, inasmuch as the Government owns all the capital stock of that

It may be, as the Senator from Kansas has more than once said, that in doing this work we can do it better through the intervention of that form than we can do it through the appointment by the President of men who will immediately take charge of the operation. Of that I am not entirely sure, but I have no objection whatever to attempting it in that way. I do object, however, and I repeat that we will do great harm to the cause we are attempting to further if we say to the President or any other officer of the Government: "Having invested $40,000,000, more or less, as the case may be, in a railroad property, you may lease it to any company that may propose to operate it upon any terms that may recommend themselves to you."

If we knew that all our Presidents in the future were to be infinitely wise and infinitely good, there would be no harm in giving this authority; but it reminds me very much of a little conversation I once had in New York with a great financier now gone to his reward. I was making a speech there and giving utterance to some of these ideas that are still regarded as so unorthodox about our transportation system and about the principles which should control it. It was at a banquet, and this financier happened to be sitting near me. After I had finished, he asked me to pull my chair to the rear of the platform on which we were sitting, and he proceeded to paint in the most beautiful way the picture of complete consolidation of all the transportation facilities of the United States, both on land and on sea, the economies that could be secured, the conveniences that could be given to the public that are now withheld, and the efficiency with which this sort of consolidated system could serve the purposes of commerce. When that picture was complete he turned to me and asked me what I thought about it, and whether I did not think what I had just been saying was a little bit I said to him: "When you have completed this consolidation in one board of directors of all the transportation facilities, both on land and water, and have it all ready, if you could get the Almighty to come to earth and manage the corporation, I would be willing to consider it; but I am afraid to trust you."

Just so I am afraid here to trust any President of the United States to take a property that has cost us whatever it shall cost us-and no one can determine at this moment the ultimate costand dispose of it according to his pleasure. We are creating this property in order to serve a public necessity that we believe exists. We ought at least to try to operate it. We ought not to say to an officer of the Government: "You can take the property and lease it or dispose of it by contract," unless we are advised of the terms of the contract and the character of the a parliamentary inquiry.

The pending amendment contains three distinct propositions, and I think the Senate probably has a right to vote upon each one of them. I make the request, or, if it be in accordance with the parliamentary law of the Senate, I make the demand, that the question shall be divided.

To explain what I mean, the first part of the amendment is: If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation, as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater.

That is one proposition in the amendment, standing singly and separately. That particular proposition meets with my ineffectual disapprobation, and I should like to vote against it. It involves merely the idea that, whatever else may happen, the Government shall make this experiment of Government ownership of railways.

The second proposition is this:

Provided, That in executing the authority granted by this act, the President shall not expend, or obligate the United States to expend, more than the proceeds of the issue of the bonds hereinafter authorized.

I am emphatically in favor of that part of the amendment. I am just as much in favor of that as I am opposed to the preceding part of the amendment. They have nothing in the world to do with one another. Each one is sui generis.

Then follows this:

Provided further. That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years.

I am in favor of that amendment because it does, at least, reduce this State socialistic proposition down to Government ownership from Government ownership and operation both put together. If the Government can take the road and the roadbed and the road material and lease it, so that it shall be operated by private enterprise instead of Government enterprise, it comes that near to what I want.

I make the point of order that the amendment involves three separate and distinct propositions, and that the Senate is en-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Mississippi may not have been in the Chamber when I offered my amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about the Senator's amendment to the committee amendment. I am talking about this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. My amendment is the one that is pending now, and therefore the point of order raised by the Senator from Mississippi would not apply.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am making a parliamentary inquiry and a point of order about this amendment. The Senator is right.

I did not hear his amendment. What is it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have offered an amendment proposing to strike out the last proviso, and that is the pending question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, that is about the only proviso in the amendment that is worth anything. That carries us a little bit further from State socialism than the balance of

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood that the Senator from Mississippi would be opposed to my amendment, but that does not make it any the less in order as I understand parliamentary procedure. I supposed the Senator from Mississippi had made his point of order on the assumption that the pending question was the amendment offered by the committee, whereas that is

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have propounded a parliamentary inquiry, and with it I have submitted a point of order, not upon his amendment at all, with which I was totally unacquainted, and to which after his explanation confess that I am opposed. What I want to know, and what I want to get a ruling from the Chair upon, is this: After the Senator's amendment is defeated—as it will be, because this thing is all fixed up-and this committee proposition comes before the Senate, I wish to inquire if we can not have a separate vote upon each of the three propositions involved in the amendment. I am very much interested in it, because there are two propositions involved in the amendment that I am in favor of and one to which I am opposed, and if it is all put to me in one dose I shall refuse to take the medicine.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins]. I do not think we ought to lease this railroad. There is no occasion to lease the railroad when the Government of the United States owns a railroad that is now being operated successfully and has all the facilities to operate it. Why can not the Government of the United States, through the Panama Railroad Co., operate this railroad as well as it operates the railroad which now is operated?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why can not the Government of the United States make clothing, or do anything else? With its immense Treasury and its immense wealth it could beat any private competitor, of course.

seems to be very much opposed to the Government undertaking to do anything that would benefit the people if it comes in conflict with any of his preconceived theories of things.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I protest against being misrepresented

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to misrepresent him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Kansas had no right to say that. I am opposed to the Government of the United States doing anything which private enterprise can do half as well. Take that as my position. I have never said that I was opposed to the United States Government doing anything for the benefit of the people. Of course every man with a particle of common sense wants the United States to do everything that is indispensable in behalf of the public welfare under its constitutional grant. I do believe, however, that it would be better for any Government-not only this, but England or France or Germany-not to undertake anything that private enterprise can attend to even half as well as the Government can.

I admit that the Government of the United States could establish sweatshops for ready-made clothing to-morrow and beat every sweatshop in the United States. I admit that the Government of the United States could manufacture steel rails tomorrow and beat the manufacturers of steel rails. I admit that the Government of the United States could grow cotton to-morrow and put me out of business. Somebody might come up and say that that was for the benefit of the consumer or of the general public; but my idea is that in so far as individuality and individual enterprise is concerned, which God respects and which all great intellects have respected, it should be left as far as possible free, without governmental inter-ference, and that private enterprise, which has developed this great country and made it what it is, should be respected and not overridden by governmental bureaucracy. I believe that man is more important than Government.

Mr. BRISTOW. The difference between the Senator from Mississippi and myself is that, while he favors private enterprise doing anything that it can do half as well as the Government can, I am in favor of the Government doing everything that it can do if it can do it cheaper and serve the people better than private enterprise can. If it can not do it so well-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. President—
Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will let me have a little of my time I shall be obliged. If it can not do it so well, then private enterprise ought to do it. If it can do it better and serve the public interest better than private enterprise, then the Government ought to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me just one more interruption, I will let him alone, because I recognize that I have taken a part of his time that I was not entitled to. Does not the Senator know, as a matter of fact, that the Government can raise cotton cheaper than I can?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think it could raise it anything like as cheaply as the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know it could. I know that with all of its soil experts, all of its boll-weevil experts, and everything else, the Government could open up a thousand acres of land next to my 1,400 acres on my home farm and make twice as much on the thousand acres as I could make on the 1,400 acres.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon the difference, I think the Senator from Mississippi would make twice as much as the Government would make on the same thousand acres of land under the same circumstances.

Mr. LANE. I should like to interject a remark there, and say that if the Senator thinks the Government could handle that 1,400 acres twice as well as he does, it would pay the Government to hire him to get off the land and let the Government do it. [Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have that answer. That brings this question to a focus. That brings the question to the final analysis. Mr. LANE. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the analysis I have been seeking. Here is a proposition that provided the Government can do a thing cheaper than I can do it, or better than I can do it, the Government shall do it, and the Government shall pension me to remain in idleness. Now, that is socialism. That is State socialism, and I am glad to recognize the fact that the Senator from Oregon announces himself publicly as a State socialist.

Mr. IANE. Mr. President—
Mr. WILLIAMS. I want a fair, square fight between men who believe in individualism and individual enterprise and men Mr. BORAH. It might reduce the cost of living.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; it would come nearer reducing the cost of living than the tariff bill did. The Senator from Mississippi finds out that the Government can make shoes cheaper than a shoemaker does or can raise cotton cheaper than a cotton raiser can, the Government ought to go to work and make shoes or grow cotton and pension the shoemaker and the cotton raiser. want that new idea of progressivism stamped upon the American mind right now, and I want the American mind to go to work on it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

Mr. BRISTOW. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I admit that there is not a single, solltary thing in the world that the United States can not do cheaper than I can, because the Government of the United States can charge up the losses to the Public Treasury, and I have no public treasury.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say that if the Senator, by his efforts in raising cotton, damages the average production per acre 50 per cent, he is in the same class as the boll weevil and the codling moth and the woolly aphis, and he ought to be sprayed and dipped in sheep dip and hired to get out of business. [Laughter in the galleries.]
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will preserve order in the galleries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no, Mr. President; do not do that. What the Senator from Oregon has just said is that any private citizen engaged in private enterprise ought to be subjected to sheep dip unless he can produce his particular product cheaper than the Government, with all of the money in the Treasury behind the Government, can do it, while perhaps the individual—take my own case, for example—has not $200 in bank to his credit. Now, the galleries have laughed, and the Senate has laughed, and they both ought to have laughed, and the Senator from Oregon thought they were laughing with him.

They were really laughing at him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi proceeds upon the wrong basis. Of course, if the Government should pay out of the Public Treasury the losses it would incur in growing cotton in competition with him, he would be at a disadvantage; but nobody would suggest anything like that. I do not believe the Government could run a sweatshop or a cotton field or a wheat farm as cheaply as a private individual could run it.

This, however, is an entirely different proposition. We are proposing to develop our own resources in Alaska by constructing a great highway for that purpose. I want that highway operated by a corporation which has all the advantages that the private individual has in the operation of the highway which the Government owns. It can not in any way, without the consent of the Government, monopolize or favor or discriminate against anyone who patronizes the road.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Iowa ought to prevail, because there is no use in building this road and then leasing it to a private corporation and giving it the control of the transportation when we have the very facilities that the private corporation would have, which we have been successfully using for years in operating a railroad.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, in his argument against this particular measure, overlooks the proposition that the United States, as the owner of the property up there, is, as a matter of fact, engaged in developing its own property. If the Senator had a different method by which to put that property into individual hands, or to open it so that individuals might take hold of it and develop it, his argument would be very hard to answer

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon an interrup-

Mr. BORAH. I rose in order to give the Senator a chance to discuss this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already propounded to the Senate a method whereby I think the end could be much better at-

Mr. BORAH. I did not catch the proposition. Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator perhaps was not in the Chamber when I did it.

Mr. BORAH. I always try to get here when the Senator talks, but I overlooked it in this instance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I know that; and I always try to get here to hear the Senator from Idaho, and when we do not like to hear one another we at least make out that we do. are always glad to hear one another, except when it is more pleasant to escape one another.

I have already propounded this idea, however. It is that the United States Government should open up the resources of cultural possibilities, and everything else, and that they should fix a limitation upon the number of square feet or square yards or acres that anybody could hold, either for a mining purpose or for an agricultural purpose, and that they should make a lease instead of a sale, and that they should put in the lease a provision that if the leaseholder attempted to dispose of it in any way, either by re-leasing or by selling, it should fall back into the ownership of the United States Government, so that monopolization should be absolutely impossible.

I do not know what the limitation should be, because I do not know enough about mining, as I stated before when I was on my feet; but the Senator from Idaho does know, and he can help me. You can fix the number of square yards, the number of linear feet, or whatever else is necessary, running along a vein for mining purposes, to be leased to one person; you can make it large enough to enable him to expend the capital requisite and necessary to develop it, and make it small enough for him not to be a monopolist; and then you can put in the contract a provision that if he undertakes either to re-lease or to sell, the contract shall be forfeited. That will obviate even the possibility of monopolization.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the President of the United States, shortly after his election, made the statement that it was his purpose to open up the development of the natural resources of the West, and the West was glad to hear the statement. Now, this proposition, as I understand, has been presented as one of the steps which it is proposed to take to open up those natural resources. I am frank to say that I am supporting this measure because there is no alternative. I believe it will accomplish this if certain other steps are taken. I might prefer other methods, but I want results in some way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not make an alternative? The Senator and I and the Senate can do it.

Mr. BORAH. I am not a member of the Democratic caucus, and therefore I can not make it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We will admit the Senator just for that Mr. BORAH. That would likely make two votes in the caucus in favor of it. They would be the votes of the Senator from Mississippi and myself.

Mr. President, aside from the facetious feature of it, this is presented here as a concrete proposition, and there is no other presented. The property up there belongs to the United States, and this is a step taken for the purpose of developing that property, which is the property of the United States. If the Senator from Mississippi had his measure here as a concrete proposition in the form of a bill, he would get a vast amount of support for it; but when there is no other proposition to be submitted. those of us who have seen these resources tied up year after year perhaps should take some chance in opening up those resources, even if the method is not the specific one which we would prefer.

I am opposed to the leasing of the road for the reason that we would not accomplish anything at all by it. If we should lease the road, we would be up against precisely the same proposition that we are now; and that is that as a practical fact we would secure no relief to the consumer or to the utilizers of the natural resources of the Territory. A certain amount of compensation would have to go to the lessee, or a certain amount of compensation from the consumer to the lessee, and from the lessee to the Government, and by the time the ultimate consumer was reached there would be no benefit derived to him whatever by reason of this enterprise.

If it is possible, Mr. President, for the Government to build this road and develop its own territory, its own property, I want it to experiment with it upon a basis where it will be demonstrated when we get through whether or not that is the cheapest way. If it is not possible, we will come to the method which has been suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. If so, the alternative at that time shall receive my support.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Utah a moment ago made a suggestion as an analysis of the Senator's argument that struck me as peculiarly apt. He said it reminded him of a man who wanted to play keno in a town out West. Somebody came to him and said, "My dear fellow, you know it is not a straight game; you will just go in there to be swindled; you can not help losing; there is nothing good in that game." He replied: "Yes; I know that; but it is the only game going on." [Laughter.] That seems to be the Senator's argument.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I frankly confess this is the only game that is going on, and as I want some kind of a game I am going to sit in this game. It is the game that is presented Alaska, its coal fields, its copper mines, its gold mines, its agri- by the Democratic administration. It is a Democratic measure, an administration measure. It is the only one we are permitted to play. I am going to take my chance in this game. I believe we will get something out of it for the West. Certainly we will not get anything out of the nebulous and incon-crete proposition presented by the Senator from Mississippi unless he reduces it to a bill and brings it in here for consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator does not want me to reduce it to a bill right now?

Mr. BORAH. No; not right now, although I think the Senator has had some time to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With a perfectly stupendous capacity as a statesman I could not do that just upon the spur of the moment, especially as I am too ignorant of mining conditions. But I will tell the Senator what I will do. I will meet in conference with the Senator from Idaho, and he and I will draw up a bill of that sort, if he is in favor of it, and I will let him do nearly all the framing of it, because I know his information is so much superior to mine, especially his knowledge of mining conditions, and when we come to the details he is entitled to have the main say.

Now, why should we imagine that the world was built in a day or that Rome was built in a day? Why should we go out and spend four-fifths of the entire income tax per annum derived in this country in building one railroad for one little outlying Territory upon the ground that there is not any other game going on in town?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, he says he is in a game that is an administration game; that this is a proposal presented here and urged by the present administration. I am not seeking any controversy with the Senator on that point, but I wish to state a question of fact. I think it is also true that this measure was approved and recommended by the former administration, by President Taft, as it has been by President Wilson. When my friend from Idaho approves of this measure and supports it, he has back of him a Republican President as well as a Democratic President. I am assuming that the Senator from Idaho is supporting this measure because of his own individual judgment about its merits, without reference to any President.

Mr. BORAH. That is a rule which I have followed in the Senate, but I have not always been accompanied by a full Senate in doing it. When I said it was an administration measure, I was not speaking in the way of criticism, but I said it was a proposition which had been submitted here, as I understood, as an administration measure. I judged from the language of the Secretary of the Interior that it was in a practical sense an administration measure. That did not in any way militate against the measure; neither did it militate against the measure that a preceding Republican President had indersed it; but I was answering the Senator from Mississippi, who was objecting to the proposition and suggesting that there was no other measure here for us to consider and it was not within our power to present any other measure that would be The Secretary of the Interior, who knows more about this subject, in my judgment, than any other member of the administration, says in his report:

the administration, says in his report:

I have already expressed to Congress my belief that it was wise for the Government itself to undertake the construction and eperation of a system of trunk-line railroads in Alaska. And I am led to this view irrespective of the possibility of private enterprise undertaking such work, although my belief is that no railroads would be privately constructed in Alaska for many years to come excepting as adjuncts to some private enterprise. Be that as it may, it would seem wise for the Government to undertake this task upon grounds of state. The rates and the service of such railroads should be fixed with reference to Alaskan development, not with regard to immediate returns. The charges fixed should be lower for years to come than would justify private investment, I would build and operate these highways in the same spirit that the counties or the States build wagon roads—not for revenue, but for the general good. After all, a railroad is little more than an operated wagon road. In many countries they still call railroad cars "wagons." Our laws as to railroads are evolved from our old laws as to carriage by wagon. Our courts speak of railroads as property charged with a public interest, and so justify the regulation of their rates. But no court would justify the imposition of rates made for the purpose for which Alaskan rates should be made—the creation of a commonwealth. If this is our task, it should be done whole-heartedly and with a consciousness that the dollar spent to-day on an Alaskan railroad will yield no more immediate return on the investment than the dollar spent on the Panama Canal.

I take it the Senator from Missouri understands that is prac-

I take it the Senator from Missouri understands that is practically presenting the matter to the Senate as an administra-tion measure, and I think it is worthy of our support. It is certainly far better than to continue our policy of do nothing. It approaches a crime to leave matters longer as they are. I am willing to venture when there is so much at stake, and this is the only proposition since another decade of do nothing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the immediate question, as I understand the parliamentary situation before us, is the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to strike out of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBER-LAIN] the provision which authorizes the President to lease these roads after they have been constructed. So, if the motion of the Senator from Iowa prevails the authority to lease roads to private individuals and private corporations by the President will be taken away.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the same reasons which should induce anyone to vote for this bill ought also to induce him to vote for the amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa. I believe that we ought not only to construct these railroads but we ought to operate them after they have been constructed. I believe it is just as important that we should operate them after they are constructed as that we should construct them. If the Government of the United States is able to construct the reads the same principle would induce us to preclude the President from leasing them to private parties and thus provide for their operation by the Government. would favor an amendment, if it were necessary, that would provide that the President should have the right to lease this railroad to the Panama Railroad Co., because that is a corporation, all the stock of which is owned by the United States.

It has been said here that both a Republican President and the present President have recommended the construction of railroads in Alaska. As I remember the message of President Taft, he recommended the construction of railroads in Alaska, but he did not recommend their operation by the Government. However, he did recommend that they should be leased. So far as the bill with this provision in it is concerned, as I remember President Taft's recommendation, it would fully comply with it.

But let us see now how the present President and the Secretary of the Interior line up on that doctrine. Secretary Lane, the present Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report has recommended that the Government not only construct these railroads but that the Government should operate them. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] has just read from his report where he not only uses the word "construction" but the words "Government operation." So the Secretary of the Interior, who, as was said by the Senator from Idaho, perhaps knows as much about this proposition as any man connected with the Government, recommends not only the construction of the roads but their operation by the Government after they have been constructed.

Now, let me read from the message of President Wilson delivered to the joint meeting of the House and Senate on the 2d day of December, 1913. Speaking of Alaska, he uses this language:

A duty faces us with regard to Alaska which seems to me very pressing and very imperative; perhaps I should say a double duty, for it concerns both the political and the material development of the Territory. The people of Alaska should be given the full Territorial form of government, and Alaska, as a storehouse, should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of rallways. These the Government should itself build and administer, and the ports and terminals it should itself control in the interest of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people.

So we find that President Wilson recommends that we construct the railroads and administer them, and Secretary Lane that we construct them and operate them, which, I take it, means practically the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan, Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will read in just a word what President Taft recommended. He said:

If the Government is to guarantee the principal and interest of the construction bonds, it seems clear that it should own the roads, the cost of which it really pays. This is true whether the Government itself should operate the roads or should provide for their operation by lease or operating agreement. I am very much opposed to Government operation, but I believe that Government ownership with private operation under lease is the proper solution of the difficulties here presented.

Mr. NORRIS. That carries out exactly what I said was my recollection in regard to President Taft's recommendation. In other words, President Taft recommended the construction of the roads and the leasing of them. That is what this bill provides. President Wilson recommends that the Government shall construct and administer them, and so does Secretary Lane, who, I believe, is a man whose judgment on a question of this kind is entitled to as much consideration as any other man connected with the Government in any way.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the members of the committee who have so diligently worked on this proposition make a mistake if they should prevent the operation by the Government of these railroads after the Government has constructed them. I can see objection to the construction of railroads on the part of those who believe fundamentally that the principle is wrong, but that is not the question now before the Senate. Conceding that we should build the railroads, then should we operate them? It seems to me that if we lease them it will be of no practical benefit to the people of Alaska in the regulation of rates or to the people at large of the United States. appears to me that every man who is at heart in favor of this proposition ought also to be in favor of the amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa and that the provision giving the President authority to lease the railroads should be stricken out.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the merits of this proposition. I simply want to say as a member of the committee, having taken quite an interest in the preparation of this measure, that in committee I was opposed to the proposition contained in the amendment. I was in favor of the provision providing for the construction of the road and its operation by the President until otherwise provided by Congress. Therefore, I feel that on the proposition of the Senator from Iowa I must vote for his proposition, although if it should fail I would not consider that a sufficient justification to vote against the whole amendment.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norms] conveyed the impression, at any rate, that he thinks the committee by this provision is taking away the right of the President to continue the operation of the road. I do not so understand the effect of the amendment. The effect of the amendment is to permit the President, if he deems it wise, instead of operating the road to lease it, but if he does not deem it wise to lease it he can operate it under the amendment that is proposed by the committee.

I simply wanted to explain my position as a member of the committee and the reason why I shall vote for the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, so as to leave it to the President simply to operate the road until Congress otherwise provides.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I previously indicated, I am not in favor of the pending bill. But if it is going to pass, I should like to see it passed in a shape which would be the least objectionable. I can very readily conceive of circumstances where it might be to the interest of the Government to lease It may be feasible to operate it. I will not say anything on that question now, but I think it would be well for me to give to the Senate an instance of a practical nature as to the working of a railroad by government.

The State of Georgia owns a railroad running from Atlanta to Chattanooga, Tenn. It has owned it for 60 or 70 years. In that time it has operated it directly as the owner of the road. Whenever it did so, if my recollection is not incorrect, it was at a great loss; and there are a great many other very unfortunate features connected with the operation of that road by the State. The State, in view of the continued loss and in view of other matters of which I will not now speak, determined to abandon the policy of operating the road itself and leased it out, and the road is leased at a very fair rental. If I recollect aright, the State of Georgia gets $35,000 a month from the lessee of that road. It would certainly be a very great hardship if the State of Georgia were compelled to operate the road at a loss, which experience shows it will always do when it attempts to operate it, and if the State were denied the privilege of leasing it at a fair rental, as the experience of 40 years has shown it can do successfully. It has been leased for 40 years. Prior to that time it was always operated by the State

Now, why should the United States Government be put in a position where, if experience has demonstrated that it can not successfully operate the road, it should be prohibited from the privilege of leasing it?

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Yes. Mr. BACON.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the peculiar situation which exists in Alaska, what would be the difference between building this road on the part of the Government and leasing it to private enterprise, and permitting it thereby to be operated, and permitting private enterprise to go there in the first instance and build the road and operate it?

Mr. BACON. I do not understand that the prime object of this proposed legislation is to prevent private enterprise from building a road. The prime object is to get the road built. I understand it, if we could have assurance and guaranty that the roads would be built by private enterprise, we would not now be urged so strongly to undertake the work ourselves. Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator from Georgia is in error as to that. I think private enterprise would be there building the road if conditions were made such as that country would be permitted to develop.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator. Mr. BORAH. The Government not being willing to grant those conditions it feels the necessity of building the road itself. Therefore I can not see that the people of Alaska or the people generally are to get any benefit out of this matter if the Government builds the road and leases it other than the benefit which they would get if private enterprise went in there in the first instance and built it.

Mr. BACON. So far as that goes, if the Government of the United States keeps the mines hermetically sealed in Alaska, it may build a road in every square mile of the Territory, and it certainly can not operate that railroad to advantage. will open those mines in the one case, it can do so in the other; and in either case it is obliged to do so if these roads are to be successfully operated.

I repeat, Mr. President, I understand the purpose here not to be simply the securing of Government ownership in Alaska, but it is to secure the building of a road. After the road is built, we want it operated by the United States Government in such a way as will be of greatest benefit and will subject us to the least danger of loss. If experience shall demonstrate that it can be operated to a greater advantage by the Government, if it is left optional, the Government can do it. If it shall be demonstrated, as in the case of the State of Georgia, that it can only be operated by the Government at a great loss, and can be disposed of by lease at a fair rental, why should not the Government have the right and the opportunity to

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rose to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia because I have already exhausted my time on this amendment. The amendment I have offered does not forbid the Government of the United States from leasing this property when it is finished. It does prevent the President of the United States from leasing the property. If the property is completed and experience shows that it can be better operated by leasing, the Congress of the United States can authorize the President, when those conditions arise, to lease it. I take it for granted that in Georgia the governor was not given originally the power to lease the property.

Mr. BACON. Nor was he given the power to build the road. Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly not; and when conditions arose which made it desirable to lease the property the Legislature of Georgia, I fancy, authorized it to be done.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, that is just what I want this bill to do, so that when we get the road and see how it can be best operated Congress may determine whether it shall be leased

Mr. BACON. I see the strength of the Senator's argument; but I would reply that here is a proposition to put it within the discretion and the power of the President to go into this vast Territory and build railroads wherever he-sees proper, at any cost which may suggest itself to him to be proper, without any limitation except as to the amount of money. And yet, after giving him that wide and vast and unlimited discretion and power, it is said it will not be safe to trust to him the decision of the question whether or not he shall be permitted to lease a road.

I agree with the principle upon which the Senator from Iowa bases the question he asked me-that this unlimited power ought not to be given to the Executive-and if you begin in the proper way and have this road constructed under the direction of Congress, with a limitation as to where the road shall be located, and with all the other information necessary to enable us to legislate wisely on the subject, I am willing to go still further and say that Congress, having thus begun and having thus controlled the construction of the road, shall also afterwards control its operation. But by what possible reasoning can it be justified that the President shall be given this vast power and still be denied the much less power of determining whether or not the road shall be leased? It seems to me, Mr. President, it is straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee

I should like to explain to the Senate the reason why this bill was framed just as it is framed. There has been considerable dispute as to the construction of the bill. The committee was in session for some six weeks, having hearings and considering suggestions on this matter. The main object was to get a railroad or a number of railroads built into Alaska to develop its resources. I believe that two-thirds of the Members of this body are in favor of that.

If we had reported a bill that provided for the operation solely by the Government, it would have received bitter opposition from some Senators who are in favor of the general ciple; and, on the other hand, if we left out of the bill the power to lease, it would receive opposition from other Senators who are in favor of the general principle.

The committee worked long and untiringly on this matter and listened to every suggestion that was brought before it. It seems a late hour for the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WIL-LIAMS] to suggest that at some later date he will take this matter under consideration and settle the whole affair in the

The Senate at a subsequent date, on a plan suggested either by the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Idaho, may act with regard to the operation of this road. There is no doubt the railroad will not be ready for operation for over a year-it may be two or three years-and during that time the Senators who are interested in the method of operation will have an opportunity to present to this body some concrete plan. Therefore it is practically immaterial to this bill what provision is in it concerning the operation of railroads.

No matter what provision is included in the bill at the present time as to the operation, that plan can be changed by this body at any subsequent time. Under the necessity of the case, under the necessity of getting action in the committee, under the necessity of getting an appropriation to start this particular matter, the bill had to be formed originally in its broad powers. Therefore the committee refused to say how the operations should be conducted. It simply provided that the business might be conducted either by Government operation or by the leasing of the land, and that can be changed at any time before this operation ever becomes necessary.

I observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has left the Chamber. I want to address myself just a second to one of his remarks. He asked the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] the distinction between leasing the road to an individual and permitting an individual to own it. I might ask him in return the distinction between leasing the coal lands and allowing an individual to own the coal lands. The distinction The distinction is that when you own a property is the same. and lease that property you may place any terms, any condi-tions, or any covenants in the lease to protect the property or its use. In this case the President may provide in the lease such terms and conditions as may be necessary to protect the people against overcharges or against discriminations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Nevada is in error in regard to one statement that he made a moment ago. Under this bill the President could lease the railroad at once, the very moment it was located and its route was determined and the construction was entered upon. The President could lease the railroad to be constructed for a period not exceeding 20 years. Therefore the opportunity which the Senator says Converses was heave to with the senator says Congress may have to withdraw this authority before it could be exercised may not present itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator by saying that a great deal has been intrusted to the President of the United States in this bill. A great deal will be intrusted to the President of the United States in the bill, if the Senator's amendment is carried, which provides for the Government control. More will be intrusted to him, if that amendment is adopted, than is intrusted to him now. I want to say to the Senator, as a practical proposition, that he believes in trusting the President to a great extent in this matter, and all of us do, so far as the circumstances require. We have intrusted to him enormous powers in the bill, and those powers will be increased if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, providing solely for the Government operation of the roads, passes.

But I want to ask the Senator, as a practical man, as one who favors the principle of this bill, as one who wants Government control and operation of this railroad, if he believes that the President of the United States would undertake to lease any of those roads before they were constructed or before the time arrived for the operation of the roads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I answer that without the least hesitation. A great many railroads in this country have been constructed after a contract of lease has been entered into. It is a familiar way in which railroads are built. If the President of the United States thought it was better to lease than to operate, there would be nothing extraordinary and, from his standpoint, nothing wrong in entering into a lease with some railway company for the operation of the road after its con-It would be entirely in harmony with the history of railroad building, and to my mind, if the proper way to operate the railroad is under a lease, I can easily imagine that there would be many advantages in leasing it before it was constructed. I rather assume that that is what is intended, for much depends in the construction upon the question of whether the road is to be ultimately operated by the constructing company-in this case by the Government-or whether it is to be operated by a private corporation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, railroads have frequently entered into contracts for the lease of a property before its construction as a part of the consideration of raising the necessary funds; but there is no consideration at the present time of this character why the President should attempt to enter into the lease of a railroad before it is constructed. I do not believe that, in the reason of things, the President at the present time, after this bill is passed, or after the railroad is laid out, could arrive at a reasonable lease until he had ascertained the cost of the road—until he had ascertained how far the $35,000,000 would go, what territory it would actually reach, and what would be the character and the condition of the roads and their probable tonnage. Therefore, it seems to me that the fear expressed by the Senator that the President of the United States will use this power of leasing before a plan of operation can be adopted has no force or effect in it. It is simply an argument to have placed in this bill a declaration that we are in favor of the Government operation of railroads. If the Senator is willing to sacrifice the chance of carrying a principle by engrafting on it something that is only slightly material to it, he may take the chance; but I want to say that the members of this committee, who have studied this question carefully and who chiefly desire the development of Alaska to be accomplished, believe that the best way to pass the bill is to encumber it with as few details as we possibly can. I know that there will be opposition in the Senate if you strike out that amendment, and I know that there will be opposition in this body to it when you try to engraft on the bill a proposition purely and simply of Government ownership.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Nevada—I will ask him a question now—I do not say that I will vote against the bill if it contains the leasing power, although I sincerely believe that it will destroy a very large part of the benefit that we hope from it. I do not believe that any bill should be framed in order that it may meet the prejudices of those who are really opposed to the principle upon which it is founded. I put to the Senator from Nevada this question: Suppose the President of the United States were in favor of private operation, as was the former President of the United States, and not of Government operation; suppose that he were dealing with the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad Co. and sought to lease the new road that is to be built by the Government to that company, do you not believe that with regard to this route, the character of its construction, the points it is expected to reach, the resources it is expected to develop, there must necessarily be consultation with the company that is finally expected to secure a lease of it? On the other hand, suppose it were expected to lease the other the other hank, suppose it were expected to lease the other line to the Alaska & Northern Railway Co., do you not think that, even though it were not necessary to secure the lease in order to have the capital, the company that is to lease it for 20 years would want something to say with regard to the route, as to the final location, and as to the manner of its construction? It would be the most natural thing in the world. Therefore we will be put in the position that if we should have a President-I do not know what his view is upon it exactlybut if we should have a President at any time who was in favor of private operation, he would enter into a lease for the operation before there was a single stroke in the way of construction.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not believe the President of the United States will consult any of the present owners of transportation companies in Alaska as to where this railroad shall be built, and I doubt if the Senator from Iowa takes that matter very seriously, or he would not be intrusting these powers to the President, the powers contained in the bill.

We all know that the Alaskan Syndicate, being the Morgan-Guggenheim Syndicate, controls practically every road and every transportation company in Alaska to-day. One of the very objects in the building of these railroads is for the purpose of fighting that monopoly in Alaska. The President of the United States has access to these hearings; he knows the facts just as well as we know them; and it is not within the range of possibility that he is going to consult those men as to the way this road shall be laid out or that he is going to consult those men in regard to a lease. The situation is different here.

I want to say to the Senator that we have not tried to involve this bill with details. We are simply trying to enact that this Government pledges its credit to the extent of $35,000,000 in the development of the Territory of Alaska through a railroad or railroads hereafter to be built. We are not tying down the operation of those roads either to a lease or to Government operation. I want to say that we are not appealing to the prejudices of anyone. We might be appealing to the prejudices of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] if we provided that these roads should be operated solely by the Government or we might be appealing to the prejudices of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] if we provided that these roads could only be operated through a lease. We are simply doing this: We are saying that the method of operation shall be left to the future determination of this body.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, when the Government acquired the Panama railroad the same question that is here was then up for consideration. Three propositions were before the President of the United States at that time, namely, whether the road should be sold—and that plan had very strong advocates on the part of those who believed that the Government ownership of railroads was a political heresy-or whether the railroad should be owned and leased to a private company to operate—that also had very strong supporters—or whether the Government itself should run the road and operate the steamship lines through the corporation, as it has been doing. After some investigation it was determined to keep the road and run it as a Government line. It has been so run since that time, and successfully run,

To refuse to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is simply to leave open the opportunity to nullify the good work that we are doing in this bill. For one, I am bitterly opposed to doing that. If President Roosevelt had taken the position which is proposed here, the advantages of the ownership of the Panama Railroad would have been lost to the people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President-

Mr. BRISTOW. He took the other position, and that was to operate it through the corporation, as has been done. That has been a success; and not one word of criticism has been offered here upon this floor against the Government operation of that road.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the illustration of the Panama Railroad does not apply and is of very We have been building a canal alongside of the railroad; we have been handling our own supplies. Its operation has largely been a part of the construction of the canal. We have had no demonstration of practical Government operation of a commercial road through the handling of the Panama Railroad, and I want to add that I believe we have operated it extravagantly and that the expense of the operation by the Government even under these advantageous circumstances has been excessive and bad. I believe an investigation would show

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I trust the Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had rather not. I only have 15 minutes. I tried to interrupt the Senator from Kansas, and he did not yield to me.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will not prevail. If these roads be built, I certainly hope that the President may have an opportunity to lease them. We have given the country and ourselves no demonstration of the possibility of successful operation of railroads by the Government. I doubt its possibility most seriously. If I were compelled to express an opinion, I would say that it is utterly impossible for the Government to operate them successfully.

do not like the bill, because I find in the report of the commission what I think is a commendation of one line and a re-commendation of the construction of two others. They present five lines—their east line, their next eastern line, their third line, their fourth line, and their fifth line. I do not believe any student who examines carefully the report of the commission will fail to reach the conclusion that the facts they state show that the best line would be a line from Prince William Sound or Resurrection Bay almost directly north to Fairbanks. Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrnot him?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator not think that the President would form the same conclusion from the same report?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I think the President would naturally rely on his engineers; and with the facts fur-nished, which, to my mind, indicate this north and south line as by far the best plactical line, the engineers recommend the lines east and west of it. I do not want to leave it in the air.

If we have the facts that we are to be furnished, then I should like to vote, if we are to spend the people's money on either of these lines, for the construction of the line that the evidence satisfies me is much the best line. I do not want to leave it for these men to advise the President. I do not know whether the President is familiar with railroad construction or railroad business; I suppose he will rely on the same engineers who made the former report; and yet they give us this map favoring the eastern and western lines, instead of the central line, which I think the evidence clearly shows, and it has satisfied most of the Senators who have studied it, is by far the best line. I feel that Congress ought to exercise a voice in determining where the people's money should be spent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator from Idaho wish ask me a question?

Mr. BORAH. I will not interrupt the Senator if he does not desire to be interrupted. I was simply going to ask him a question

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that the President undoubtedly will need the advice of his engineers; but, besides the President, there is a man who, I think, by reason of his experience in railroad management and with the West, is better fitted than almost anyone we could designate, and that is Mr.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I join the Senator from Idaho in his high opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, but I do not feel that it is our business to vote $40,000,000 away into the air without any definite purpose for its use. There are a number of different schemes to which it could be applied. None of them are ready. There is no necessity for an immediate vote; there is no necessity for an immediate appropriation. It is admitted that we do not know what is the condition of a number of these bays or which could best be used. We ought to have a definite report indicating a definite line. We ought to know where the money is going. I do not go to the extent of objecting to the use of the public money to help develop Alaska. I do object, however, to voting the public money into a scheme that I do not think is surrounded, up to the present time. with that practical business knowledge and accuracy of information that ought to exist. None of us would spend a thousand dollars of our money and turn it loose so indefinitely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but would not the Senator be perfectly willing to spend his money upon the judgment of such men as the President and Mr. Lane should select? Would he rather have his own judgment of Alaska and of the conditions there than the judgment of those men who are so familiar with them? Furthermore, it is so completely an Executive

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator frankly that I would, and I would exercise it before I spent it. I have read the report of the first board selected by President Taft, and I disagree with it. I would not vote for the expenditure according to their report. I think the fact that a commission had to report an exact scheme to Congress, and that its recommendation was to be weighed, investigated, subjected to criticism, and go through the test of a committee examination, would make the report better, more accurate, and far safer; and as we have to vote away the money, I should like to know for what the money is to be used.

It is too complete an abandonment of legislative responsibility to vote $40,000,000 for the purchase and construction of railreads without knowing which are to be bought or what price is to be paid, without knowing which roads are to be constructed or what the construction is to cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, some question was raised by the Senator from Mississippi as to a division of the amendment. Has that been ruled upon by the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter is covered by Rule XVIII, if it is desirable to have a ruling. That rule says that a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to suggest the amendment which I suggested before this amendment was adopted, and that is to give the President the authority to have this railroad operated by the Panama Railroad Co., if he so

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas with respect to this mat-It occurs to me that the Panama Railroad Co. ought to be utilized as a convenient instrument in the operation of the road; but I ask the Senator from Kansas whether the provision as it is now does not accomplish the entire purpose? That is to say, as the amendment stands now the President is authorized to lease the road. He could lease the road, for the purpose of operating it, to the Panama Railroad Co. He could lease it for $1 or for $10. The amount to be paid is a matter of no consequence whatever, inasmuch as the United States owns the stock of the Panama Railroad Co.

In other words, we would not add to the bill in any respect by inserting the words "or operate the same through the Pan-ama Railroad Co.," because it can now be operated by leasing the road to be constructed to the Panama Railroad Co.

I must say, however, that so far as I am myself concerned, if the Senator from Kansas insists upon it I shall be glad to vote for the amendment out of consideration for him; but I submit that there is absolutely no necessity for it, and it would not add at all to the power of the President.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, the Senator is a very able lawyer, but it seems to me that it is rather ridiculous for the President in one capacity to lease to himself in another capacity to do something. It looks to me rather like a roundabout way to do it.

Mr. WALSH. In answer to that, I desire to say that that is just exactly what the Senator proposes. He wants to use, as I do, the instrumentality of the Panama Railroad Co. The Panama Railroad Co. is the President, and the President is authorized to construct a road; so that in either case the President is simply using a convenient instrument, to wit, himself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.
Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the Panama Railroad Co. is corporation chartered under the laws of the State of New York. The purposes of the corporation are stated in the charter, namely, to build and to operate a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama. The United States is simply a stockholder in the corporation. What occurs to me is, How have we the right here to enlarge the powers of a New York corporation?

I have no doubt it can be done; almost anything seems possible; but it strikes me as an odd thing to do suddenly to enlarge the powers of a New York corporation or amend the charter of a New York corporation, which is what we are apparently going to do.

Mr. WALSH. 'Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes. Mr. WALSH. I desire to say, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that I endeavored to inform myself concerning the scope of the powers which the Panama Railroad Co. might exercise under its charter. fortunately, I have not been able thus far to get possession of it. Of course if its powers are not so general in character as would authorize its operation in Alaska, it would be impossible either to enter into a lease with it, or, as suggested by the amendment, to operate through it any road which may be constructed there.

Mr. LODGE. I am speaking only from memory. The charter of the Panama Railroad Co. was, of course, printed at the time we took possession of the property; and my remembrance is that the charter of the Panama Railroad Co. authorizes them simply to build and operate a railroad across the Isthmus of I dare say that under the new dispensation we can Panama. amend State charters. I am not contesting that point.

Mr. NORRIS. The Panama Railroad Co. have been operating ships as well; so their charter at least is broader than the Senator from Massachusetts states.

Mr. LODGE. It did not occur to me that these railroads

Mr. NORRIS. No; but the Senator is talking about the power of the Panama Railroad Co., and he says the only authority they have is to operate a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama. They have also been operating ships upon the Atlantic

I was speaking of their railroad authority because it did not occur to me that the power to operate ships gave them the power to operate another railroad, although it

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want the Senator from Massachusetts to undertake to put me in that position, because I have no intention of being put in it, and I will not be, of course. The Senator said the power of the Panama Railroad Co. was to operate a railroad in Panama. I was calling attention to the fact that they had at least powers under their charter greater than he has suggested, because they have been operating a line of ships.

Mr. LODGE. I did not suggest it because I could not see that the power to operate the ships had any bearing whatever on it.

Mr. NORRIS. It has a bearing to show that they have greater power than the Senator has suggested.

Mr. LODGE. I do not deny their power to operate ships, but that does not give them power to operate another railroad.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody said so, and I did not even intimate such a thing.

Mr. LODGE. Then, why raise the point?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I am not versed in the technical operation of the laws so far as these charters go; but what I want, if it can be done, is to provide some means by which the Panama Railroad Co. can build and operate a railroad in Alaska.

Mr. LODGE. All the Senator needs to do is to amend the New York charter; that is all.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Massachusetts thinks that would be an awful calamity, of course, if it aided in the extension of the operations of the Panama Railroad Co., since the Government owns it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels it is its duty to enforce the unanimous-consent agreement. The Chair is acting as timekeeper, but there seems to be nothing before the Senate on which to keep time.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the pardon of the Chair. I will offer this amendment, and then there will be something on which to keep time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. We can at least discuss it and come to a conclusion.

I move to amend the pending amendment by inserting, after the word "lease," the words "or by the Panama Railroad Co." I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana—and I think he and I agree exactly as to what we would like to do in regard to this matter-whether that will not be accepted?

Then it can go to conference or to the other House, and in the meantime the Senator can examine the charter and see whether or not this adds anything to the bill, or makes it more certain or desirable in so far as the operation is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas is entirely agreeable to me, and I am sure it will be to the Senator from Oregon; but what I rose to say in the first place was that, in my opinion, it did not at all enlarge the scope of the powers of the President. However, the amendment is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. BRISTOW. If it does not enlarge the scope of the powers of the President, then it is useless. If it does, it will be of use. This will give plenty of time for the Senator, who I know is a very able lawyer, to examine into the matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as the committee is concerned, I think I am safe in saying that all of the committee would assent; and I am sure that if the corporation did not have the power to accept a lease, the President would not undertake to do an illegal act.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the Secretary state the amendment as proposed to be modified by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as it is proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, beginning with the proviso on line 18, it is proposed to strike out the proviso and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that, in any case, the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater: Provided, That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend, or obligate the United States to expend, more than the proceeds of the issue of the bonds hereinafter authorized: Provided jurither, That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, or by the Panama Railroad Co., but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

There were on a division—ayes 25, noes 2, no quorum voting. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the pending amendment may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, it is an amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas that we are to vote on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The Secretary. After the word "lease," in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], it fs proposed to insert "or by the Panama Railroad Co."
Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the amendment may be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment to the amendment.

So Mr. Bristow's amendment to the amendment was agreed to, The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, upon that question I make a demand for a division of the amendment.

There are three separate propositions involved in the amend-

The first one is, that if any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation, and so forth.

The second proposition is, that in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend or obligate the United States to expend more than the proceeds of the issue of bonds hereinafter authorized.

The third proposition is, that the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease or by the Panama Railroad Co., but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years.

There is hardly a Senator who stands in the affirmative or the negative upon all three of those propositions. They are separate propositions and ought to be voted upon separately.

I make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to whether I have a right to demand that they shall be voted upon separately. If I have not that right, then I shall propose an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that in accordance with Rule XVIII, the question is not divisible. That rule

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided.

This is a motion to strike out and insert.

A further clause of the same rule, however, provides that-

Pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to strike out this language in the motion to strike out and insert:

If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward, so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater.

I move to strike out, from the motion to strike out and insert, that much of the language of the pending amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I supposed the Senator from Mississippi had concluded. If not, I will wait until he has concluded. Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I rose for the purpose of making a few remarks upon the amendment which the Senator from Mississippi has just offered. I am not sure whether the Senator is still holding the floor or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am not. I made a motion to amend, and that is all I want to do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, and I wish to state my reasons for doing so. I am opposed to the Government buying the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad under any circumstances. That road is there now. Whatever benefit may be derived from a privately owned road under those conditions the country, and particularly Alaska, will receive. Whatever money the Government spends in Alaska for railroads should be spent, in my judgment, for the construction of a different line at a different place. Even if, as I hope will not be the case, the Government should conclude under the authority granted by the bill to build an extension of that line—we will say from Chitina to Fairbanks, I certainly would not vote to make it mandatory upon them to do it. I trust they will not buy the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, but that, rather, they shall operate a Government extension of it in connection with the privately owned road, using the governmental power and its increased opportunities, which it will have through this Government extension, to compel reasonable rates over the privately owned road.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment, it is said that if the Government adopt that course, then it will be adding to the value of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad by the extension which the Government will build. That is true; but, on the other hand, the existence of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, which has been built by private capital, adds to the value of the extension which the Government will build, and instead of the Government paying out $18,000,000 or $22,000,000 to acquire the road which already exists there, my judgment is that the public can be far better served, if we become involved in the Copper River sys-tem at all, by using its power to compel good service and reasonable rates upon a through line rather than by buying the road.

For that reason I shall vote to strike out of the amendment the portion of it which makes it mandatory upon the Government to buy the road which is there at present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose to ask the Senator from Washington to state what he understood to be the import of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I could not hear it as it was read, and I would be very glad to have the Senator's construction of that amendment, for I agree with him. I do not want the Government to buy the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad Co., nor do I want the Government to build an extension of that road to Fairbanks. I hope the Senator will state just what he understands the meaning of the amendment to be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The meaning of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is that it strikes out of the committee amendment that portion of it which requires the Government to buy the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad if the Government builds an extension of it and leaves in the amendment proposed by the committee the clause with reference to leasing

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, of course the amendment is merely to strike out and, of course, for the purpose of this particular amendment, the motion does not affect the balance of the committee provision. But I do not mean by that that I commit myself to keeping in the balance. What I move is to strike out the language in the committee amendment down to the word "provided," and that language is this:

If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances. shall be acquired—

Shall be acquired-by purchase of condemnation, as hereinafter provided, before construc-tion is entered upon-

Refore construction is entered upon-

Or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward, so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner—

By the way, not the "owner"; there are 48 of the United States, but this nationalistic program puts them in the singular number.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will have to decline further to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS (reading)

so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater.

My proposition is to strike out that language.

POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will conclude what I have to say. My time is very limited.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator at all, except the Senator from Icwa had asked what the amendment is, and I wanted to explain it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has now stated what it is, and it will go into the RECORD, and I am very glad he has done so. I fail to see how this proviso would have any effect upon the valuation of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad property, if it is to be acquired, whether you acquire it after you build the extension or before you build the exten-I am opposed, as I said before, to acquiring it at all. But the minute that the Government proceeds to condemn or to negotiate for the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, then that company knows that the Government is going to extend the road and is going to confine its activities to that route, and whatever value the Government extension will give the acquirement by the Government and the perfection of that system will immediately go into effect just as soon as the Gov-ernment proceeds. A jury would take those circumstances into consideration at that time just as much as they would if the Government waits until after it has constructed its extension. It could not prevent the added value of the completion or the proposal of the completion of the system by the Government in entering into the valuation, whether the proceedings are begun before or afterwards. The amount of money which would be required to acquire that property is too large to be expended for what improvement of conditions would come from the own-ership of the road by the Government in that particular locality.

I will speak at some other time very briefly as to the benefits which will come from the location by the Government of a road in some other locality, which would afford the development of a country which this road does not reach and which would give Alaska two railroads instead of giving it one railroad for the same money. Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PresidentMr. CHAMBERIAIN. I move to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amend-

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not control the action of the Senator from Oregon. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from Oregon has no right to make that motion. Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I make the point of

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement each Senator has a right to speak for 15 minutes on each amendment, and a Senator has no right to move to lay an amendment on the table in order to cut off the 15 minutes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Mississippi has made the point of order I rose to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make that point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained, and the motion to lay on the table is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if you are going to empower the United States Government under this amendment to proceed to purchase the 466 miles of railway now in Alaska, one line or another, and connect them so as to make them continuous, it is a possibility at any rate, whether it is a probability or not, that this entire $40,000,000, four-fifths of the annual income tax of the country, will be devoted to paying the present stockholders of railroads in Alaska for their railways.

This entire amount of money may possibly, if not probably, be devoted to buying the existing railways in Alaska.

Mr. President, every railway in Alaska to-day is in the hands of a receiver except those that are waiting to be put into the hands of a receiver. I assert, upon my information, that every railway in Alaska not already in the hands of a receiver will be in the hands of a receiver if the Attorney General of the United States dares to collect the railway tax. They have been to me, and they have been to other Senators, talking about it. They have effected an arrangement with the Department of Justice whereby the Department of Justice will not immediately insist upon the payment of the tax. They are hundreds of thousands of dollars delinquent upon that tax—every railroad in Alaska; and not one of them can pay the tax to-morrow and continue to exist. This proposition is to arm the United States continue to exist. This proposition is to arm the United States Government or the President with the power to go up there and buy them out. What is going to happen? They will step up every one of them, and proceed to prove that they are worth so many thousand dollars per mile per annum, when they are not worth a cent to anybody. They are fakes. They are failures, and they are bankrupt right now.

Now, why should you give the Federal Government the power to go out there and buy up those railroads from the stockholders at the price the stockholders will fix upon them or at the price a jury of condemnation in Alaska will fix upon them? With a jury of condemnation in Alaska, every juror will be interested in getting the largest amount of money possible from the Government for the payment of the railroad.

I think that much of this amendment ought to be stricken I do not want to go to the point of constructing and owning railroads by the Government; but, God knows, I do not want to go to the point of buying up existing lines of transportation already furnishing to the people of the locality such conveniences as are possible at a price which may be either fixed by the stockholders or by a local jury of condemnation. Therefore I have moved to strike out that part of the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to take the opinion of the Chair, by way of a parliamentary inquiry, as to whether a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The opinion of the Chair is that Mr. STONE. Then I will not make it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, if it is to be construed as stated by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], raises a fundamental question. If it is proposed that the United States shall enter Alaska and build a railroad from the northern extension of the Copper River & Northwestern to Fairbanks and build another railroad from the northern terminus of the Alaska & Northern to some point upon the Tanana River, or the Yukon River, or the Kuskokwim River, and in that way construct Government railroads in the interior, with no way of reaching tidewater or any harbor save over privately owned railways, then I am opposed to building any Government railroad in Alaska. I believe that the people of this country will repudiate overwhelmingly the proposition that we are to take up the Morgan-Guggenheim railroad at its northern terminus and extend it into the interior.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And at their price.

Mr. CUMMINS. And take up the Alaska & Northern Railread at its terminus and extend it into the interior, and that when we attempt to serve the people of Alaska and the people of the United States we must serve them upon terms that can be reached with these privately owned railroads. I do not think that there is a Senator who would be willing to appropriate the money of the United States to build little stretches of railroad in the interior that could be of no value to the people of that country or to the people of this country save in connection with the railroads owned by private corporations, and that are already there.

If we are to build and own a railroad or railroads in Alaska, it or they ought to begin at a harbor and reach as far into the interior as may be necessary, so that the Government can control the transportation in Alaska, so that it can control it until it reaches the broad open ocean, where we may reasonably expect fair, substantial competition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator understands that this amendment does exactly what he now suggests ought to be

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and that is the reason why I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. If that prevails, it overthrows, as it seems to me, every object that ought to be accomplished in a bill of this character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have read by the Secretary the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon as it would stand if the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi should prevail. I have not been able to hear at this place in the Chamber the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which, I believe, has not yet been read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi moves, in that part of the committee amendment which proposes to insert cer-tain words, to strike out all down to the first proviso, in lines 18, 19, and 20, as printed in the bill, and to insert the following words:

That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend or obligate the United States to expend more than the proceeds of the issue of the bonds hereinafter authorized: Provided further, That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Secretary read the part which is proposed to be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the part proposed to be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following

If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located bereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired, by purchase or condemnation, as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater.

And also to strike out the word "Provided," which follows.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to

So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain], on behalf of the committee, to the original amend-

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have succeeded at last in getting a copy of the act incorporating the Panama Railroad Co. The first report of the company was in 1849. I have here the sixty-fourth annual report. That company was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and the first section of the act of incorporation is as follows:

of the act of incorporation is as follows:

Section 1. William H. Aspinwall, John L. Stephens, Henry Chauncey, James Brown, Cornelius W. Lawrence, Gouverneur Kemble, Thomas W. Ludlow, David Thompson, Joseph B. Varnum, Samuel S. Howland, Prosper M. Wetmore, Edwin Bartlett, Horatio Allen, and their associates, successors, and assigns, are hereby constituted a body corporate, by the name of the "Panama Raliroad Co.," for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a railroad, with one or more tracks and all convenient buildings, fixtures, machinery, and appurtenances, across the Isthmus of Panama, in the Republic of New Granada, under the grant made by the said Republic to the said William H. Aspinwall, John L. Stephens, and Henry Chauncey, and of purchasing and navigating such steam or sailing vessels as may be proper and convenient to be used in connection with the said road; and for such purposes all the necessary and incidental power is hereby granted to the said corporation.

That is the grant of the State of New York. I simply place it in the RECORD for the consideration of better lawyers than I am.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, as amended, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment, as amended, to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as anended, to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe that that completes all the committee amendments to the first section; and inasmuch as some other Senators have substitutes to offer for the section as amended, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Oregon withhold that motion for just a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I withhold the motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Do I understand that the committee amendments have now all been considered?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The committee amendments to the

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the committee amendments to offer to other sections?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A few; but I think there will be lit-tle, if any, discussion of them. Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to offer a substitute for the first section.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Iowa offers his substitute-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, Do I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has; and the Senator from Oregon has made a motion to take a recess, which the Chair understands he has withheld.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was that, Mr. President?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I only withheld the motion for a

The VICE PRESIDENT. The inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi was as to the motion to strike out and insert?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I wanted to address a few words to the Senate upon that subject; but if it has been

Mr. SIMMONS. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi was not adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I am not talking about that. I am talking about the amendment of the Senator from Oregon from which I proposed to strike out a part. I understand, Mr. President, that the motion of the Senator from Oregon has been adopted by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, as amended, to the amendment reported by the committee has been agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether I am in order or not—the Chair can decide—but I want to inform the Senate now of my opinion that of all of the propositions of prospective graft presented to the Senate this is the greatest.

Mr. CHAMBERIAN. I insist on my motion.
Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the motion?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is that the Senate take a recess until the hour of 12 o'clock meridian to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which is not debatable.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Is or is not that question debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Saturday, January 24, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 23, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal source of life and light and love, pour out of Thine abundance into our hearts more life, more light, more love, that we may trust and doubt not, hope and despair not, love and hate not, work and faint not. To love God and life and people is to be, to have, to do, making the world purer, stronger, better. The thought of God is ours in the book, in the landscape, in the sea, in the sky that arches above us, in the touch of a sympathetic soul, in the uplift of the spirit. It is written man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. So may we receive, so may we give, so may we live, in the spirit of the Christ.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, this is Private Calendar day, and the day on which pension bills have preference, but there is pending before the House now the Post Office appropriation bill, and I am advised by the chairman of the Post Office Committee that he would like to complete that bill to-day and tomorrow. Therefore our committee is willing to accommodate itself to the convenience and the wishes of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I ask unanimous consent that the day following the completion of the Post Office appropriation bill, provided such day does not fall on a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, and in that case the following day, shall be substituted in lieu of to-day, with all the rights and privileges of to-day under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rus-SELL] asks unanimous consent that pension day be transferred to the first day after the Post Office appropriation bill is disposed of, unless such day occurs on a Monday, a Wednesday, or a Friday, and in that case the following day. That would throw it on a Tuesday, a Thursday, or a Saturday after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] is not here this morning. I know that he is very much interested in getting the immigration bill up under the rule. Has the gentleman from Missouri consulted with him about this matter?

Mr. RUSSELI. I have not; but I can not see that there will be any delay in that matter at all, because if we should consume to-day with pension legislation the Post Office appropriation bill would take that much longer hereafter. As I understand it, the purpose is to call up the immigration bill after the Post Office appropriation bill has been disposed of. Therefore I do not see that this order would work any delay to the immigration bill.

Mr. GARDNER. How long does the gentleman suppose the pension bills would take?

Mr. RUSSELL. If there is no fight against us, I presume they would not take over an hour or an hour and a half. We can not tell how much time may be taken, but we hope very little.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Russell]?

There was no objection.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT ON HOUSE BILL 122.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, several days ago the Committee on the Public Lands filed a report, which has been printed. It is No. 178, and is a report on House bill 122. In preparing that report two important letters were left out, and I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report including those two letters, from the Department of the Interior and the Reclamation Service. (H. Rept. 178, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. Raker] asks unanimous consent to file a supplemental majority report on House bill 122. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to my friend from Missouri [Mr. Russell] for his courtesy. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes

Mr. BOWDLE. Will the gentleman withhold that motion for a moment, until I make a request for unanimous consent? I would like to have unanimous consent to make a statement to the House on a matter of some interest to me, and which will not take more than two and one-half minutes.

Mr. MOON. I withhold for that length of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bowdle] is recognized for two and one-half minutes.

PATENT OFFICE MODELS.

Mr. BOWDLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a rather curious matter, in which I take more than ordinary interest, not at all with the view of securing immediate action, for some committee consideration will be required, but with the view of directing the Members' attention to a new subject, so that rapid action may be obtained when the matter comes up formally.

There is stored in the cellar of this Capitol a vast collection of mechanical models belonging to the Government and in the care of the Patent Department. These models are of devices in which patents have been allowed and patents refused, and all are for patents now expired.

These models are full of interest and educational value to the thousands of young men who are receiving their education in our industrial and scientific schools.

The history of electricity is there, from Volta and Ampere to Edison, in models.

The history of the stationary steam engine is there, from James Watt to George Corliss, in models.

The history of the locomotive is there, from John Stephenson to our own Vauclair.

The history of the marine engine is there, from Fulton nearly down to Curtis and Parsons.

I am advised by Mr. Frazier, Assistant Commissioner of Pat-ents, that there is in the collection a model made by Abraham Lincoln of a device for helping flatboats over sand bars.

At present these models are utterly useless where they are and are suffering deterioration.

Our schools need them. They can be loaned for temporary exhibition purposes to the schools of America.

A movement for this use of them has commenced in Cincin-

A movement for this use of them has commenced in Cincinnati under the leadership of Mr. John L. Shearer, a conspicuous educator there. That city has one of the finest and oldest industrial and scientific schools in this country—the Ohio Mechanics' Institute. It is devoted almost entirely to the mechanic arts and allied sciences. It is especially adapted to the education of young men who are neither cursed nor blessed education of young men who are neither cursed nor blessed with fortune. Recently it has come into a noble building by the benefaction of a Cincinnati lady conspicuous for her good works, Mrs. Emery; so that to-day I think it is in advance of even the Franklin or Spring Garden Institutes, of Philadelphia, most reputable schools. This institute is arranging for an industrial museum, after the fashion of the South Kensington Museum, of London. As part of that museum, these models are needed. What it is that is wanted is best told in models are needed. What it is that is wanted is best told in a resolution which I shall introduce to-day. Senator Pome-RENE will introduce a similar resolution in the Senate to-mor-row; at least, I am to make that request of him. Allow me to read the resolution. It is brief and is designed to allow all such schools to share in these models. I read:

House joint resolution 198, to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to make temporary loans of models, deposited with Patent Office as exhibits and not as a part of the record, to certain educational institutions located in the continental United States.

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion, to loan to educational institutions devoted chiefly to the mechanic and industrial arts and related sciences located within the continental United States such of the models deposited and stored within the Patent Office of the United States, as exhibits only and not as part of the record of any patent issued or pending, for temporary use by such institution, without charge to the Government, in buildings secure against fire or other ordinary hazard, and on such terms as to time of loan and conditions of holding as may be fixed by said Commissioner of Patents.

The Patent Department of the Government is agreeably disposed to this resolution.

I am obliged to the House. [Applause.]

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11338).

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. Hay in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the House adjourned last evening the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] had offered an amendment.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I wish to amend that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to amend his amendment.

Mr. DIES rose

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DIES. I wish to make an inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. DIES. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, what is the parliamentary status of an amendment to the pending bill which was stricken out on a point of order yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] was not the same amendment as was stricken out on a point of order. Some change was made in it, and therefore it was not the same amendment as was stricken out on the point of order.

Mr. DIES. Is that amendment open to discussion—the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut? I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, somewhat similar to the one stricken out on a point of order, is now open to discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The gentleman from Connecticut offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

STAFFORD] offered a substitute amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the committee rose last evening, I believe I had the floor. Am I entitled to recognition?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor on his substitute. Mr. STAFFORD. Am I entitled to proceed? I have no objection to the new amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut being offered for information.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. I understood I had the gentleman's permission.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut as a substitute for his amendment will be read by the Clerk for information.

Mr. MANN. It was an amendment to his amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Very well.
Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to its being read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the figures "$134,500," where they appear in the amendment and insert at the end of the paragraph the following: "To enable the Postmaster General to carry out the provisions of the above, $134,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Staf-

FORD] is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] as amended read for the information of the committee, and also the substitute that I had offered read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment, without objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Reilly amendment as amended: On page 17 strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That hereafter the Postmaster General shall have authority to employ acting employees in place of all employees or substitutes hereinafter mentioned who are injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the employee's salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and to enable the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives, for the benefit of wife, children, or dependent relatives of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Railway Mail Scrvice, post-office inspector, letter carrier in the City Delivery Service, rural letter carrier, post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $134,500. *Procided, That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence. To enable the Postmaster General to carry out the provisions of the above, $134,500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the Clerk has it

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the Clerk has it correctly, but he did not read the amendment quite correctly. He should have read: "The Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

But not exceeding 12 months additional, and the Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk also read the substitute that I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Staffered] FORD].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 13, insert as a substitute for the pending amendment the following:

"That any employee of the Postal Service who is disabled by accidental injury not due to his own negligence, received while performing his official duties, may be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of his disability, but not for more than one year, and then at half pay for the further period of disability, if any, but not exceeding one year additional; and if he dies within a year as a result of the injury, leaving a widow, or children under 16 years of age, such widow and children shall be entitled to receive, in such portions as the Postmaster General may decide, the sum of $2,000; and in the event that no such widow and children survive him and he leaves dependent parents or dependent brothers or sisters, then such parents, brothers, and sisters, shall be entitled to receive, in such portions as the Postmaster General may decide, the sum of $1,000; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to employ substitutes in place of such injured employees while absent during such period of disability, for which purpose $150,000 is appropriated."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the objections that I have to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly], which amendment is substantially the provision carried on page 28, are the following:

Under his amendment provision is made for 90,000 employees, but no provision is made for 2,000 of the most meritorious men in the service, namely, the 1,400 laborers who are employed at salaries ranging from $720 to $840; for the chauffeurs who are employed in the operation of Government automobile delivery wagons, and for the mechanics connected with the service.

Another very pointed objection that I have to this amendment is that the proviso seeks to limit the compensation to those who are not injured by reason of their own negligence, but there is no provision whatsoever in the amendment offered that will prevent the payment of $2,000 to the legal representatives of any employee who may die as the result of his own negligence.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. Not until I have stated my objections to the amendment. Thirdly, the provision as presented would authorize the payment of $2,000 to legal representatives for the benefit of wife, children, and dependent relatives, leaving it to the local court or the legal representatives, perchance, to determine the portions in which this money shall be paid, or who shall be considered dependent relatives; whereas in the substitute that I have offered, which is framed along the lines of the best thought of workmen's compensation acts, there is no such uncertainty. As we are here adopting a rule that should be followed in other branches of the service, I claim that this House should not vote $2,000 haphazard to some legal representative, but that they should vote this money directly to the widow, to the minor children, if there are any, under 16 years of age; or $1,000, if there is no widow and if there are no minor children, to the dependent parents or dependent brothers or sisters.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to my colleague.
Mr. LENROOT. Is it not also true that under the original phraseology the money must be paid to the legal representatives, whether there are any dependents or not?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the case in the original phrase The amendment that has been proposed is only a hotchpot of a provision that we carried for years, applying only to the railway mail clerks. But, if we are going to establish a general policy

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not now, but I will as soon as I have explained this. If we are going to establish a general policy toward 90,000 postal employees, then I say this money should also extend to those most deserving. The substitute I have framed is copied from the workmen's compensation acts of some of the States, containing the latest thought on this subject. It provides that the $2,000 shall go first to the widow or minor children under 16 years of age, to be apportioned in amounts according to the discretion of the Postmaster General. That will prevent any expenses of administration being deducted from this $2.000. The money will be parceled out directly to the widow and the minor children. Perchance an employee may die leaving no widow, but leaving a grown son, who may be 25 years of age, and able to earn his own livelihood. Yet the Government would pursue the policy under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut of paying $2,000 to the legal representatives for his benefit. There is no workmen's compensation act that I have been able to find that would justify the Government, or any private establishment, paying Government is going into this policy of paying gratuities to those who are not dependent, as in the case I have instanced, then let us vote haphazardly these amounts of money without any restriction whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman allow me-

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated to the gentleman that I would be glad to yield to him in a moment after I had explained this. There is no reason for reserving an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. STAFFORD. There is this other difference in the substitute I have offered, that if there is no widow and no minor children under 16 years of age, then the Government is not obligated to pay any money whatever unless there is a dependent parent or dependent parents or a dependent brother or sister. Then the amount is $1,000. It is hard to conceive why we should pay $2,000 to an extremely old, dependent parent, and, in my opinion, $1,000 would be adequate to pay to a dependent parent or a dependent brother or sister; whereas in the omnibus provision that has been suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY], if there happened to be a dependent relative, no matter how far removed the lineage might be, the Government would be obligated to pay $2,000 to the legal representatives, maybe for a dependent aunt; whereas there is no State compensation act, so far as my investigation goes, which authorizes the payment of compensatory allowance beyond those degrees of relationship I have stated here. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAMILL. As I understand, the gentleman's main objection to the amendment as amended by the gentleman from Connecticut seems to be-

Mr. STAFFORD. I only yield for a question.
Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman's main objection seems to be that it is not as broad as the one which is now under discussion, Mr. STAFFORD. I have stated three objections.

Mr. HAMILL. But the main one is that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin has a wider scope?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mine favors all in the Postal Service-does not omit laborers, chauffeurs, and mechanics.

Mr. HAMILL. Why not allow the amendment which is narrower to go through and gather behind it the general pension bills now before the committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. I get the scope of the gentleman's inquiry We are enacting permanent legislation. and I will answer it. If this amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut is adopted, it means a law for the Postal Service for years and years to come. Provision has been made under the other amendment for every organized branch of the service, and for the poor laborers, who receive $720 and $840, who are subjected to more dangerous and hazardous work than the letter carrier or the rural carrier, no provision is made whatever. I say it is not fair legislation to exclude the unorganized, those who are subjected to more hazardous work, and favor those who have a powerful organization. While we are legislating extend it to all and do not play favorites. Extend it to those who have not an organization

If this amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut passes in this form, there will be no chance for years and years What justification can be shown for excluding the laborer, the chauffeur, and the mechanic, all engaged in hazardous employment, and include the letter carrier and the rural carrier, who is not subjected to hazardous employment? How can you justify paying $2,000 to the adult son of some man, able to support himself, just because perchance he is the son of a man employed in the Postal Service?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. He must be a dependent son. Mr. STAFFORD. No; the gentleman's amendment does not say that. It does not say dependent children. I challenge the gentleman to cite any workmen's compensation act where they pay the money to a child over 16 or 18 years of age unless he is dependent.

Mr. CALDER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin say that a child over 21 years of age could get this $2,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. He could under the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is an amendment favored by the great majority of the Post Office Committee on both sides. The gentleman's amendment which he has offered is favored only by himself. He sees fit to call ours a hodgepodge and is asking in his amendment compensation for chauffeurs. The fact is, 90 per cent of the men who drive the mail-wagon automobiles are under the employment of private contractors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not postal employees. I am referring to postal employees.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. If they are postal employees, they are classified as carriers; but the chauffeur is the employee of a private contractor. And yet the gentleman from Wisconsin is shouting for economy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? He has some

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut is to vest the Postmaster General with power to give compensation to postal employees injured in the performance of duty, and to authorize him in cases where death results from injuries incurred in line of duty to pay the sum of $2,000 to those depending on the employee for support. The amendment provides that in the event of injury the Postmaster General can allow the employee, first, a leave of absence for one year with full pay, and secondly, on the expiration of this first period, an additional leave of absence for another year, if necessary, during which second year the employee shall receive 50 per cent of pay. The authority to make payment of $2,000 to the legal representative of the deceased employee exists only where death occurs within one year from the date of injury.

This clause is predicated on the doctrine of employers' lia-

This clause is predicated on the doctrine of employers' liability. It is one of several meritorious measures calling for fair treatment on the part of the Government toward its civil servants which in recent years have been introduced in Congress.

I myself for the past few sessions have introduced a similar measure. My measure forms a part—the part dealing with disability—of a civil-pension retirement bill which I hope to have this House and the Senate consider and pass before the close of the present session.

My measure providing compensation in case of disability differs somewhat in details from the one now before us, but rests upon the same general principle and is supported by the same solid reasons.

But it is creditable to the committee that they have reported this clause, and I fervently favor and support it. I can not, as a matter of fact, entertain the thought that anyone could be opposed to it, at least not after finding out what is its purport and becoming informed of the situation to which it is intended to apply. The design of this section is to afford to the postal clerks and letter carriers of the country some encouragement and recompense to cheer them on in the devoted performance of their arduous daily tasks.

The postal clerk and the letter carrier are working always in constant peril of life and limb. I know of a letter carrier in my own home city, Jersey City, who alighted from an electric car carrying a heavy quantity of mail. As he passed in the rear of the car on which he had been riding and was proceeding across the other set of tracks, he was unable to see a car coming in the opposite direction, and as a result was struck by it and killed. His next of kin obtained no compensation from the Government.

I was informed of another instance where a letter carrier slipped on a sidewalk made dangerous by frost and sleet and broke his kneecap. This man was incapacitated for the remainder of his life, yet not a single dollar did the Government contribute to aid him in his unequal struggle for a living.

And every city has its own list of honor bearing the names of men killed or injured in the performance of their toilsome tasks to whom or to whose dependent families or relatives the Government has never awarded any compensation.

With the parcel-post feature added to the activities of our post offices, these working conditions are bound to grow more dangerous. Clerks and carriers will be and are now subjected to continual risk of death or bodily injury, and ordinary justice voices the demand that the Government requite them.

The employers' liability laws of the States compel the payment of compensation in the event of a workingman's death or disability. The three stock defenses known as the assumption of the risks of the business, the fellow-servant rule, and the doctrine of contributory negligence have been abolished from the statute books. Even under the old common law, rigorous and antiquated though it is, in its application to modern industrial conditions did not altogether deprive the employee of the right of recovery; but the Government employee in the Postal Service has not even the poor and inadequate protection given to a private employee under the common law.

It is high time the Government heeded the demands of fairness and equity and took a more enlightened view of its relations to its public servants in the minor governmental positions. If it will not be, as it should be, a model employer, it ought, at any rate, to be an honest employer. The people demand this, at least, as a minimum, and we ought to grant no less.

at least, as a minimum, and we ought to grant no less.

The gentleman from Wisconsin offers in place of this amendment a substitute which increases the classes of employees to which this relief would apply, and calls upon us to pass it.

But, Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty with the proposal offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is that although seemingly tender in its purposes it is calculated to cause its own undoing by broadening the scope of this piece of remedial legislation beyond reasonable limits, and thus he does more to secure the defeat of the whole proposition than the most pronounced opponent on the floor of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When this provision was pending last night it was within my power to reserve a point of order, but I did not do so because I am in entire sympathy with the proposition. If I can not secure the adoption of my amendment, I intend to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that the gentleman was deliberately hostile, and I am not saying it now. I even go so far as to say that I would like to see the amendment so drawn that instead of taking in postal employees it would extend to every classified employee of the Government. But we can not get that at this time. Hence, I say this substitute will bring about its own rejection by its broadness. We must get something feasible through at this time. This amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut includes all the men in one class of hazardous employment and asks that they be taken care of now. It embodies a proposition which has been in the minds of legislators for years. Other classes of Government employees can be taken care of in a scientific way, and I hope in a short time under the general pension bills now pending before Congress and under my own pension bill in particular.

But these letter carriers, postal clerks, and other civil employees comprised within the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut are performing work in which they are subjected to constant hazards and dangers, and it is only fair that in legislating on a bill for postal purposes we should adopt it as meeting the situation properly and reject the substitute as being inappropriate, [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the proposition offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] is faulty and is somewhat improved by the proposition offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford]. I have a proposition drawn very carefully by himself which I think improves the proposition drawn by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I had this matter up before the committee, and I offered several drafts in lieu of the one adopted in committee, and I have given the matter careful consideration. The first point of difference between the proposition offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] and the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] is that the first provides for compensation to certain specified employees in the Post Office Department, but omits others because they are not mentioned. and it falls to state definitely and specifically that the Gov-ernment is liable only where the accident or injury occurs by reason of the employment of the person injured, that it occurred in the line of duty. Next, it provides that the sum to be paid-$2,000-shall be paid to the legal representatives of the deceased, whether the deceased had any persons dependent on him or not. Clearly that is unwarranted, because if a person dies, having no dependent relatives, the Government ought not to pay anything. The gentleman from Wisconsin has limited the compensation to dependent sisters, brothers, wife, and children, but my proposition, which I have drawn, includes other dependent relatives. I want Members to bear that in mind. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] made that point when we had the matter under consideration in committee, that we ought to include dependent persons who might not be relatives. For instance, there might be an adopted child dependent upon its adopted parent, and equity and justice would require the same treatment. That is the one difference between the draft of the amendment that I have completed and the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment that is pending, if I understand it, and I think I do, provides that there shall be a compensation of $2,000 in case of injury, whether there be any relation of cause and effect between the employment and the injury or not. All that is required to be proven is that the injury occurred coincidentally in point of time with the employment, and not that it was the result of the employment. Manifestly it is unreasonable to require the Government to pay any such claim where there is no relation of cause and effect between the injury and the employment.

With reference to the question of administration, the Department of Commerce and the Navy Department have employees that receive compensation in case of li,jury, and compensation is also paid in case of death which occurred in the line of duty or employment. The dependent relatives are paid under that law, and not the legal representatives. Where legal representatives are required it is taking so much money out of the estate. The Postmaster General and the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Navy can just as well pay the money to the designated relatives as to pay the money to a legal representative appointed by a probate court. The appointment of a legal representative involves the administration of the estate, and these laborers and common clerks probably have no other estate, so that we will be taxing them unnecessarily for the appointment of an administrator. I have talked with the Secretary of Commerce to-day over the telephone, and I talked with the Department of the Navy, where they administer this compensation act with reference to navy-yard employees, and both of these officials say that the provision for a legal representative is not necessary; that they are having no difficulty in administering the law by paying the money directly to the dependent relatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, we may as well provide for all postal employees, and the draft that I have completed does that. So does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford], and there can be no reason for going piecemeal at this matter. The Postmaster General in 1912 recommended substantially this same law. He put it in so many words in his report, and I prepared and introduced a bill two years ago substantially like the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, with the exception that the gentleman from Wisconsin has a limitation upon the amount to be paid to relatives of $1,000 instead of $2,000.

Now, as to the wisdom of the limitation I beg to differ. It seems to me that $2,000 is small enough. From the conversa-tions I have had with the department officials who administered the workmen's compensation as to Government employees, they all think that the compensation here provided would be reasonable and not excessive. I would like to have this proposition of mine read in my time by the Clerk. I presume it is an amendment in the third degree, and therefore not in order; but I ask to have it read for the information of the House in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to have the amendment read for the information of the House. The Clerk will read.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. As soon as this is read. Let it be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line —, insert the following:

"Any employee of the Postal Service who is disabled by accidental injury, not due to his own negligence, received while performing his official duties may be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of his disability, but not more than one year, and then at half pay for the further period of disability, if any, but not exceeding one year additional; and if he dies within a year as a result of the injury, leaving a widow or children under 16 years of age, or dependent parents, or other dependent persons, such widow, children, dependent parents, and other dependent persons shall be entitled to receive, in such portions as the Postmaster General may decide, the sum of $2,000."

Mr. STEENERSON. Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Can the gentleman state how many deaths occurred last year in this service which would be entitled to the compensation

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I could not; but I am advised by the department that is administering the workmen's compensation that there are not many, and I do not think there would be many in the Postal Service. In my judgment and observation, there are not many killed or injured except in the hazardous employment of railway-mail clerks. You will observe that this dispenses with an administrator, a useless and unnecessary expense for most of these estates, and we pay not only to the dependent children, parents, brothers, and sisters provided for in the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, but also to other dependent persons, and I have said there might be cases where other dependent persons would be as much entitled to it, like adopted children, as natural children; and for that reason I submit this is a carefully prepared proposition, and I hope that you will see fit to adopt it.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes: I vield.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman from Minnesota or the gentleman from Wisconsin or the gentleman from Connecticut be willing to change the phraseology of their amendment which reads "not due to their own negligence" so as to read "not due to willful negligence"?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I would be perfectly willing to do

Mr. WALSH. Then I would ask to have the amendment changed so as to conform to that.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes

Mr. DECKER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this fact and ask whether he has ever thought of the proposition, that as a legal proposition and as a proposition of ordinary interpretation of language there is no such thing as "willnegligence. Negligence is failure to exercise ordinary care that an ordinary prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman's definition is probably correct.

Mr. DECKER. Whereas willful negligence by all law writers and other writers is inconsistent. Willful means intentional.

Mr. STEENERSON. I appreciate the gentleman has a very analytical legal mind, and I see the distinction.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this debate is not unusual for the members of the Post Office Committee. Many years ago this matter was taken up, at first for the benefit of the railway postal clerks. The language which is brought by the committee in the bill which is before the House was supposed to be what would be the best generally when the railway postal clerk was either killed or injured. Now gentlemen come here with varying propositions, and I may say to them that practically all of this legislation is patterned after—I do not mean strictly, but patterned after-Lord Campbell's act. I have listened to the debate here, in the committee, and elsewhere, and I find that nearly every Member who takes up this question has the law of his own State in mind.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman think it is anything wrong to copy after the Lord?

Mr. FINLEY. I am afraid some of my friends over there do not do that. So that Members come here with the idea that the law in their particular State is the correct law. we must provide a law-and we have provided heretofore for railway postal clerks injured or killed-that will suit the entire country, and I say to these gentlemen who pattern after the laws of the various States that the average amendment that is brought here to change the language as we now have it would simply make the Post Office Department, so to speak, a probate court, a court of law to pass on facts, and all of that.

This matter has been debated for many years in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and we decided, and I think correctly and wisely decided, that to pay the money to the legal representative of the injured person, or the person who lost his life in the service, was about the fairest and best thing that could be done in the premises. Now, we can not follow the law of Missouri, or Wisconsin, or Kansas necessarily. But we must make one law that will fit all cases, and that is what the committee has done. So I submit, Mr. Chairman, that here is only an attempt to enlarge the scope of benefit-to extend the benefits that heretofore applied to railway mail clerks to other employees mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY]. There are those who would have it extend to every person in the service. Well, I am not disputing the rightfulness of that proposition, but I say that this is a postal matter, and we are dealing with postal employees, and when we have succeeded in doing that work we have done our duty in the premises.

Mr. LLOYD. Under the Reilly provision, how much is there paid to the widow when there is a widow and children?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say that under the Reilly proposition, and under the law as it has been heretofore, the money is paid to the legal representatives. Each of the employees has a domicile or legal residence, and the money is distributed under the law of the jurisdiction where the party had his residence.

Mr. LLOYD. Then, if in the State the money would go to the widow, under this provision it would go to the widow?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. And if in a State it went to the widow and children in equal parts, then under this provision it would go to the widow and children in equal parts, depending on the law of the State?

Mr. FINLEY. That is the right view of it.

Mr. LLOYD. And the provision does not show how much goes to the wife or children or dependent relatives?

Mr. FINLEY. But it states how much shall go to the representative of the person killed.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether he would deprive an injured employee from compensation if an accident happened which to him was un-foreseen, and which by the authorities was claimed should have been foreseen by him, and was therefore due to his negliMr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the term "negligence" is one of broad significance, and it depends upon the facts and circumstances in each particular case. There has been no complaint heretofore that the Post Office Department has improperly or in any technical way administered this law, and I may say there will be none in the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly. Mr. STAFFORD. Take a supposititious case, that of a postal clerk dying and leaving a widow and children who are above 16 years, or above 18 or 21 years of age; would it be distributed to the widow or the widow and children under the law of distribution in the State, so that the money would not go exclusively to the widow, as it should do?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman this, that this law is presumably made to fit cases happening generally throughout the country, and there is no intention here in the Reilly amendment to discriminate against anybody.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may not be any intention, but it

Mr. FINLEY. Well, that is a matter of opinion. I do not think so.

Mr. LOGUE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.
Mr. LOGUE. The understanding is, therefore, to let the law of the place of domicile control?

Mr. FINLEY. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. LOGUE. So, in Pennsylvania it would be one-third absolutely to the widow and the rest for distribution to the chil-You consider the law of the State in which the employee lives is the best one to determine it?

Mr. FINLEY. I think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can you justify paying $2,000 at the rate of one-third to the widow and two-thirds to children who are of age, as it would be under the law of Pennsylvania, as stated by the gentleman?

Mr. LOGUE. My understanding was that the State passing the intestate law would do the wisest thing under the cir-

Mr. FINLEY. It would govern the law of descent and distribution. That is my view. I do not see how any other view can prevail here and give satisfaction to the country. So that the law of South Carolina, the law of Pennsylvania, the law of Wisconsin and the other States should govern, and it does govern. I will say to the gentleman I think there were only x killed last year. There were quite a r Mr. STAFFORD. There were nine killed. There were quite a number injured.

Mr. FINLEY. Nine. Mr. LLOYD. Is not this more in the nature of an insurance than anything else? Is it not true that in all insurance mat-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that in all matters of insurance the insured individual controls the destination of his own policy, and the policy usually provides that the payment shall go to the wife?

Mr. FINLEY. In the matter of accident and health insurance I believe he always controls, and there is no law in any State which in any way interferes with his disposition of the funds arising on account of an accident.

Mr. LLOYD. Does not the gentleman think that in a case like this, if the Government is going to make a gratuity, it ought to provide that the money should go to the man's widow in the event of his death?

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that that brings up the question we started out with, namely, What is the best policy, generally speaking? What general law will best suit the needs of the whole country? I say that in my opinion, and in the opinion of the committee, the laws of the various States of the Union should be left to govern the disposition of this fund.

Mr. LLOYD. The misfortune is that the law of the States is not made with reference to this fund. The law of the States is made with reference to the personal estate which the indi-'dual possessed at the time of his death, and he certainly 's not possess this at the time of his death.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that; but if you followed out the laws of the various States you would have to make 48 different provisions here, and you can not do that.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FINLEY. I do. Mr. LOGUE. The provision that it shall go to the personal representative, with the proviso exempting it from use for the payment of debts, means to practically make it a family fund and permit the courts of the decedent's domicile to determine the relative rights, either in accordance with intestate law or in accordance with the peculiar circumstances that may have arisen, because it might be that a wife had deserted or it might be that the husband and wife were not living together. Other circumstances might arise, and instead of the department being brought into those details the intention is to let the facts be ascertained and determined by the courts of the State in which the man resided.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman means to have the question thrashed out in the various States?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes; to put it in the proper channel.
Mr. FINLEY. Yes. I believe there were 9 postal clerks killed last year and 150 or 175 injured—a relatively small number. This is attributable largely to the fact that we are beginning to use more and more steel cars in the Postal Service.

Now, as to the other employees mentioned here, I know of very few instances—I can not recall more than half a dozen where parties have been killed or injured in the discharge of their duties as postal employees aside from railway mail clerks. They are very few, and I may say that it will be found that in the administration of this proposed amendment, if it becomes a law, very few cases will arise. Why, there are no such risks elsewhere as those which the railway postal clerk takes; but inasmuch as there are a few cases arising, they should all be placed upon the same plane and receive the same benefits in the case of accident or death. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] will prevail, and I hope the amendments and substitutes to that amendment will be voted down. They should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the present consideration of this matter illustrates very forcibly the truth that we ought not to place legislation of this sort upon an appropriation bill.

Here is a piece of legislation of most serious import tacked on to an appropriation bill. Important amendments are under consideration, and neither myself nor any other gentleman on the floor of this House knows the contents of a single amendment.

It is proposed in this appropriation bill to tax the people of the United States to create insurance for certain employees of the Government. This is not a new question. This is only a bite out of a very large question which is pending to-day before the Congress in some of its committees. I happen to be a member of the committee known as the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] a moment ago stated correctly that he has a measure pending before that committee to pension all of the civil-service employees of the United States Government.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DIES. I have no time. I decline to yield. There are almost 400,000 civil-service employees of the Government who are knocking to-day and every day at the door of the Treasury to be pensioned by the Government. The President before this one recommended that they be pensioned. Almost any day now the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service are likely to bring out a bill here to pension the 400,000 civil-service employees of the Government; and if you pass this bill, then there is no reason why they should not be pensioned. But why should you take money from the taxpayers of the country and give it to the lucky one who has a job? You are proposing here to take care of rural carriers and city carriers and assistant postmasters, some 90,000, I believe.

Mr. MADDEN. No; not assistant postmasters.

Mr. DIES. I do not know what is in the amendment. It was read in confusion. I doubt if its author could repeat a line that is in it. A number of employees of the Post Office Department are to be provided for out of the taxes of the people, 90,000 of them, some gentleman has stated. Why should not the other 400,000 civil-service employees be provided for as well? Here are 400,000 jobs in the Government. If placed up at auction, they would bring many millions of dollars. Ten men can be found who would be glad to fill each of these jobs as well as they are being filled now. But so anxious are we to make politics by appropriation, so anxious are we to please the rural carriers and the city carriers, and so indifferent are the people who pay the taxes of the country that we are about to tax the people to pension the fortunate officeholders.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my friend yield to me for a question? Mr. DIES. I will yield, Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman think it wise to put these jobs up at auction?

Mr. DIES. No; I would not put them up at auction; but I mean to illustrate the point that the officeholders are the fortunate ones and the taxpayers are the unfortunate ones. should the taxpayers of this country pension the lucky officeholders of the country? If you give a gratuity to the 400,000 civil-service employees of the Government, why should you not give it to the common soldiers in the Army and to the common sailors in the Navy, to your postmasters, to your secretaries, and to all of officialdom in this country?

Mr. HAMILL. Will the g Mr. DIES. Make it brief. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMILL. If a pension is right, does the mere fact that the hardness of industrial conditions makes it imperative that 10 men should bid for each position make a pension unjust?

Mr. DIES. Oh, I do not believe in a pension system for civil employees of the Government. I will tell you what we are doing. We are making new jobs in this Government every day. You are reaching out the long arm of the Federal Government to take over every function of the State, making new berths for officeholders every day, and at the same time you are providing new burdens for the people in order to make soft places for the officeholders of the Government. You may pass this bill and thereby get the rural carriers or the city carriers in your districts to become your political partisans; you may pass this bill, and the man in the Government employ, who eats out of the hand of the Government, may vote for you and work for you, but if the people who pay the taxes ever wake up in this Republic they will put the brand of Cain on the forehead of every Representative who votes to tax the people in order to pension the officeholder. It is a scramble to get a in order to pension the officeholder. It is a scramble to get a job, and, after it is gotten, a scramble for a pension for the job holder. Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why the lucky one should be pensioned. Here are two brothers. They both stand a civil-service examination. They have equal educations. One is lucky enough to get a job in the Government. The other is compelled to go out and farm or to be a bank clerk or to work in some other ordinary private occupation. The one who has the Government job gets $1,200 a year. The one who is a clerk or telephone operator gets $50 a month. If the one in private life neglects those ordinary precautions of economy and fragality and good down to allow the state of the frugality and goes down to old age without a competency it is his own lookout. Do you think it is right that the one who is unsuccessful and does not get the Government job should be taxed to pension his lucky competitor?

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Does not the gentleman recognize the vast army of Government employees who are underpaid—

Mr. DIES. I recognize the fact that 90 per cent of the Government jobs, if vacant to-day, would have 100 applicants for each one of them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COX. Make it 100 per cent.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Does not the gentleman recognize that there has been no revision in the salaries of Government employees for 50 years?

Mr. DIES. Oh, no; promotion goes on. The Government is all the time raising and increasing salaries. You have a little You have a little post office in your district that pays $1,200 a year, and the residents of your district will about cut a man's head off in the scramble to get at it. Let a Government job be opened paying $1,200 a year and every man knows that private employment will pay $600 for the same work, but yet you advertise in your district that there is a $1,200 job open and you will have a thousand applicants for it

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr, O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman says that men are lucky who get Government jobs.

Mr. DIES. I say they think they are lucky. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I say that many a man who gets a Government job is unlucky.

Mr. DIES. Yes; and many a man that comes here to Congress is the most unlucky man in the world. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARTER. But he stays here. Mr. DIES. I say it is true that public employment pays twice as much as private employment.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have in mind one incident. I have a man in my district who has been a Government employee in the Internal-Revenue Service, and when he entered he supposed he was getting a good job.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield to me? I do not like to leave a sentence unfinished.

Mr. DIES. I will.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. As I was about to say, this man has been a Government employee for 19 years, and this generous Government of ours has raised his pay $100 during that 19

Mr. DIES. Yes; and if they ever get after your man, he will have a petition with a thousand names on it asking you to help him to hold it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. DIES, I will.
Mr. DYER. I want to say that I have in mind the case of a letter carrier in my city who was injured, through no fault of his, in having a heavy mail sack thrown on him, and by reason of that injury he has been paralyzed for several years, unable o earn a livelihood.

Mr. DIES. Yes; and I have in mind farmers that are half dead working to pay the taxes of the officeholders of this country, and I think somebody in an appropriation bill ought to find some way of sympathizing with the men who work to pay the taxes to sustain and pay the salaries of the officeholders of the Government.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I have only a short time, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman spoke about public salaries being higher than private compensation.

Mr. DIE3. Will the gentleman ask his question?

Mr. HAMILL. Does not the gentleman know that private employers throughout the country are obeying the voice of righteousness and now pensioning their private employees, while the Government sticks in the old rut?

Mr. DIES. I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, the whole truth is this: Everybody wants a pension. There is a bill pending before the committee to pension the old mothers. Great God, what could appeal to you more than the aged and decrepit mothers of the land, those who gave birth to and sheltered and nurtured the Congressmen? There is another measure to pension the old school-teachers. Will you refuse to pension them after they have served faithfully and brought your children up well under a republican government? Will you turn them out into the snow and the rain? There is an age pension that takes in the old hod carrier, the farmer, the lawyer, and the old doctor.

After they have farmed and raised your bread and meat, will you suffer them to go to the poorhouse in their old age?

Mr. BARKLEY. How about the old maids? [Laughter.] Mr. DIES. Well, I will leave that to the gentleman from Kentucky to take care of. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does my colleague forget that all these people have lost their political pull?

Mr. DIES. I think, brethren, we are making the taxpayer the goat on every proposition. Every time a man gets tender-hearted and wants to appropriate money, he makes the taxpayer the goat upon which to saddle a new load. But the day will come when all Congressmen will be wanting a pension-the old Congressman sitting here voting pension after pension, who has sat here in his frightened condition receiving word from the carriers in his district and employees throughout the country, "We have got our eye on you," who sits and quakes and votes more pay and more pensions, will need a pension, because when the people wake up he will be out of a job.

Do you not think that perhaps the taxpayers some of these days will wake up, and that we will need a pension? to say this, Mr. Chairman, that we are proceeding rapidly along new lines of legislation in this Congress. It might be well to hark back to some of the old principles of government. Government is not constituted to support the people, but to be supported by the people. It is not the function of government to see that those who neglect to provide for old age shall have a home and a competence when old age comes. If you place Government employees on the pension roll, if you provide for them a sure protection against want in old age and insure them at the expense of the Government, you take away from those employees the incentive to economize, to be frugal, to be industrious, and to lay up something against an old age. [Applause.] farmer drives his team afield in the morning and he labors in the sun and in the rain and in the cold, and when he sows in the spring and harvests in the autumn it is with full knowledge of the fact that if he is a sluggard and a spendthrift his old age will be spent in penury and want. It is a wholesome thing that every man should stand on his own manhood and not depend upon the Government. [Applause.] You are going now to pension the 400,000 civil-service employees of the Government. Why make it civil service? Why not take in the whole army of Government employees and pension them, and then take in the old mothers and the old taxpayers and pension them, and when you do, it will be like the invalid pension bill. No man dare raise an objection to an increase of pension of an old soldier. He is almost ostracized here if he dare ask for five minutes' time in which to question the fact that we have gone from some few millions of dollars to $180,000,000 in war pensions. Place the 400,000 civil-service employees of the Government on the pension roll, and let each one of them contribute to newspapers and organs and lobbyists, and when a man introduces a bill to increase the pension of a Government employee no man will be found in the Congress who will dare to say that they are already getting enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a moment of time more than I think it is my duty to do. I do not believe in the doctrine of Socialism and paternalism that has become so deeply rooted in this country in recent years.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. For a brief question.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman tell us what he means by paternalism?

Oh, trying to make the Government the papa Mr. DIES. of all your constituents. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HAMILL rose.

Mr. DIES. Oh, I can not yield any further.

Mr. HAMILL. Just for a question.

Mr. DIES. Very well. Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman cease being side-splittingly witty and try to be commonsensibly logical and define his term of paternalism? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman's statement, I think, is pretty

Mr. DIES. I will take another try at it, anyway. It is this: The gentleman desires a broader term for paternalism than the effort of men to make the Government their father. I will give it to him. The gentleman has certain civil-service employees of the Government in his district, and I have some in mine. They love their jobs—I do not want to say how much they love them. They wanted them when they got them, and they got them through the use of every means at hand. I do not blame them. They are holding onto them like grim death to a dead nigger. They now want to go to the moving-picture shows; they want to go to Keith's vaudeville show; they want to buy Huyler's candy—we all do—but they do not want to give up the pleasures that are up and down the streets of the city in which they live to do that which every prudent man ought to do—save up a part of what they make against a rainy day. [Applause.] They do not want to depend upon themselves as your farmer constituents depend upon themselves, as your country merchants and lawyers and doctors depend upon themselves; but they want the Government to put a brace on them for injured joints, and hold them up and say to them, "Go to the moving-picture shows all you please, get a little jag at pay day if you feel like it, go to the show, eat red apples and spend your money, and do not be alarmed, for your father, the Government of the United States, will support you when you are no longer able to support your-selves." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HAMILL. Suppose the conditions which the gentleman pictures did not exist; suppose, for instance, that they are not going on a jag but are the most exemplary living men in the country, did not eat red apples, but toiled onerously day in out for insufficiently remunerative wages, then does the gentleman think it is paternalistic when they come looking for a pension to sustain them in their old age-

Mr. DIES. I can not yield further-

Mr. HAMILL. After they have wasted their blood and energy in their country's service?

Mr. DIES. But I can pick up an old farmer in the gentleman's State and district-

Mr. HAMILL. And I can pick one against the gentleman-Mr. DIES. I decline to yield further. There is no more underpaid class of people in the country than the common laborers who dig in your streets or work in your mines or till the broad acres of this country. I have worked for twelve and a half dollars a month. I have worked on a farm when I started at 4 o'clock in the morning and did not get through until dark. I dare say if I had been told that I need not save any money, but that the great Government, father of us all, would pay a pension to me later, I doubt if I would have bent my efforts and energy to saving a few dollars, and I doubt if I would have been a man of any means to-day. You can not do the employees of this country a greater injury than to make them pensioners upon the bounty of the taxpayers of the country. Tell them fairly and squarely, as you must tell the farmers of the country, that the Government will give you protection in your life, liberty, and property. Now, you have a fair, square chance in the race of life, go out and go to work and save what you can. If you do not get but $50 a month, save part of that, and if you get $100, save a greater part of it. This thing of giving a pension is a narcotic to Iull their energy, ambition, and manhood by a bounty from the Government, and it is not only a wrong to the taxpayers of the country but it is an injustice to the men who receive the pensions themselves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Texas in so far as what he may have said has any relation or bearing upon the amendment before the House. It is not a question of paternalism; it is not a question of charity; it is not a question of politics; it is not a question of fattening those already fat. It is a question of good business and decent humanity. I believe that the business of the country, and particularly the big business of the country, should pay for the accidental injuries and resultant hardships incident to that business. I fancy that nearly every Member of this House is in accord with that view. The business conscience of the Nation is in accord with it. There is no business in the country to-day with more numerous employees, with more complete ramifications throughout the country, than the post-office business. During recent years there have come to be many hazardous employments in the post-office business, and to my mind that business should be made to pay reasonably for accidents resulting from and incident to that business. I am told by gentlemen of very eloquent voices-and I believe it is true—that now the post office is on a paying basis. I think it has been true for the last three or four years. It seems reasonable to expect that the post office in the future will be also on a paying basis. Whether it is or not, Mr. Chairman, can any man say there is any reason why the Post Office Department should not pay for injuries to its workmen and employees just the same as any other business of a private nature in the United States pays for injuries to its workmen? What right has a Member of this House to advocate employers' liability measures here and grow eloquent in their support when he will not ask the Government of the United States to stand before the people of the country on the same basis as private business? [Applause.] If we are going to reform the business of the country in accordance with enlightened views of humanity and with common decency, let us begin here among ourselves.

There are some features of this pending amendment, Mr. Chairman, that seem to be criticized by some of the membership of the House. It does not seem to me, however, that these criticisms are merited by the amendment. Unlike the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], I read with great care and interest the amendment pending and the substitute. It seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] meets the situation, and meets it fairly. In the first place, criticism has been made because this provides that the amount shall be paid to the legal representative. Mr. Chairman, during the sixty and odd years the world has recognized the right of survival of action in cases of death universal consent has been given that the amount can best be paid to the legal representative. Nearly every State in the Union has such a law, patterned after the law England passed in 1846. Unless we have such a general provision as that, comprehensive and sweeping, we will be led into great and devious windings and difficulties in administering the law throughout the several States of the Union.

Then again, it has been said, Mr. Chairman, this amendment would permit adult children to participate and share in the benefits that may be secured. But that is not so. In no State in the Union is an adult child over the age of 21 years a dependent child. That child is independent. That child has dependent child. attained its majority and is independent, unless, perchance, it belongs to a class known as incompetents. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, however much we may agree or disagree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] in the discussion of pensions, this proposition we have before us now has nothing to do with that subject. It has no more relation to the question of pensions than the price of green cheese in Ireland has to the full moon. It is absolutely an immaterial matter. We are talking about the compensation of men injured in the service, and not talking about pensions.

Now, I want to present to the House the question of negligence and the charging up to the injured employee his own negligence. We have gotten away from that kind of a doctrine out in my State. We have passed a workman's compensation act, and we do not hold the dependents of a man responsible for his acts of negligence which may have been involved in an accident or may have been the ultimate or approximate cause of the accident. It made no difference to the people of my State when they were enacting the State workman's compensation law who was responsible for the accident.

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman what is the rule, then? Does the negligence of the complainant go in mitigation?

Mr. BRYAN. The law in my State does not allow negligence to go in mitigation. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. spoke of the Lord Campbell law. I understand that involves the doctrine of comparative negligence; that is, that the fact that the decedent has been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar recovery, but consideration shall be given to the degree of negligence attributable to the decedent and reduce the damages accordingly; but in this bill you do not even provide for comparative negligence.

Mr. MOON. Aside from the rule of your State, do you think it is fair in any case where the negligence of a plaintiff is not the approximate or producing cause, yet where it contributed in a measure to the accident, that that contribution of negligence on the part of the plaintiff ought not to be taken into consideration in computing the damage?

Mr. BRYAN. The compensation is given to help out the widow and dependent children, who are left either as a charge on the community or else left in such condition that they can not earn a livelihood. And what difference does it make whether the man who may have been injured was an especially nervous man, was distracted, or was in bad physical condition because of some incident at home; because he had been up all night with a sick child, or he may have been overworked and exhausted through long hours or something of that kind, and becomes a victim of some accident which results in his death? the difference, then, so far as society is concerned, whether he was negligent or not? We do not subscribe to the doctrine which tells the dependent widow with her little children in such case to go to the poorhouse because her husband was not careful. In my State we compel the particular industry involved to give $4,000 for the death of an individual; so I am certainly in favor of the limited relief that is proposed here, which is only $2.000. I think we do not go far enough in this bill, and I shall insert as a part of my remarks a portion of the statute of my own State governing this matter. This statute was enacted in response to a demand for social justice not to the unfortunate man who was killed, but to his surviving dependents. What has negligence of the deceased to do with this? I want further to suggest, in connection with the getting of these claims through the department, that there is always a great amount of red tape that is necessary, and of course proper. All of these provisions are generally interpreted against the employee, and I think the statute ought to be liberal, and we ought to be willing to make it liberal.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in connection with my remarks the statute of my own State on this matter and the brief correspondence I had with the department in regard to one case, which shows how different men will take different views of the same statute and affords ample reason for liberal provisions in this statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. The portion of my State statute referred to is as follows

Mr. BRYAN. The portion of my State statute referred to is as follows:

SEC. 5. Each workman who shall be injured whether upon the premises or at the plant or, he being in the course of his employment, away from the plant of his employer, or his family or dependents in case of death of the workman, shall receive out of the accident fund compensation in accordance with the following schedule, and, except as in this act otherwise provided, such payment shall be in lieu of any and all rights of action whatsoever against any person whomsoever be paid in all cases, not to exceed $75 in any case; and

(1) If the workman leaves a widow or invalid widower, a monthly payment of $20 shall be made throughout the life of the surviving spouse, to cease at the end of the month in which remarriage shall occur; and the surviving spouse, shall also receive $5 per month for excursion of the deceased under the age of 16 years at time of the exceeding of the deceased under the age of 16 years at time of the shall receive, once and for all, a lump sum equal to twelve times her monthly allowance, viz, the sum of $240, but the monthly payment for the child or children shall continue as before.

The children shall continue as before.

(3) If the workman leaves no widow, widower, or child under the age of 16 years, a monthly payment of $10 shall be made to each such child until such child shall reach the age of 16 years, but the total monthly payment shall not exceed $35, and any dedict shall be deducted proportionately among the beneficiaries.

(3) If the workman leaves no widow, widower, or child under the age of 16 years, but the total monthly payment shall continue to the state of the age of 16 years, the state of the age of 16 years, the state of the age of 16 years, the state of the state of the age of 16 years, the state of the state of the age of 16 years, the state of the st monthly payment under this paragraph shall in no case exceed $50. Upon remarriage the payments on account of a child or children shall continue as before to the child or children.

(d) When the total disability is only temporary, the schedule of payment contained in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of the foregoing subdivisions (b) shall apply so long as the total disability shall continue, increased 50 per cent for the first six months of such continuance, but in no case shall the increase operate to make the monthly payment exceed 60 per cent of the monthly wage (the dally wage multiplied by 26) the workman was receiving at the time of his injury. As soon as recovery is so complete that the present earning power of the workman, at any kind of work, is restored to that existing at the time of the occurrence of the injury the payments shall cease. If and so long as the present earning power is only partially restored the payments shall continue in the proportion which the new earning power shall bear to the old. No compensation shall be payable out of the accident fund unless the loss of earning power shall exceed 5 per cent.

(e) For every case of injury resulting in death or permanent total disability it shall be the duty of the department to forthwith notify the State treasurer, and he shall set apart out of the accident fund a sum of money for the case, to be known as the estimated lump value of the monthly payments provided for it, to be calculated upon the theory that a monthly payment of $20, to a person 30 years of age, is equal to a lump-sum payment, according to the expectancy of life as fixed by the American Mortality Table, of $4,000, but the total in no case to exceed the sum of $4,000. The State treasurer shall invest said sum at interest in the class of securities provided by law for the investment of the permanent school fund, and out of the same and its earnings shall be paid the monthly installments and any lump-sum payment then or thereafter arranged for the case. Any deficiency shall be made goo

For any permanent partial disability resulting from an injury, the workman shall receive compensation in a lump sum in an amount equal to the extent of the injury, to be decided in the first instance by the department, but not in any case to exceed the sum of $1,500. The loss of one major arm at or above the elbow shall be deemed the maximum permanent partial disability. Compensation for any other permanent partial disability shall be in the proportion which the extent of such disability shall bear to the said maximum. If the injured workman be under the age of 21 years and unmarried, the parents or parent shall also receive a lump-sum payment equal to 10 per cent of the amount awarded the minor workman.

(g) Should a further accident occur to a workman already receiving a monthly payment under this section for a temporary disability, or who has been previously the recipient of a lump-sum payment under this act, his future compensation shall be adjusted according to the other provisions of this section and with regard to the combined effect of his injuries and his past receipt of money under this act.

(h) If aggravation, diminution, or termination of disability takes place or be discovered after the rate of compensation shall have been established or compensation terminated in any case the department may, upon the application of the beneficiary or upon its own motion, readjust for future application the rate of compensation in accordance with the rules in this section provided for the same, or in a proper case terminate the payments.

(1) A husband or wife of an injured workman, living in a state of abandonment for more than one year at the time of the injury or subsequently, shall not be a beneficiary under this act.

(j) If a beneficiary shall reside or remove out of the State the department may, in its discretion, convert any monthly payments provided for such case into a immp-sum payment (not in any case to exceed $4,000) upon the theory, according to th

It was first emphatically turned down by the honorable Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor on the theory that the death was not the result of an accident. Post-mortem examination of Edward Edmonds, at Bremerton, Wash., February 14, 1913, showed the following: A diffuse carcinoma of the right lung; the mediastinal and retroperitoneal glands were infiltrated; the costal pieura and diaphragm showed numerous small nodules; the lung was free, except a small area at apex, where it was firmly adherent; the plural cavity was filled with bloody serum. The left lung was edematous, otherwise normal; left pleura, heart, and abdominal viscera were normal, except a few small cancer nodules in the liver. No tubercular process found.

Hon. Josephus Daniels,

Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Re claim of Mrs. Edward Edmonds for compensation for the death of her husband, Edward Edmonds, at Puget Sound Naval Station.

I am well acquainted with the claimant, Mrs. Edmonds, and was well acquainted with her husband, Edward Edmonds, before his death. I am also well acquainted with Dr. E. J. Taggart, whose certificate has been filed with the papers in the above case. I heartily indorse the claim and believe, from representations made in the certificate of Dr. Taggart, that the claim is well founded and meritorious.

These people are reliable, and I know that Mrs. Edmonds is left in such condition as to make the claim a highly worthy one. While it is true that the deceased did not die as the result of any accident, perhaps, still the inhaling of dust particles from the boilers resulted in his death. It seems to be a very fine distinction for the department to draw between the falling of a heavy piece of metal and the inhaling of the dust. It seems to me that a reasonable interpretation would make the direct cause of the accident so simple in either case as to make it come under the statute.

I hope the department will make a liberal interpretation, if need be, in this case and grant the relief asked for.

Very truly, yours,

Congressman at Large, State of Washington.

Dear Madam: Referring to your letter of March 6, 1913, in regard to your claim for compensation under the Government liability act of May 30, 1908, because of disease contracted by your husband, Edward Edmonds, while employed as a boiler maker at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, which resulted in his death, the records of the department show that this claim has been disallowed by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who was charged with the administration of the act referred to. The department is without jurisdiction in the matter.

of the act of March 3, 1913, creating a Department of Labor provides that the Government liability act will hereafter be administered by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics of said department, and if it is desired to pursue the matter further, you should communicate directly with the Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: A claim was filed quite recently in the Department of Commerce and Labor for compensation for Mrs. Edward Edmonds because of the disability of her husband through disease contracted while in the Puget Sound Navy Yard.

In correspondence with the Navy Department, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, under date of March 17, informs me that the records of the department indicate that the claim has been disallowed, but it is the earnest desire of the claimant that the matter be examined into in the light of new information furnished, in the form of medical certificates and other data, which reveals a condition which I understand will entitle her to the compensation.

The point involved is that Edmonds, the deceased, did not suffer death by reason of an accident; but it is shown that his death was occasioned by the breathing into his lungs of dust particles while engaged in work on the boilers at the Puget Sound Navy Yard. I believe the facts are such as to warrant further investigation, and hope that you will take the matter up in such a way as to insure justice to this claimant.

Very truly, yours,

J. W. BRYAN, Congressman at Large, State of Washington.

Hon. F. D. Roosevelt,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY Dear Mr. Roosevelt: With further reference to the claim of Mrs. Edward Edmonds for compensation under Government liability act for the death of her husband in the Puget Sound Navy Yard:

I consider myself under obligations to make every effort to have this matter considered thoroughly, and I desire very much that the papers in this case be referred to the Commissioner of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor, in compliance with your suggestion of March 17.

In this case I understand there is a claim filed and several eartificates or affidavits of medical experts, together with a statement from the officers at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, all of which will have to be considered by the commissioner in connection with the matter.

Will you kindly inform me whether it will be possible for these papers to be transmitted to him for further consideration.

My Dear Mr. Bryan: I have your letter of March 13, 1913, in behalf of Mrs. Edward Edmonds, who has made claim for compensation under the Government liability act for the death of her husband from disease contracted while employed at the Puget Sound Navy Yard.

The records of the department indicate that this claim has been disallowed by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who, under the act referred to, was charged with its administration. This department has no jurisdiction in the matter of these claims, and all claims submitted to it must of necessity be referred to the officer who, under the Government Hability act, is given exclusive jurisdiction. In view of the provision in the act of March 3, 1913, creating a Department of Labor, that the Government Hability act will hereafter be administered by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics of said department, instead of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as heretofore, if it is desired to pursue the matter further, it should be taken up directly with the Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Hon. J. W. Bryan,

Dear Sir: I have your letter of the 19th instant, which has been referred to me by the Secretary of Labor, relative to reconsidering the case of Edward Edmonds, boiler maker. Puget Sound Navy Yard, whose claim for compensation on account of incapacity, beginning August 19, 1912, was disapproved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor on the ground that the incapacity was not the result of an accidental injury within the meaning of the compensation act. No additional information has been furnished since the claim was disapproved on January 18, and there is nothing in the record to show that the employee has died.

If Mrs. Edmonds has information regarding the case which here is died.

If Mrs. Edmonds has information regarding the case which has not been considered and will furnish the same to me, I shall be pleased to reconsider the action previously taken.

The compensation act of May 30, 1908, copy herewith, does not apply to disability caused by diseases, unless diseases are due to injuries that can be connected with an accident occurring at a definite time, and disability due to a gradual development does not come within the scope of the law. In the case of Mr. Edmonds, the record shows that disability was due to lung trouble, probably tubercular, caused by inhaling dust from time to time while working at the navy yard, and there is nothing to show that his condition was due to an accidental injury within the meaning of the compensation act.

Whether the compensation law should be amended so as to cover all eases of disability caused by the nature and conditions of employment in the Government service, regardless of the element of accident, is a question which I believe is worthy of the consideration of Congress.

Very truly, yoars,

G. W. W. HANGER, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,

Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In reference to the claims of Mrs. Edward Edmonds for injury to her husband, a boilermaker at Puget Sound Navy Yard, which injury resulted in his death on account of incapacity beginning August 19, 1912, and in reply to yours of March 31 as to the scope of the compensation act, I should like very much to have you to the first section of the act, wherein it is provided that whenever any person employed "is injured in the course of such employment, such employee shall be entitled to leave for one year thereafter" as compensation. Now, it is true that the subsequent sections refer to the injury as an accident, but certainly they do not repeal the first section of the act, which provides that when any person is injured he is to receive compensation. In this case I believe that a liberal interpretation ought to be made on behalf of the employee, and the mere fact that the injury would be properly defined as an accident happening at a particular moment of time, it seems to me, ought not to bar recovery. Nor do I believe that the statute warrants that rigid interpretation.

The whole tendency of present-day legislation along these lines is to cut out the negligence and misconduct features included within the proviso at the end of section I; and it seems to me but just that if this man was actually injured by inhaling these particles while working on the boilers his widow ought to be compensated.

All I ask is that this question of fact be determined by further investigation. The information I have is that the man was not suffering from any form of lung trouble, but that the inhaling of these particles was the sole and only reason of his malady and his death. This certainly was an injury received in the course of his duty, and the first section of this compensation act provides that when a man is so injured the compensation must follow.

There is no disposition upon my part to be captious about this or to put the matter up to you in

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Washington, D. C., April 2, 1918.

The honorable the Secretary of the Navy.

Sir: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 25, inclosing statements of Dr. A. U. Simpson and Dr. E. J. Taggart, in the case of Edward Edmonds, who died as the result of a disease contracted while employed at the Puget Sound Navy Yard; also of a letter addressed to you by Representative J. W. Bryan, requesting that the case be reconsidered, with a view to reversing the action heretofore taken in disapproving the claim for compensation filed by Mr. Edmonds before his death.

The record of the case shows that the employee's disability and death were caused by carcinoma of the right lung, probably due to inhaling dust while scaling and cleaning boilers. The employee had done this work on several ships and had complained of something wrong with his lungs at various times prior to the time he became incapacitated, which tends to show that his condition was due to the gradual development of a disease, excited by inhaling irritating dust for several years.

A disease contracted in the course of employment is not an injury within the meaning of the compensation act, as the act was intended to apply to injuries of an accidental nature and not to the effects of disease, although directly attributable to the conditions of employment, unless the element of accident is involved as in cases of disease caused by traumatism. Neither is disability referable to no definite accident or occurrence, though arising in the course of employment, involving a gradual weakening, wearing out, or breaking down of the employee, an injury within the meaning of the compensation act, and for this reason I regret to say that I have no authority to reverse the action previously taken, although the case appears to be a very meritorious one from an equitable standpoint. It does, however, raise the question as to the need of legislation to extend the benefits of compensation to all employees who are incapacitated as the result of conditions under which they are em juries received at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, I desire to say that I am preparing a bill for introduction in Congress remedying the defect which your predecessor has ruled to exist in the present statute. Personally I can not fail to conclude that the line drawn by the department as to the form of Injury necessary in order to justify an award is a distinction of interpretation and not of the statute. I believe this statute plainly awards the year's pay where death results from an injury, and I can not understand why the department is justified in ruling that such injury must be an accidental injury or one received from an accident in order to justify an award. I shall take the matter up, however, and present it the best I can under the situation, as the ruling of the department establishes it; and I shall attempt to have added to the first section such provision as shall make impossible for the present ruling to obtain.

I certainly agree with the tenor of the department's suggestion to the effect that such an interpretation is unjust and wrong in principle except as required and forced upon the department by the act itself. It is certainly rank injustice to allow damages where the man suffers instant death from explosion, and where he inhaies poisonous gases, for instance, and labors on for the Government, giving his best services until he is actually incapacitated and dies after continued loss of time and great expense of doctor's bills and medicine, in such case to deprive his widow of any relief whatever because, forsooth, the injury complained of was not the result of an accident.

I hope the department will excuse me for insisting that I do not believe this is the law at all. But under the ruling of the department, which I have not the slightest doubt was made in perfect good faith, the best remedy would be to add a clause in the statute making it impossible for the ruling to stand.

Thanking you for your courtesy and enlisting a further support in the matter, I remain,

Sincerely, yours,

My Dear Mr. Bryan: The case of Edward Edmonds, an employee of the Puget Sound Navy Yard, who died as the result of inhaling dust and whose claim for compensation under the act of May 30, 1908, was disapproved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for the reason that incapacity was not the result of an accidental injury, has been carefully reconsidered by this department. In my opinion the case is one that clearly comes within the scope of the compensation act and should be approved for payment.

As the matter was brought to my attention by your letter of March 19, I presume that you know the present address of Mrs. Edmonds. I am inclosing a blank form for making a formal claim for compensation, and it is requested that you forward the same to Mrs. Edmonds to be filled in and returned to this department.

Very truly, yours,

Louis F. Post,

Acting Secretary.

Louis F. Post, Acting Secretary.

This case illustrates the difference of viewpoint of Louis F. Post and his predecessors and shows that the Department of Labor is better equipped to consider all features of such cases than was the Department of Commerce and Labor. It also should serve as an argument for liberal provisions in the pending bill, and, I might add, is another evidence that the country is to be congratulated on the change of administration that occurred last March.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], but, as well said by a gentleman on the other side, his remarks are not pertinent to the issue before the House. This is simply a question of the Government paying to the legal representative of a deceased clerk or other employee. for the benefit of his widow, children, or dependent relatives, a sum of money, provided that he is injured in the line of his duty and his death or injury is not brought about by his own negli-

Now, I want to be very brief in the discussion of this matter. The term "legal representative" is used here because it is necessary, if this money be provided, that there shall be some person to whom it may go in the place of the deceased. He holds it in the capacity of legal representative, and, as was said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], to be distributed according to the laws of the State where the clerk

As to the phrase "for the benefit of the wife," nobody will question but that it ought to be for her benefit and for the benefit of the children. But "dependent relatives" are sup-posed to be out of order by some gentlemen here in the distribution of this fund. Now, a man may have as a dependent relative a mother or a crippled father or a crippled brother or sister, or he may have had some other relative who has been in his family for years and has been close to him and dependent upon him. We ought not to limit the descent too closely here. It ought to be left, in my judgment, in the hands of the legal representative, to be distributed according to the laws of the State, and the duty ought not to be imposed upon the Postmaster General of doing any more than turning over this fund to the legal representative, because otherwise, as was said, that would constitute him a court for the purpose of determining the rights on. WILLIAM B. WILSON.

Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Relative to the claim of Mrs. Edward Edonds for damages resulting from the death of her husband for ina man in the line of duty shall be so grossly negligent as to Bring about his own injury or death, the obligation, in my judgment, does not rest upon the Government to pay to his heirs any sum of money whatever. It ought to be paid only for a man who was discharging his duty and is guilty of no negligent conduct that brings about his own death.

This section has been carried in part in the bill for a long time, in reference to railway mail employees, whose duties are exceedingly hazardous, and we ought to be careful in extending the section to the other employees of the Government. it is to be extended-and it seems to be the opinion of the committee that it should be extended, and I agree with that conclusion—it ought to be done under the limitations provided in this section, and no man, or his estate, or his representative, ought to be paid when his injury or death is brought about by his own negligence. Nor ought we to look too closely to the person to whom it goes. The language "dependent relais about as near as we can reach it justly to all concerned, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

[Mr. DECKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two in connection with this. As I view it, it is merely in the line of affording a measure of compensation in connection with injuries received while in the performance of duty to a public employee, who, if in a private employment, could seek the redress that the law affords him and bring his action. As I view it, it is very careaffords him and bring his action. As I view it, it is very that fully worded, in providing that where the injury or death has occurred in the line of one's duty, without negligence upon his part, that the Government shall pay the sum therein stipulated. In our changed days, getting away as we are from the question of contributory negligence, getting away from the question of the negligence of the coemployee, which defeats the right of action, I feel that the committee are reasonably conservative when they add to this the proviso that it shall be without the negligence of the employee who is injured. It is only fair. It is only reasonable. If a private employee is injured, he has his right of action. The public servant has no such right of action. He could not maintain it against any superintendent and reach a responsible person. He could not maintain it against any coemployee and reach a person who could respond in damages. I feel therefore that we are only bringing ourselves in line and in touch with the changed and enlightened ideas of our own

Mr. COX. Have not the supreme courts of the various States of the Union held that railway postal employees are passengers, and that where they meet death without any negligence on their part the railway companies must respond in damages?

Mr. LOGUE. The majority of the supreme courts have so held, but at the same time it is only very recently that that proposition has been undertaken to be established generally.

Mr. COX. That has been the rule in our State for 15 years.

Mr. LOGUE. It has not in mine. That would be the question of an action being maintained against a railway company, which would throw upon the person or his legal representatives the burden of establishing negligence on the part of the railway company, and it might be impossible to do that. carries it over further, to the case of the man killed in the line of his duty, beyond any question of the maintenance of an action at law, and does not throw upon him the burden of establishing negligence on the part of the railway company. In the case that the gentleman has referred to there is that burden The law is broadening out in our day to get away from that in the workmen's compensation acts. I feel that in this legislation we are keeping within reasonably fair lines.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did not the Democratic convention at Baltimore recognize the duty of the Government to compensate its injured employees when it declared in its platform at Baltimore these words:

We also recommend the extension to all classes of civil-service employees the benefits of the provisions of the employers' liability law.

Mr. LOGUE. There is no question about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. So as Democrats we ought to vote for it, because it is in our national platform.

Mr. LOGUE. There is no doubt about it; and also on the question of broad policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly] to his own amendment previously offered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported, so we may know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "$134,500" where it appears the amendment and inserting at the end of the paragraph the following:

"To enable the Postmaster General to carry out the provisions of the above, $134,500." The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment just agreed to. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were 34 ayes and 60 noes. So the substitute was lost.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Connecticut if he will not agree to incorporate in his amendment the following-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order; all debate has closed.

Mr. CALDER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer the following amendment: That after the words "letter carrier" there be inserted in the amendment the words "post-office laborer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "letter carrier" insert "post-office laborer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CALDER) there were 49 ayes and 51 noes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. CALDER and Mr. MOON

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 52 ayes and 64 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentieman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

Dies) there were 97 ayes and 9 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I think as the amendment was reported it was to have come in after line 13. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut was to strike out the paragraph and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Connecticut offered the amendment to strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the amendment just agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, heat, fuel, telegraph, miscellaneous and office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway postal clerks, including rental of offices for division headquarters, and chief clerk, Railway Mail Service, in Washington, D. C., and rental of space for terminal railway post offices for the distribution of mails when the furnishing of space for such distribution can not under the Postal Laws and Regulations properly be required of railroad companies without additional compensation, and for equipment and miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to terminal railway post offices, $490,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the words "that the Postmaster General may hereafter make leases for terminal railway post offices for a term not exceeding I will say that this amendment is asked for by the 10 years." department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 18, after line 5, by inserting the following: "That the Postmaster General may hereafter make leases for terminal railway offices for a term not exceeding 10 years."

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty," so that it will read "20 years."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word twenty."

Mr. MOON. Why does the gentleman want 20 years?

Mr. STEENERSON. Because it will induce the department to make sufficient appropriation so that private owners will build suitable post offices in the smaller towns.

Mr. MOON. This amendment only applies to terminal stations. You might not need one for 20 years.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the same reason would apply, but I will withdraw my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota withdraws the amendment. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance of four assistant superintendents while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster General, not to exceed $3 per day, and for their necessary official expenses not covered by their per diem allowance, not exceeding $700; in all, $3,607.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 18, at the end of line 12, by adding the following:

"That hereafter all railway companies carrying mail shall furnish free transportation on the line of their respective roads to railway mail clerks, including transfer clerks, terminal railway post-office clerks, and clerks detailed to division superintendents' and chief clerks' offices."

Mr. MANN and Mr. STEENERSON reserved points of order. Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment speaks for itself. It is subject to a point of order. The department thinks this rule ought to be extended as provided in the amendment, and I think so, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order to the amendment that has been proposed, I want to say that this amendment has not the approval of the department. is in opposition to the artipass law carried in the railroad act we passed a few years ago. In fact, it not only wants the approval of the department, but it has the department's opposi-It is the same provision in the bill as section 3, on page 27.

Mr. MOON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin intend to make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but I want to explain the reasons why I make it.

Mr. MOON. There is so much in the bill that we want to get along with it, and the amendment is clearly subject to a point

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair when one is forced to make a point of order that he be granted five minutes in which to explain the position he feels obliged to

Mr. MOON. Very well; let the gentleman proceed. however, where a point of order is to be made, that the gentleman make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to consume unnecessary time. The amendment provides for extending free transportation to clerks who are employed in terminal railway offices, a similar employment to that of other post-office clerks who are engaged in the leading post offices. By reason of the establishment of the parcel post the department has recently established terminal post offices in connection with the various railway stations throughout the country. That service is governed by the Second Assistant Postmaster General. Terminal post-office clerks are assigned to those terminal postal stations, and it is now proposed to allow them free transportation on the railroads coming from their homes to these terminal post offices. If we are to extend free transportation to these post-office clerks employed in these terminal post offices, we should, to be consistent, extend it to all post-office clerks. And if to post-office clerks, why not to letter carriers and others in the service who could conveniently travel on the railroads in going to and from their homes? I have here a letter from Second Assistant Postmaster General Stewart, dated December 27, in response to a query that I put to him as to whether the department favored this amendment, and I am going to read it in my time. I shall read only the second paragraph, as that relates to this subject.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 27, 1913.

Hon, William II, Stafford $House \ of \ Representatives$.

My Dear Ma. Stafford: In answer to your communication of the 22d instant, I have to say that the Assistant Attorney General for this depar ment has held to be permanent legislation the provision which was included in the appropriation acts for several years directing the withdrawal from the mails of certain supplies for the Postal Service prior to the weighing period in the respective weighing divisions of the country and their transmission thereafter by freight or express. The supplies named in the law, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, have been withdrawn from the mails in all weighing divisions of the country and are now being transported by freight or express. With respect to the question of requiring railroads to furnish free transportation to all railway-mail clerks, including transfer clerks, terminal railway post-office clerks, and clerks detailed to division super-intendents' and chief clerks' offices, I have to say that, in the opinion of the department, such transportation is not a part of the service of carrying mails by railroads unless it be furnished to clerks on duty on the trains or going to or returning from such duty. Any transportation furnished to employees not performing duty in railway post-office lines, or when going to or returning from such duty, would appear to be in the nature of free transportation, without any consideration to the railroads, as in other cases. This might violate a Federal statute if the travel were interstate; it would violate a State stratue if the travel were interstate; the such situative exists. The department has had correspondence with the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning this subject, and it is believed the views expressed above are harmonious with the commission's opinion concerning the proper use which may be made by railway postal clerks of Post Office Department commissions.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPH STEWART, Second Assistant Postmaster General.

If the proposition were to extend free transportation on railroads to all post-office clerks, that would be another proposition; but to single out one branch of the service that is performing the identical service that clerks in another branch of the service perform and to give them a gratuity, a railway pass, which these others do not enjoy, I think is favoritism and should not be encouraged.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] for a moment on this proposition. I have had occasion to give a good deal of consideration to the question of pass and antipass legislation, because of my membership of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. As I read this provision, it would require every railroad in the United States to grant free transportation to every or any railway mail clerk or terminal railway mail clerk, whether he be occupied in one part of the country and the railroad in another, or not; that is, it would have nothing to do with the official work. Am I correct in the intention of the author of the amendment?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairmanu, I want to say this: The gentleman may be correct, but I have always thought it a useless thing to discuss dead questions. A point of order is reserved on this section. It is going to be made. Inasmuch as it is going to be made, I do not care to discuss it. I do not want to discuss a question just for the mere purpose of talking about it.

Mr. MANN. That is quite true; but where a gentleman presents a proposition it seems to me

Mr. MOON. If objection is made to it, then I do not want to discuss it.

Mr. MANN. It is fair to the House, it seems to me, to know what the intention of the author of the proposition is,

Mr. MOON. The gentleman read the section and he probably interprets it correctly.

Mr. MANN. Then the intention of the amendment is to grant the railway mail clerk, whose home may be in Washington, free transportation all the way to Florida, say.

Mr. MOON. If he is on his official business.

Mr. MANN. But there is nothing in the amendment about its being on duty or business or anything of the sort.

Mr. MOON. If it is not, then that makes the section so much worse, and the point of order ought to be sustained very quickly.

I wanted to find out what the intention was. I sympathize with the purpose of the gentlemen in the Railway Mail Service who may desire free transportation for official purposes. I do not think it is quite courteous to the House to offer a proposition and then refuse to give any explanation of Mr. MOON. I do think it is discourteous to the House to offer the proposition, and I do not think it is necessary to debate a proposition after a gentleman has announced that he is going to make a point of order against it and the point of order must be sustained. It does not help the House any to take up time in debate upon a dead issue. I have thought it best, where these propositions are made, when points of order are made to them and where the point of order is well taken, to wait and incorporate the section in some other bill and explain it at some other time, so that we may go on with our business here.

Mr. MANN. But the distinguished chairman of the committee knows that we very often learn by discussion of these propositions in advance. We have just debated a proposition on which a point of order was made, which, if it had not been discussed at all when the point of order was made, would not have come up again in the House.

Mr. MOON. Well, I know, and I understand what the gentleman from Wisconsin is going to do, and I ask the Chair to rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order for the reason stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, after line 12, insert the following:

"That after June 30, 1914, an experimental radio-communication service may be established under such rules and regulations and rates of postage and terms as the Postmaster General may prescribe, between post offices in the United States and between such offices and post offices in foreign countries, and in that behalf may either acquire radio-communication equipment or apparatus, or may employ the stations and equipment or apparatus of other departments of the United States, or of private persons, companies, or corporations, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to enable him to carry out the above provisions."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of Mr. MOON. I am not going to reserve any more points of order, and I do not want any reserved on me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order,
Mr. STEENERSON. I would like permission to extend my

Mr. MANN. We might as well take up a little time.

Mr. STEENERSON. I only want about three minutes to speak on this.

Mr. MOON. All right, speak a little if you want to do so. Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Postmaster General in his report recommended that the Government shall acquire all the telephone and telegraph lines. It has been estimated by some well-informed persons that it would require a thousand million dollars to do that, the purpose being to have these lines of communication by telegraph and telephone as an adjunct and part of the Postal System. Now, we all know this is a progressive age; that in a few years it is probable that telephones and telegraph will be out of date; that telephone poles and wires will be as useless as a battleship 20 years old; and that, therefore, it would be a useless waste of funds to acquire the enormously expensive equipment of the telegraph and telephone companies.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What are you going to substitute for it?

Mr. STEENERSON. Radio communication; wireless teleg-I believe in a few years the Government, if you appropriate this $100,000 for experiment, will be able to send communications through the wireless establishment of the Navy Department or through the establishment of private companies; that you can file your telegrams with them and they will charge a rate of postage that will be reasonable, and they will compete not only with the telegraph and telephone companies in the United States but with the cable companies across the ocean. We have established over here on the other side of the Potomac, conducted by the Navy Department, a station that can send radio communications to Europe, to Panama, to San Francisco, and we have another establishment on the Pacific coast that can send them clear across the Pacific Ocean. We send them clear around the world. I believe in a few years that this method of communication will supersede the telephone and telegraph, and it is time that the Government should conduct experiments in the use of this service so that they will not be behind the times. It has been the habit of all Governments to adopt a completed and perfected system and then establish it as a monopoly. The railroads were perfected by private enterprise, and in some of the countries after perfected they were taken by the Government. The telephone companies and telephone service vas perfected by private enterprise and private inventions, and then when they were perfected it was adopted by the Govern .ent in many countries, likewise the telegraph companies. Now, let us for once start in at the auspicious moment and adopt this kind of communication as a part of the Postal System.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How does the cost compare with the present system of telegraphing?

Mr. STEENERSON. Radio communication? The gentleman from Michigan wants to know how much the cost will be. provide in my amendment that the postmaster may fix rates. Of course that would have to be a competitive rate, and the Government will have to furnish means of communication by radiograms cheaper than you could by telegram or telephone messages, otherwise they would not get any business.

I believe, in all seriousness, that the matter ought to have consideration. We ought to appropriate $100,000 as an experiment, and then perhaps by the time the next appropriation bill comes up they will report that the experiment is a perfect success and we will thereby establish a means of competition with these monopolies which our friends on the other side have so seriously criticized, namely, the telegraph and telephone companies of the country. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $4,000,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $116,000, to cover the cost to the United States of maintaining sea post service on steamships conveying the mails, and not exceeding $87,900 for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the steamship and railway piers, for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in San Francisco Bay to the piers, and for transporting the foreign mail from incoming steamships at Honolulu from quarantine to the piers; also for transferring the mail from steamships performing service under contract for transporting United States mail.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 10, after "$4,000,000," insert a semicolon and the words, "contracts for carrying foreign mails on the seas shall be awarded to American ships in all cases when the bid of the Americanship owners is not more than 5 per cent higher than the bid of foreign-ship owners."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

nat amendment. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Does the gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The tariff bill as it passed this House carried a 5 per cent differential in favor of goods carried in American bottoms. This amendment which I have offered, and to which the point of order has been raised, was intended to be along the same lines, namely, to encourage the rehabilitating of the American merchant marine. Now, the Postmaster General to a certain extent has some little discretion with reference to awarding these contracts, but I am of the opinion that unless some such amendment as this is included in the bill in the next contracts let for carrying foreign mails American ships will not receive and differential consideration and the contracts will be awarded on the figures of the bids submitted.

The mails carried from San Francisco to Japan and China to-day are carried in Japanese ships, and the Japanese bid was only a few dollars lower than the bid of the American ship company. The result of that is that two of the trans-Pacific steamers have been taken off the run, and to-day we have sailing from San Francisco but three American trans-Pacific steamers. I believe that all parties in the House would like to see the American merchant marine reestablished on the seas. But when there is an opportunity to do something to help the American merchant marine, why, there is a point of order raised or else the proposition is voted down.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion to attribe out the last word for the propose of the motion to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling attention to another provision in this paragraph. I have a great deal of respect for the distinguished Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have wondered, however, notwithstanding that, why they took the trouble to change the word "transferring" into "transferring." The item provides for an appropriation for "transferring" the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the steamship and railway piers; also for transferring" the foreign mail from incoming steamships in "transferring" the foreign man from incoming Scan Francisco Bay to the piers; also for "transferring" the mail from steamships performing service under contract; but Uspelula it provides for "transporting" the when it comes to Honolulu it provides for "transporting foreign mails from incoming steamships at Honolulu from quarantine to the piers. Now, I take it, that being a change quarantine to the piers. Now, I take It, that being a change from the current law, the committee had some very excellent reason for turning "transferring" into "transporting," and doubtless will be able to explain the distinction which exists between "transferring" the mails from quarantine to piers in New York City and "transporting" the mails from quarantine to piers in Honolulu Bay; and I would be very glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill for an explanation of that change, if one exists.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. FINELL. Do't understand the general room remove to say that there is a change of verbiage?

Mr. MANN. The existing law says "transferring" in each case. The present bill leaves it "transferring" in three cases and makes it "transporting" so far as Honolulu is concerned.

I did not know whether or not there was anything in connection with Asiatic immigration that caused it to be changed from "transferring" to "transporting." Mr. FINLEY. I think that has nothing to do with it, Mr.

Chairman. I will say, without a very careful perusal of the last appropriation bill. I think it carries very nearly the language that has just been reported.

Mr. MANN. Heretofore in the current law we have provided an appropriation for "transferring" the mails from incoming steamships at Honolulu from quarantine to the piers.

Mr. FINLEY. That is true, Mr. Chairman; but at some of the ports where mail arrives it does not necessarily stop at quarantine

Mr. MANN. I think it proper to put it "transferring," but why do you change it from "transferring" to "transporting"?

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the gentleman to complain of its being changed to "transporting" from "transferring"?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I was not complaining at all. But the gentleman has changed in one case out of four the word "transferring" to "transporting." I did not know whether it was a "sporting" proposition or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman is evidently in favor of universal transfers, then.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think the committee had any object

Mr. MANN. Very likely. Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. I might suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the committee may have run out of transfers. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Not with $87,000.
Mr. FINLEY. The last appropriation bill provides for transporting the mail from incoming steamships at Honolulu from quarantine to the pier, and we have followed the usual language in that, as I think the gentleman will find.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. He has not followed the old language; he has made a change. It is not important, but it raises a very nice question as to a fine distinction between the meaning of "transferring" and the meaning of "transporting."

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think there is anything in the gentleman's point. I do not think that it makes any difference which word is used.

Mr. MANN. Then why do you make the change?

Mr. FINLEY. I will leave it to the gentleman to supply the explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special-delivery stamps, books of stamps, and for colling of stamps, $810,000.

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $1,650,000.

$1,650,000.
For pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute stamped and official envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and expenses of agency at Dayton, Ohio, $20,500.
For manufacture of postal cards, $385,000.
For ship, steamboat, and way letters, $250.
For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, first, third, and fourth classes, $110,000.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. On page 20, line 16, strike out the words "first, third, and fourth classes" and insert in lieu thereof "insured and collect-on-delivery mail," so that the item will then read, "For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of pieces of domestic registered, insured, and collect-on-delivery mail, $110,-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 20, line 16, by striking out the words "first, third, and fourth classes" and inserting "insured and collect-on-delivery mail."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this is to enable mail to be insured by the consignor, and the person to whom it is sent will pay the insurance on delivery, so that I think there can be no serious objection to the proposed change of the law.

Mr. MANN. What provision is there now for insuring first-class mail?

Mr. FINLEY. At present when there is insurance it is paid at the initial office.

Mr. MANN. What authority is there now for insuring firstclass mail?

Mr. FINLEY. In the last appropriation bill I think there is a proposition that will cover it.

Mr. MANN. I do not now recall it, and I do not think it was in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. FINLEY. This proposition will make for betterment of the service and for a more efficient service, and it can do no harm.

Mr. MANN. Well, let us see. The Post Office Department insures parcel-post mail. They have the authority to make that regulation. We now pay, where mail is registered, on first-class mail. But that is not insured. In case of loss of registered mail, which is first class or otherwise, we make a payment on it. The gentleman strikes that out and provides only for insured mail.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman will find that the amendment as read covers the point.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman strikes out the first and third and fourth classes and provides only for mail which is insured?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes. Mr. MANN. I do not recall any authority for insuring firstclass mail.

Mr. FINLEY. There has been a law on the statute books for many years providing indemnity for the loss of registered mail.

The gentleman is well aware of that.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman leave it the way it is and add "insured mail," which covers the parcel-post proposition? Mr. FINLEY. My recollection of the matter is that this is the identical amendment asked for by the Post Office Department, and the committee supposed that the department had looked into the matter.

Mr. MANN. They have not recommended any such thing in their annual reports. I am inclined to think that the gentle-man will find that this would eliminate the protection of mail that is not insured, and there is no authority for the insurance of first-class mail.

M1. FINLEY. Here is a letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster General, in which he makes a recommendation for this. I will have the letter read if the gentleman wishes it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection at all to the appropriation covering the loss of insured mail; but where the law provides for making payment on first-class mail which is lost I do not believe it is desirable to say that we will not pay for it, and that is what the gentleman's amendment would do, because his amendment would only make an appropriation for insured mail.

Mr. FINLEY. The amendment is intended to cover all cases where registered mail is lost.

Mr. STAFFORD. As this matter has not been considered in the committee, does not the gentleman think the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois is the proper one, that if you eliminate the payment of indemnity for first-class mail by striking that out you thereby do not have any indemnity at all?

Mr. FINLEY. This does not do away with indemnity for any mail which is now provided for by law, as I understand the amendment.

Mr. MOON. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] that the Third Assistant Postmaster General says in his letter:

This change is necessary in order that the department may comply with the law, section 8, act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stats., 557), providing for the payment of indemnity for insured parcel post mail which is not registered.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree that there should be an amendment adding to the pending provision, but I do not wish to have anything eliminated that would take away the indemnity that now exists for first-class mail.

Mr. MANN. May I suggest to the gentleman that instead of striking out first, third, and fourth class, he add the words-

And insured and collect-on-delivery mail-so that the paragraph will cover all of it.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, would not the gentleman's proposed amendment also cover indemnity and insurance as well?

Mr. MANN. The amendment in that shape would cover the registered mail which is lost, and also the insured and collecton-delivery mail, which the gentleman desires to cover

Mr. FINLEY. There is no doubt about the proposition that the department wishes to change the collection to the consignee; but now we have a law on the statute books, and this does not interfere with it, providing for indemnity for loss. Will not the gentleman's proposed amendment have the effect of giving double payment?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The amendment I suggested was using the gentleman's own language, but would still give the Government the right to make indemnity for the loss of registered mail which is not insured.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But simply add to the provision, which we have always carried for years, for the payment of loss for registered the additional provision for payment of loss for insured and collect-on-deliver; mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should the consignor have the privilege of compelling the consignee to pay for insurance? The large mercantile establishments in my home city, which are using the parcel-post mail, pay the insurance on the parcel-post packages which they ship. Why should you compel the con-signee to pay the insurance when he may not wish the parcel insured and be a stranger to the transaction?

Mr. FINLEY. The law does not lay any burden on the condignee. He can take the package or not take it, as he pleases.

The gentleman is aware of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you are compelling the consignee to pay the insurance, or else refuse the package.

Mr. FINLEY. It is expected that by this course the amount of mail of this character will be largely increased and the collection simplified.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the result will be that all the collections will fall upon the consignee and the consignor will discontinue paying the insurance.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that his view at variance with the views of the Post Office Department. I will say to the gentleman that his views are

Mr. STAFFORD. We have had propositions before our committee, submitted by the Third Assistant Postmaster General, which were withdrawn when their defects were pointed out in the committee. This matter has not been considered by the Post Office Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order.
Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Our colleague on the committee [Mr. Starrond] says that the provision suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] will probably force the consignee to pay the insurance. I do not see how any such statement as that can have any weight, because if I buy from you and you ship to me, you ship under whatever agreement is made between us. If we agree that you, as the shipper, are to pay the insurance, of course that would relieve me from the payment of it; but if you refuse to ship to me unless I pay the insurance, I will have to pay it; and if in the end we settle the controversy by either one of us agreeing to pay it, the whole question is settled. As I take it, when a man buys goods he understands the terms upon which he buys them and the terms upon which they will be shipped and the amount of money he will have to pay, whether it includes insurance or whatever it may be. The mere statement of the case in this item of the bill would have nothing to do with the case when the goods are shipped.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I may not. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point of order and then withdrew it.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I rose, Mr. Chairman, to renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman did not renew it in The Chair asked the gentleman from Illinois if he withdrew the point of order, and he said he did. If the gentleman from Wisconsin made his point of order, he made it too late.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I heard the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin make a point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion and in view of the fact that if there is any faulty method provided by this amendment it may be corrected in another body. I do not care to press the objection. I think the objection I raised has merit in it, but I will not press it, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For blank books, forms, pamphlets, rubber stamps, canceling devices, and postal savings certificates for use in depository offices and banks, postal savings cards and stamps, official postage and stamped envelopes for use in lieu of penalty or franked envelopes, in the transmittal of free mail, authorized by act of June 25, 1910, including those used in the central office, $100,000.

[Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Supplies for the City Delivery Service, including letter boxes, letter-box fasteners, package boxes, posts, furniture, satchels, straps, baskets, time cards, time-card frames, time-recorder supplies, maps, transfer designs, and stencils, $150,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, line 1, after the word "service," insert the words "and the experimental delivery service provided in this act."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order. Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the need of this amendment is made plain by the action of the House yesterday in voting in favor of continuing the appropriation for experimental free delivery service in the smaller cities and villages. This particular paragraph as it appears in the bill is intended to provide an appropriation for supplies to the Free City Delivery Service, and it seems to me that the supplies for the experimental service ought to stand on a footing with the supplies for the regular city service. I understand by inquiry that it is not necessary to increase the appropriation, and it seems to me that it would be proper to give the department authority to provide for the experimental service out of this appropriation which provides for the regular delivery service. It seems to me it is clearly in order. It is appropriation for a work that has been authorized, not only authorized by the action of the committee in framing this bill, but in carrying on and supplying a service that has heretofore been authorized and actually in operation.

Mr. MOON. The $200,000 provided in this bill is intended to be expended to cover such matters as may be needed; it is for experimental service, and this would only be an enlargement of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It seems to me that the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that this paragraph provides for City Delivery Service, and the Chair hardly thinks this amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is germane.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The two kinds of service are identical. Mr. MOON. The gentleman's amendment applies to the village delivery service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is the experimental delivery serv-

Mr. MOON. And this is for the city.
Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In my own district the experimental service has been installed in a small city which does not come within the regular law.

Mr. MOON. There is a distinction between the city service and the rural service, and we are attempting to provide for the city service. Two hundred thousand dollars is appropriated. I am as much interested in the matter as the gentleman from Michigan, and I do not think there is any trouble about it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. This would enlarge the authority of the department in the use of the money in this branch of the service. If more money is needed, it would give the department authority to take part of this particular appropriation.

Mr. MOON. But it takes all of this for the city delivery supplies. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, and computing machines, and for the purchase and repair of copying presses, numbering machines, and miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, $120,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, on page 22, lines 17 to 21, inclusive, I move to strike out that language and insert the following:

For the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, and computing machines, copying presses, numbering machines, and miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, $120,000.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman moves to strike out is the language on line 19, "and for the purchase and repair of."
Mr. MOON. That is correct. That will fit it just the same,
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, strike out the item from lines 17 to 21, inclusive, and insert the following:

"For the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, computing machines, copying presses, numbering machines, and of miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, $120,000."

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the proposition is to strike out what accidentally was inserted in the bill and which is not in the current law?

Mr. MOON. It is for the purpose of enabling them to exchange machines.

Mr. MANN. There is inserted in this bill, I suppose by accident, something which is not in the current law, being the lan-guage to which I called attention in line 19.

Mr. MOON. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MANN. To strike that out perfects the item. Mr. MOON. Yes. That suggestion is correct, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment as reported is not the amendment desired, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has endeavored to have the amendment reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment reported by the Clerk is practically to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. And to insert something else. It is precisely The only difference is leaving out the words the same thing. which I referred to.

It is the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will observe that it is necessary for both the Clerk and the Reporter to know exactly what the amendment is.

Mr. MOON. I will ask the Clerk to again report the amendment as originally offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, strike out lines 17 to 21, inclusive, and insert:

"For the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, computing machines, copying presses, numbering machines, and of miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, $120,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is precisely the same thing. I was trying to get at it in a shorter way. The gentleman's amendment strikes out and inserts a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses in the Division of Supplies in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction, $30,000. And the Postmaster General may authorize the sale to the public of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints at the cost of printing and 10 per cent thereof added, the proceeds of such sales to be used as a further appropriation for the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints. Of this amount $100 may be expended in the purchase of atlases and geographical and technical works needed in the Division of Supplies.

Mr. EHTZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee why this provision is carried in this bill. Heretofore it has been carried in the legislative bill as a part of the departmental expenses. By carrying it in this bill it is trans-ferred to the expenses of the field service, and I would be glad to have the gentleman state the reason.

Mr. MOON. The department makes the request that this change be made, as I understand it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman tell why they re-quested it? I have not investigated the matter fully, except that I know it has always been carried as a part of the departmental expenses.

Mr. MOON. Yes; but the department thought it best to carry it here as a part of the field service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any statement from the department about it?

Mr. MOON. There is something about it somewhere, but I do not know where it is now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? Mr. MOON. C

Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the chairman of the Committee on Ap propriations may know, most of this appropriation is for rural route maps that are constantly being sold to the general public throughout the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the sale of the maps to the public is not the primary purpose. The primary purpose is to furnish them to the postmaster.

Mr. STAFFORD. The primary purpose is to furnish them to the Postal Service, just like they furnish any other supplies, as a part of the postal expenditure. In addition to furnishing them to the postmasters and the rural route carriers, they also furnish them for sale at a rate a little above cost. I think the gentleman will conclude this is really an expenditure for the Postal Service and not for the department, that it is just as much a supply as letter-carriers' bags or letter-carriers' straps.

This is something connected with the operation of the Postal Service, and members of the committee thought that the recommendation of the department to have it included in this bill was a proper one, and accordingly we included it in the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This item carries appropriations to supply the rural free-delivery maps and post-route maps. They are not used in the department, but in the field.

Mr. MOON. Almost exclusively in the field. Mr. FITZGERALD. As I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriations for the field service and departmental service should be kept separate, and this bill properly carries the appropriations for the field service—

Mr. MOON. The department recommends this transfer from the departmental to the field service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.
Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, there is one change here of one word. There has been in the Post Office Department, in Washington, a division of supplies and a division of topography.

Mr. MOON. The divisions have been consolidated.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend I am not interested in the controversy between the Committee on Appropriations-

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no controversy. Mr. MANN. And the Committee on the Post Office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no controversy. I have stated, in my opinion, supplies for the field service are properly in this bill, and I have no objection to its transfer from the legislative bill to this bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York, by the way, will notice, I am surprised that he has not called attention to it, that this apparently violates all the regulations we usually have made in appropriations about a sale being applied to other funds. This proposes to allow the sale of post-route maps and covering the proceeds into the appropriation given without any limitation at all. Certainly it ought to be limited to the fiscal year and not pile up the funds from year to year. gentleman be willing

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the construction placed by the comptroller is that the appropriation of the proceeds are credited to this particular appropriation and are available no longer than the appropriation itself.

Well, that is true where the provision provides for reimbursement of the funds, but that is not the language used here. The language used here is it shall be a further appropriation for the preparation and publication of post-route maps, rural-delivery maps, or blue prints, which I do not think is confined to the fiscal year. I was going to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he would be willing to accept an amendment which would provide that it be used for the fiscal year in which received?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been carried for years this way. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] assures under this language it would be simply a reimbursement of the appropriation for the fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That the money collected is available for use for this purpose the same as the appropriation itself. That is my understanding. Mr. MANN. Well Well, with that statement I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class (except labor incident to cleaning post offices, telephone rental, water rental, laundering and towel service, sanitary towels, brooms, mops, drayage, and miscellaneous service items), $100,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment: "Of which $25,000 may be used for the purchase of post-office supplies.'

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the amendment in writing?

Mr. MOON. The Clerk can read it on the margin of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 23, after line 23, by adding "of which $25,000 may be used for the purchase of post-office equipment."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understand this simply restores the item on page 12?

Mr. MOON. It restores the item stricken out on page 12 of Mr. MANN. There is a difference between miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class carried in this item and the one for $350,000 carried on page 12.

Mr. MOON. I will tell the gentleman in a moment. Well, towels, brooms, mops, drayage, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Heretofore we have made an appropriation of $400,000 for miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class.

Now, you put that into two items, one of $350,000 and one of $400,000, in identically the same language. What is covered by the two items?

Mr. MOON. It is the transfer of these items, as I understand the department, from the first assistant to the fourth assistant. It includes sanitary towels, and brooms, and mops, laundry, and so on.

Mr. MANN. On page 3 it says "except" those things.

Mr. MOON. Yes; that is what is excepted.

Mr. MANN. What is included, as a matter of fact? Is there any difference between the two items as to the items that can be purchased? They are both stated to be miscellaneous items. Mr. MOON. I think they are largely the same things. They are used in different offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the chairman will recall and well knows, in the item first carried in the bill the department makes an allowance to the respective postmasters for miscellaneous services, as cleaning up offices, laundry work, and the like, whereas as to the item under consideration it is for the actual purchase of supplies by the department here for general miscellaneous purposes. That is the distinction, in effect. One is an allowance of money to postmasters direct, and the other is for the purchase of supplies to be furnished postmasters.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest, really without meaning to make any criticism at all, that the department ought to suggest a change of language, so that it would not be identical in the

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be proper to make a further change in that item there of $100,000 and make it $125,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 23, line 23, by striking out the figures "$100,000" and inserting "$125,000"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail locks and keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for manufacturing and repairing same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto; also for making in the mail-lock repair shop such metal attachments as may be needed for use in the manufacture and repair of mail equipment, $15,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I called the attention of the distinguished chairman of the committee the other day to the fact that the bill did not apparently include the appropriation for awards for suggestions for valuable improvements, and so forth, and I understood that subject matter had been transferred to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Would it be proper to insert that item here?

Mr. MOON. I think it would be all right to insert it here.

will say to the gentleman, I believe, it has been left out of the bill entirely

Mr. MANN. I have a copy of the current law, if the gentleman desires to offer it.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to the gentleman offering it

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to offer and pay periodically a cash reward for the invention, suggestion, or series of suggestions for an improvement or economy in device, design, or process applicable to the Postal Service submitted by one or more employees of the Post Office Department which shall be deemed the most valuable of those submitted and adopted for use, and for that purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That to obtain this reward the winning suggestion or invention must be one that will clearly effect a material economy or increase efficiency: Provided further, That the sums awarded to employees in accordance with this act shall be paid them in addition to their usual compensation: Provided further, That the total amount paid under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $1,000 in any month or for any one invention or suggestion: And provided further, That no employee shall be paid a reward under this act until he has properly executed an agreement to the effect that the use by the United States of the invention, suggestion, or series of suggestions made by him shall not form the basis of a further claim of any nature upon the United States by him, his heirs, or assigns, and that no application for patent has been made for any such invention.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $48,650,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 19, page 25, insert the following as a new para-

At the end of line 19, page 25, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,150 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $22.50 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, an increase of 10 per cent per mile per annum; on routes carrying the mail three times each week, of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided: Provided, That no carrier's pay shall be increased more than $75 per annum on account of the passage of this act."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Until the point of order is disposed of it will not be in order to add further amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much will this add to the gross amount required to pay the rural carriers?

Mr. BELL of Georgia. About $2,700,000. Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25 line 19, after the word "service," insert the following: "Provided, That from and after July 1, 1914, the compensation of rural letter carriers, for the upkeep, feed, and maintenance of horse and wagon, shall be $250 per annum, as additional salary to that now received by them."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZ-GERALD] makes a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend. page 25. after line 19. by adding the following: "Provided further, That the salary of all rural free-delivery carriers with 24-mile routes shall be $1,400 per annum, and $48 per annum extra for every additional mile over 24 miles, and that there shall be a reduction of $30 per mile for every mile less than 24 miles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Firzgerald] makes the point of order against the amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order. I think I can convince him. [Laughter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered to the bill is practically the amendment which was indorsed at the annual meeting of the Rural Free Delivery Carriers' National Association, held at Evansville, Ind., in September, 1913.

Now, I want to make a few remarks to justify an increase of salary of the rural free-delivery carriers. There are 42.838 carriers, and their total compensation is $45.541.672. The proposed increase carried in this bill will make a total of $48.410,648, or a net increase of $2.868.976. There will be an increase for carriers whose routes are 6 miles in length of $48.40; of carriers with a route of 10 miles, of $57.20; of 24 miles, $50.58; of 25 miles, $72.50; and of 26 miles or more, of $75.

Now, there are 198 rural carriers in the district I represent, and I have returns from those carriers showing their average net compensation, after deducting the cost of maintenance, equipment, and so forth, is $557 a year. That is a net income or salary to the carrier of $46.45 a month, or $1.55 a day.

This bill carries appropriations for watchmen, messengers, and laborers in the department here, where they are housed from inclement weather, of $840 each.

So that a rural carrier in the district that I represent—and which is a pretty fair average-draws a net salary of $557, as against the salary of a laborer, a watchman, or a messenger of $840. The pay of a messenger or laborer is $70 a month, and the pay of a rural carrier is $46.45 a month. We require of a rural free delivery carrier that he shall, rain or shine, in inclement weather, in snow, rain, or sleet, or torrid weather, six days in the week, on a route of 24 miles, 311 days in the year, deliver the mail for $547 a year, or $40 a month, or $1.55 a day, and a majority of these men have families to support. We are paying the rural carriers of this country less than we are paying for common or ordinary labor in the various departments of the Government.

Now, we are requiring rural delivery carriers to carry parcelpost packages. Up to the 1st of January the limit of weight of those packages was 20 pounds. On the 1st of January the limit of weight was extended by the Postmaster General to 50 pounds, and the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge has stated in the debate on the floor that on the 1st of July, when this bill goes into effect, the limit of weight of parcel-post packages will be increased to 100 pounds. this increased service is going to compel the average rural carrier to buy new equipment at a heavier expense, and to have an increased expense of maintenance of his wagon, team, and harness, and we are going to more than treble the weight that he is now compelled to carry.

The city carrier, with pavements and improved streets upon which to deliver his mail, enters the public service at $800 a year, and in time can have his pay increased to $1,200 per annum. A clerk in the post office in a city or town, who works in a comfortable building, with every convenience, enters the public service at $800 a year, with an automatic increase in his salary until it reaches $1,200 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask three minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Aus-TIN] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is not fair or just to expect the rural delivery carriers of this country to serve the Government at a salary of $1.55 a day, in all kinds of weather, with no hope of improvement or increase in salary. I appeal to the Members of this House and those who constitute the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to give us an opportunity under the rules of this House to pass legislation that will be fair, just, and honorable to this great class of deserving and competent men.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. Mr. FINLEY. I think I can say that the gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad to hear it,

Mr. FOWLER. We are all for it.
Mr. AUSTIN. I am more than pleased to hear it. In spite of the low wages we pay, everything used by a rural carrier in the way of feed for his horses has advanced in price. The price of corn, according to the statements furnished here by the rural carriers themselves, is from 95 cents to $1.10 a bushel. Everything used in the maintenance and upkeep of the carrier's equipment has advanced in price, and everything he needs for himself and family has advanced in price; and I say it is not just or fair on the part of Congress to continue these hard and unjust conditions upon this large class of honest and faithful

The gentleman from South Carolina stated we would have an opportunity to pass upon this question. May I ask him when we will have that opportunity?

Mr. FINLEY. I hope the gentleman will have it very soon. Mr. AUSTIN. That is quite indefinite. Does "very soon" mean during the present session of Congress? Mr. FINLEY. We hope the gentleman will have that opportunity during the present session.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am very glad to hear it. Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. SLOAN rose. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rus-SELL] is recognized.

Mr. SLOAN. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman

Mr. RUSSELL. I only desire to consume a moment of the time of the House, but I do want to express myself as believing that there ought to be an amendment made to this law, paying the rural route carriers at least $1,200 salary per annum on standard routes. Two years ago I offered an amendment of At that time I was not permitted to obtain the information directly from the rural carriers, but through the officials of the Post Office Department I communicated with every rural carrier in my district as to the expense of maintaining his outfit. I learned that it was about $422 a year. age of their salaries at that time was less than $1,000, leaving them less than $600 salary after expenses were paid. Now, these men that carry the mail over the rural routes render a service more beneficial to and more appreciated by more people, I believe, than any other rendered by any other class of employees in the public service in this country.

With the permission of the Postmaster General, about two years ago, I was given the privilege on one occasion to make one trip over the route with a carrier of my home city, so that I might see how the people regarded this service. I found when we were approaching a farmer's house that the good wife or the children or the husband, if he was not in the field at work, met the carrier and greeted him on his arrival. They bought stamps of him, he delivered to them registered letters and packages, and gave them the news from the city. I found that service was appreciated by those people more than any other service of the Government enjoyed by the people of the rural districts.

I understand that the city carrier never gets less than a salary of $800 and is promoted to higher wages from time to time, of $800 and is promoted to higher wages from with no necessity for maintaining an outfit, no horse to buy, no with no necessity for maintaining an outfit, no horse to buy, no with no feed to purchase. His vehicle to keep up and wear out, and no feed to purchase. services are all rendered in the city with good sidewalks and he gets a salary of $800 or more. The rural carrier gets less than $600, and with an increasing burden all the time by reason of the parcel-post law. The weight of parcels that may be carried has been increased from 20 to 50 pounds, making it necessary to have more teams, larger vehicles, do more work, and still his salary is not increased.

I want to express myself as convinced that this is one of the most just amendments that will be offered, and I understand that it is to be stricken out on a point of order. There ought to be some way of enabling this House to vote upon this question that is so important to a great number of the most faithful public servants in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers a The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 25, line 19, after the word "substations," by inserting: "Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1914, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary for a standard route of $1,200."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the committee to the proposed $50 increase made in the salary of the rural carrier. That is a step in the right direction, but : is one of those mincing little steps of $50 where it should be a full century stride of $100. [Applause.]
I want to call attention to this peculiar fact. In this bill there are 85 classifications. Some of them contain many thousands of employees, and in 82 classifications they terminate on the $100 grade. In only two besides the rural carriers have they seen fit to split the final century. The first split is making a $50 grade in the 10 inspectors where, in order to make the grade, they had to split the $100, giving one subclass $2,250. The other is where they give messengers and laborers

$840 and $720. Now, I do not think the House can see, nor will the country approve, the wisdom of this pinch-penny parsimony applied to these men who, as a class, have personally the greatest amount invested in order to do their work; who receive the least for expense money; who are not provided with uniforms; who travel the farthest of any of the employees of the whole system; who endure more storm than any of the rest; who suffer more heat; go over roads, muddy, sandy, with snow, ice, and all other adverse conditions that you find on the public highway; who are the real missionaries for the n.ail service; whose work has brought about an increase in the income of the Post Office Department and gone further toward making it pay and remain on a paying basis, who have the least net salary. Yet they constitute one of the 3 selected out of 85 classes where they split the salary on a basis of $50 instead of ending it on a basis

It seems to me that here is a split we can well remedy, and that with justice. I urge the House to find a way to carry this proposition and give to these poorly paid men $100 a month.

Why, gentlemen of the committee, under the proposed bill, while they live and are faithful you divide up on the $50 basis, whereas if they cease to be faithful or they die you grade them on a $1,000 basis; because if they become unfaithful you penalize them for $1,000, and if they die in the service you give their family $2,000. If they live and are faithful you pinch them on a $50 basis. Your liberality seems to favor defalcation or death instead of life and faithful service. [Ap-

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to make it a little longer than that.

Mr. MOON. Well, let us say 20 minutes. Mr. MANN. This is a subject that is very close to the Members

Mr. MOON. There is another section in the bill, I will say, which provides for the increase itself.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make it less than 20 or 25 minutes. I would like to have five minutes

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, I think that this Congress ought to raise the salary of the rural carriers. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bell] provides for an increase of $75 per annum. Now let us take the mail clerks on the railroad, for instance. The very beginners the first year get $900, and there is an automatic system of promotion of 75 per cent of them every year to a salary of $1,800. The rural carrier buys his own vehicle. The Government provides a vehicle for the mail clerk. It costs the rural carriers about $450 per annum for his equipment. It costs the mail clerk nothing. On the 1st of March, under the parcel-post law, these rural carriers will be compelled to carry packages weighing as much as 50 pounds. Their labors have been greatly increased, and they are entitled to increased pay. Whenever the duties of any other officer have been increased his salary has been increased.

When the work of a judge of inferior courts increases, his salary is invariably increased. Appellate courts have been established to relieve the Supreme Court of some of its work, and so on up and down the line of official station, but there is no provision to relieve these rural carriers of any of their increased labors and no provision for increased pay. work is increasing all the time, and the salary now paid is inadequate for the service rendered. This committee ought to provide for an increase to at least $1,150. The additional duties and expenses, all considered, they ought to have $1,200 per annum. The cost of living has increased. The cost of horse feed and horses has increased. A mail carrier has to pay for a good mule or a good horse $250. These men are doing great work for this Government. They are engaged in a great service, distributing the mail among the people. are out in all kinds of weather, not sheltered and protected as the mail clerk is in a car provided for him. He goes to no expense whatever for that, but the rural carrier must provide his own vehicle, must pay his house rent, and support himself and family, and all this on $1,100 a year. I am in favor of increasing the pay of rural letter carriers and postmasters, too. The parcel post has greatly increased the labors of both. appeal to the chairman of this committee to prepare and offer an amendment himself raising the rural mail carriers' salary. I will cheerfully support both propositions, because they are just and right. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I heartly agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama with respect to the necessity of an increase in the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers, and I will say right now that I have been impressed with certain data I have received showing the net amount per received by these carriers. The amounts are pitifully small. will not undertake to give the accurate figures, but from statements sent to me I should say that $500 and $600 a year net was a large estimate. Now, we all know this amount is too small. I want to say that there are perhaps 80 to 100 of these gentlemen in my district. I have in the past been receiving very few of their votes. I do not suppose that my party will receive many of their votes in the next campaign; but if every single one of them was a Republican and I never expected to get the vote of a single one of them, I would stand here and advocate this increase, because I believe it is right.

It is not just to expect these men to carry the immense amount of the recent increase in the mail matter of the country and to incur the expense they have to incur upon the pitiful salaries they are now being paid, and we may as well recognize the fact that if the people of the United States demand these modern postal facilities, if the farmer expects his mail delivered at his home every day in the year except Sundays and holidays, he ought to be willing to pay for it, and, as a matter of fact, he is willing to pay for it; and no fair-minded man will protest if you give these carriers an adequate salary.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the text of the amendment that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] has offered. looking to the relief of the rural delivery carriers throughout the United States, is in the language of a proposed bill sent to me by the president of the Idaho Rural Letter Carriers' Association, Mr. Frank O. Paul, of Rexburg, Idaho. It is the same as is included in section 14 of the resolutions adopted by the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, in convention assembled, at Evansville, Ind., September 16 to 19, 1913.

The amendment provides that, beginning with the 1st of July, 1914, the compensation of each rural mail carrier upon a standard route of 24 miles shall be $1,200 per annum for carrying the mail six days a week.

The amendment provides, further, that on routes extending 24 miles in length the compensation shall be increased by $48 per annum for each mile in excess of 24, and upon routes less than 24 miles in length the compensation shall be reduced by $30 per annum for each mile less than 24. Provided, however, that under this section the compensation of no rural carrier shall be reduced below the amount obtaining at the date of the passage of the act.

The amendment also provides that, in addition to the satary provided for, that each rural carrier on a route that can be served by one horse shall receive, as compensation for providing and maintaining suitable equipment, the same sum as is allowed to mounted city carriers in the city having such mounted carriers nearest to the post office from which such carrier starts. For each additional horse needed for the rural service, each carrier shall receive, as an additional compensa-tion for equipment, two-thirds of the corresponding allowance of said mounted carrier.

The reasons why this amendment should prevail, it seems to me, must be apparent to the Members of this Congress, and especially to those representing districts in which there are rural routes.

For many years the Government has maintained the policy of free-delivery service to the inhabitants of our cities, but it has been but a comparatively short time that the Government has realized that it owes a responsibility to the farmers living throughout our land that does not fall short of furnishing them with adequate mail service. Right at this time we hear a great deal of talk about the drift of people to the cities. There is pointed out the peril that exists on account of this condition; there is pointed out the advisability of building up the farm, and the advice now is that our people stay by the farms. I want to say, gentlemen, that the way to make the farm appeal to the people of the country is to surround farm life with the conditions that appeal to the intelligent population that our country possesses, and one of the ways of doing this is by bringing those upon the farm into as close touch as may be with the world at large. This can be done, and should be done, through our Post Office Department. It can be done, and should be done, through the establishment of rural delivery routes throughout the country. It can be done, and should be done, by paying to the rural delivery carriers a compensation that is adequate to the service performed by them-a compensation that will permit them to equip their routes with the horses and equipment necessary to give the best service without requiring the carrier himself to pay for this equipment out of his own salary.

It may be said that the carriers to-day are receiving as much as they were a few years ago, and the question is asked, Why pay them more? The answer lies in two reasons: The cost of living is high, and the salary of to-day should be in proportion to the cost of living. Not only this, but under the laws that Congress has passed providing for a parcel post the work of the carrier has been greatly increased and in some places it has been multiplied. The income of the Government from this service ought to be in part expended upon those who made the service possible and who give the people generally the convenience that it was believed would be granted by the passage of the law.

I have in my hand a copy of a letter from Mr. Frank O. Paul, of Resburg, Idaho, bearing upon the expenses necessary to be borne by the carriers in performing their duty. The letter is dated April 5, 1913. Mr. Paul says, in part:

I beg to inform you as to the expenses of the carriers, which I obtained by a report sent them—which was signed by the postmasters as well as the carriers—for the purpose of getting the average expense, condition of roads, etc. I found that the average expense of the carriers was $317.99.

A buggy lasts about three years, which we are obliged to replace at an average cost of $140. We also have to purchase one new horse, on the average, for the same length of time, at a cost of about $100, to replace the one we have either lost or crippled up so we can not use it.

on the average, for the same length of time, at a cost of about $100. to replace the one we have either lost or crippled up so we can not use it.

We have to advance at least $500 to purchase an outfit to start out with; then the repairs for five years cost another $500. Our feed bills will average approximately $250 per year, or $1,250 for five years. Our miscellaneous expenses of stable repair, druggists' and veterinary bills, etc., will cost another $250, making a grand total of $2,500 for the expenses for five years. We are paid at present $1,100 per year, or for five years $5,500, for a standard route of 24 miles or over. With a deduction of $2,500 for expenses, we have left $3,000 for five years of service to support our families and educate our children so they will be better able to fulfill the duties falling on them, and we don't think this enough to do this.

The average time used in making our routes is six and one-half hours; then there is the time it takes to work our mail up before we can leave for our routes, the time used in fixing up our reports, money orders, registers, etc., when we get back, making about eight and one-half hours daily given to our labors, making it impossible to get work along other lines to help make ends meet.

Our roads are accountable in a measure for the high repair bills. I find, through the reports I sent out, that the roads were bad a hig portion of the time, especially in spring and fall, when they were muddy and rutty, caused by bad weather. There is only a small portion of our roads drained, allowing the water to stay on, making mudholes and ruts. We are in favor of Federal aid to roads.

This letter indicates something of the condition that con-

This letter indicates something of the condition that confronts our letter carriers throughout the country. But I have further data upon this question. I have letters from many of the rural carriers throughout my State setting forth the number of horses, the number of vehicles, the amount of harness that they are required to possess; setting forth the annual depreciation, the cost of feed for the horses, the cost of upkeep that may be scheduled under the heads of horseshoeing, repairs to vehicles, harness, and other similar expenses. An examination of these many letters indicates that our rural carriers are being asked under the present law to perform their service for a meager compensation. I have not heard from all the rural carriers in my district, but to those from whom I have heard the average cost of equipment and maintenance of the horses, vehicles, and necessary equipment for the carriers is $474 per year.

The average salary of those in the service from whom I have heard is $1,084. The subtraction of $474 from $1,084 is but a simple problem in arithmetic, and it leaves a net salary of $610, on an average, throughout my district. These figures alone ought to furnish a complete reason for the passage of my amendment.

The people who live upon the farms are deserving of the same consideration through the Postal Service that is extended to the people who live in our cities, and the carriers who perform this service of bringing the people of the farm into the closest touch with all the world are deserving of fair compensation. I trust the amendment may prevail,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Chairman, it is with exalted pride that I recall the glorious victory of the Democratic Party in 1912. We championed the rights of the people; the Republican Party took its old stand for the trusts and monopolies. The issues were clearly drawn and the contest severe. Under the great leader-ship of Woodrow Wilson the people triumphed and gave into our hands the administration of affairs. What was the cause? The reason is not far to seek—the Republican Party forgot to keep faith with the people.

THE TARIFF.

The Republican Party in 1908 was continued in power under promise to revise and reduce the tariff. It revised but did not The Payne-Aldrich law was higher than the Dingley The Democrats in 1910 elected a majority of Democrats to seats in the House on a promise to reduce tariff rates, and did pass several bills reducing the tariff which were either killed in the Senate or vetoed by President Taft. In 1912 the Democrats elected a President, a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic House. Congress proceeded at once to reduce the tariff and accomplished this result effectually by the passage of the Simmons-Underwood bill, which was signed by the President and is now a law. No one denies that the new law is a genuine reduction, and no one accuses the Democratic Party of being false to the pledges it made to the people. The free list as to the necessaries of life has been enlarged and the dutiable list cut from 10 to 50 per cent. The business of the country is conceded to be on a sound basis. The new tariff law has not injured the business interests. We have launched our country into a greater and newer freedom, which in due course of time will yield an unparalleled prosperity.

THE CURRENCY.

The national-bank system or the currency question next engaged our attention. The national-bank law had outlived its usefulness and become a menace to the growing interests of the country. Its defects were notorious and glaring. All men recognized its weaknesses and both parties had set about to remedy them. The Republican Party from 1908 to 1912 temporized with the matter. Under the leadership of Senator Aldrich a great monetary commission was devised and Aldrich placed at its head. It accomplished nothing, except to put the American people on guard. The leopard can not change its spots, and a man who has always stood for the classes as against the masses can not be expected to do the right thing even on his deathbed. Senator Aldrich was almost dead politically, as was the party to which he belonged. The people repudiated both the man and his party and turned to the rising sun-the reorganized and unterrified Democracy-for relief.

The Democrats brought in a new currency bill and pressed it to a victorious conclusion. It was a bill to take from a class the banking interests-the management and control of the currency, and to place that control more immediately under the control of the people. It was to be a safer system and a far more serviceable system, in that the Government was to have the chief control and not the national banks. Wall Street is no longer to dominate the money of the United States. A great series of Federal reserve banks, under control of a great reserve board appointed by the President, take the place of nationalbank control, and the people are assured of a "square deal" in management of the financial interests of the country. are a thing of the past, and business of all kinds is freed from the grasp of greed and monopoly.

THE CIVIL-SERVICE LAW.

The civil-service law has been on the statute books for more than two decades, and in the final analysis of its workings has not proven itself to be wise legislation. From 1789 to 1887 we had no such law, and by any fair comparison the business of the country was better managed during the earlier days of the Republic than it has been during the life of the present law. Fitness for service has in every administration been recognized as the only basis for wise and safe appointments. There are fit men in all parties, and a wise President can better be intrusted with their selection than any board or any system of examina-tions that can be devised. No mere literary examination, even when impartially administered, can ascertain special fitness for a particular place. The duties of the place must be learned by the appointee after he arrives at his post, and an appointee of an honest President can and will learn these duties and perform them more faithfully than will the man sent in by a civil-service board, with good scholarship markings and the assurance that he has a life job.

The affairs of government were in as safe and as intelligent hands under the appointments of Jefferson, of Jackson, and of Lincoln as they have been under Cleveland, Roosevelt, or Taft. The old system was called "the spoils system" and the modern one "the merit system." The modern plan sails under false colors, for it does not produce clerks or officials of equal or greater merit than did the system it supplanted. Men were chosen for their fitness even under the "spoils system," and there is an everlasting ring of truth in the old saying, "To the victor belongs the spoils." No one ever supposed that the victor in any age of the country intended that the offices should go to incompetent men. Jackson swept cleaner than any President, but no one ever accused him of turning out a competent man to replace him with an idiot or an incompetent. Everything being equal, he took a Democrat, because as a Democrat he was entitled to be surrounded by men thoroughly in accord with his policies.

The present system is weaker than the old, in that it shifts the selection from the men actually in charge to a set of men ignorant of the demands of the bureau or division. It is weaker than the old, again, in that while posing as nonpartisan it is the most shameless of partisan machinery. Why is it that the departments have from 75 to 90 per cent of the employees Republicans? Republican boys and girls are no more efficient in our schools and colleges than are Democratic boys and girls, and cny "merit system" that gives from three-fourths to seventenths of the Government places to Republican employees is a parody on merit and worse than the worst examples of the old spoils system. At the worst, an appointee under the old régime only held place from four to eight years, while the appointees under the new-appointed ostensibly for merit, but really for partisan activity--hold their places for life-an anomaly in American governmental affairs. Our chief officers are changed and changed frequently; under the old system all employees were subject to the same law of change, and public affairs then were as well administered as they are to-day. Postmasters of the first and second classes are changed frequently without injury to the service.

The present system discriminates in favor of third and fourth class postmasters by exempting them from the law of change. In large cities the recipients of mail rarely see the postmaster, while third and fourth class postmasters are in evidence to their entire electorate. The great rural communities elected a Democratic administration, and expect to have an object lesson in changes of postmasters and other petty officers, but so far as they are concerned they are doomed to disappointment. The same Republican officials and employees continue to hand out the mail, and for all practical purposes the old Republican administration is continued indefinitely.

I am proud to say that the Democrats are weary of this false system of selection, and that the House has now under consideration amendments to certain bills which abolish a large part of the civil-service law, falsely called "the merit system." sonally, I am opposed to the whole law, and am in favor of a law that will keep in office those men that are in harmony with the administration. There are equally as fit Democrats who seek public employment as there are Republicans. Democratic applicants are equal mentally and morally to Republicans in office and superior to any Republican in carrying out Democratic policies. Policies may originate with those who are higher up, but they must be effectuated by those who are lower down, and Democratic policies have as much hope for faithful administration at the hands of Republican employees as the proverbial feather has to come out unscorched from a trail through the infernal regions. Then, again, the Democratic applicant has worked for the change as faithfully as has the greater men who are elected. The Democrat who goes out in sunshine and rain to elect a Democratic President desires recognition when victory perches on the Democratic banners. He should have an advantage over the ward heeler who is chosen under the guise of civil-service rules. If civil service is to be applied, let it go to every appointed place. It is unfair and unappened, let it go to every appointed place. It is untait and injust to have at least 75 per cent of the appointed places filled by men opposed to the party in power, and who are perniciously active as "calamity howlers," "panic prophets," and "breeders of unrest." Life jobs for employees destroy independence of of unrest." thought and independence of action. Life jobs destroy alertness and continued effort in improvement. Life jobs produce routine work slovenly done. Life jobs are un-American when applied to the public service.

For 50 years the Democratic Party has contended for certain great political truths, and in the hour of its success the members of that party demand that every office shall be filled by competent men in harmony with Democratic administration. Our Democratic army must not be led by Republican officials, any more than an American Army should be led by Mexican officials. The honest, efficient party worker should be rewarded after party success, and in that sense our fathers wrote us their shibboleth, the manly words, "To the victors belong the spoils." I do not blush for my Democratic friends in North Carolina who apply for place under a Democratic administration, nor do I dread to make a comparison of North Carolina applicants asking and seeking place with the best of the Republicans now holding the jobs; I am willing to gauge North Carolina applicants, or Democratic applicants anywhere, by any standard of virtue, intelligence, or worth, except a civil-service standard inaugurated and maintained to give Republican employees a life hold on their jobs. These same Democratic applicants, if chosen to place, upon a change of administration would expect to be turned out from one end of the country to the other, and I, for one, would disown them as party associates if they whimpered over their removal. The gentleman who preceded me spoke of this proposition as an encouragement of the pie counter and pie hunters. I am humiliated at such a comparison. Is a man who aspires to a small office to be catalogued as a pie hunter, while one who seeks the large one is a patriot? Is the man who seeks a $10,000 place to be called a statesman while the humbler man who asks for a $900 place is to be dubbed a "job hunter' am proud to stand here and speak for the humblest patriotic Democrat who has been faithful and loyal to his party and to demand for him recognition in this the people's administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner]

is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I entirely sympathize with those who desire to keep the appropriations of this Congress within a reasonable limit. Everyone, however, understands that certain increases must be made. Of course, it is a question for this Congress to determine in what cases meritorious increases are asked for. Certainly, there can be no consideration of this question with regard to whether increases ought to be made for the rural carriers by anyone without his arriving at the conclusion that their demand is entirely justified. There has been, in the first place, a very large increase in the general cost of living. Of course, we all understand that. There has been a very large increase, as well, in the cost of feed, which increases materially the cost of the equipment of these rural carriers. Gentlemen should understand that these men are placed, after all, in an anomalous position as public servants. There is hardly any other class of public servants that is required to furnish their own equipment. Usually the Government does this at its own expense. But these men are required to furnish their own equipment, and it is a most considerable one, as gentlemen will find by investigation.

In my own district the reports show that these rural carriers are required to keep three horses, in order to make their routes. They are required to keep two vehicles, at least. The value of the horses on an average for each one of those carriers is $343.50. The average of the vehicles is $120. The cost of the harness that is required is $46. They are required at present prices to pay on an average of $331.40 annually for feed. The shoeing and repairs cost over $60 each year. The average expenses in my district of these rural carriers is $586, and the average salary is but $1,082. This leaves as actual compensation for these men, working six days in the week, every week in the year, in rain and shine, in summer and winter, and under all conditions, but $496 annually. I submit to gentlemen that this country can not afford to ask a man to maintain a family and educate his children on that amount of compensation. submit that a man who is required to take such responsibilities and do such efficient work for the people whom he serves, ought not to be asked to work for such small compensation. A fair, a reasonable compensation ought to be granted, and that would mean a substantial increase in their present compensation. I sincerely hope that a way may be found for the House to consider and pass such legislation.

Mr. PETERSON. Gentlemen in the House here have frequently announced during the consideration of this bill that we can not afford to be parsimonious with those who devote their time and labor to the services of the Government. gentlemen, if that be true, and we all admit that it is, it seems to me that this is the opportunity when we should show our liberality, and this is the class of men who are entitled to the benefits of our liberality. These are the men who perform actual service, who render to the Government every day full returns for the compensation they receive, and more

The chairman of the committee stated on yesterday that the average time devoted to the service by these men was over 71 These men live in the towns and in the cities. hours a day. Many of them have to pay rent. They must clothe and support their families and educate their children. I submit that no man under such circumstances can well do that at the rate of salary they are receiving. In my district, of which I have the returns here, the average net amount received by these men is less than $600 a year. Think of it, gentlemen. Trying to support a family and educate children at this time, considering the cost of living, on $600 a year. Is not that parsimonious? Is it fair and just to the citizenship of this country? There is no class of men possessing the qualifications that these men must possess that is required to work for such a wage as that. These men are men who must be educated; they must have special qualifications. They can not pass the examination unless they And I want to register my voice in favor of fairness and justice to these men, and to say that I believe their salaries should be raised.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding after the word "substations," in line 10, on page 25, the following:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,250 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $50 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, an increase of 10 per cent per mile per annum; on routes carrying the mail three times each week, of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided: Provided, That no carrier's pay shall be increased more than $200 per annum on account of the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. COX. I make the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] makes a point of order. The point of order is sustained,

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, on a standard route of 24 miles the rural carrier now receives $1,100 per annum. Section 9 of this bill provides that for such route a carrier shall receive $1,150.

Mr. DONOVAN rose.
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. Was not the point of order sustained?
The CHAIRMAN. It was; but the gentleman from Oklahoma has been recognized to debate the proposition under the 40minute plan.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, as I said, under section 9 of this bill the pay is increased to $1,150. Under the amendment which I have offered the pay for such a route would be $1,250 per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since I have had the honor to be a Member of this House I have felt a special interest in doing what I could to promote improvement in every department of what I could to promote improvement in every department of our mail service. I have taken especial interest in every propo-sition to better the service given our rural population. Great progress has been made along this line. I am ready to vote for larger appropriations from year to year until every farmer shall have his mail delivered at his door. The pay which our rural carriers receive will affect the mail service which our farmers receive. Poor pay to rural carriers means inferior mail service to our farmers. I am therefore in favor of paying rural carriers liberally for their services. Four years ago, March 10, 1910, I made a speech in this House on the very subject we now have under consideration—the pay of rural carriers. My sentiments have not changed. In that speech I said:

My sentiments have not changed. In that speech I said:

In my judgment the pay of the rural carriers should be substantially increased. They perform a very important service for the people. The position is one of great responsibility and requires men of unquestioned integrity. These men come in close contact with the people. The success of the service and the reputation of the department depend upon their fidelity to duty. The rural carrier is required to make quite an investment before he enters upon his work. He must maintain this investment. There is constant danger of loss. There is the wear and tear of his vehicle and equipment, and he never knows when a large portion of his annual salary must go to purchase a horse to replace the one that has died. He is often exposed to inclement weather. He must go, rain or shine, in heat or in cold. The patrons of the route expect him every day at the proper time. The records show that he seldom fails. The present schedule of salaries was fixed when the equipment of the rural carrier cost much less than it does now and when admittedly the cost of living was not nearly so high. Unless these men receive better pay, in my opinion, the service will lose many of its best men. This would cripple the service. This we can not afford to allow. The rural service must be both extended and improved. We must pay sufficient salary to induce the right kind of men to seek and remain in this service. For two important reasons the pay of the rural carriers should be increased—first, in the interest of an improved service, and, second, in justice to the carriers, who are not now, in my judgment, receiving pay commensurate with the service performed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Okla.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent, Mr.

Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Under the act approved August 24, 1912, the maximum pay allowed a rural letter carrier was $1,100 annually

Section 9 of this bill, H. R. 11338, fixes the maximum salary to be paid to a rural carrier on a standard route of 24 miles at $1,150. This is an increase of only $50 annually.

Section 9, in full, is as follows:

Sec. 9. That from and after the 1st day of July 1914, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,150 per annum. to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $22.50 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, an increase of 10 per cent per mile per annum; on routes earrying the mail three times each week, of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided: Provided, That no carrier's pay shall be increased more than $75 per annum on account of the passage of this act,

EXPENDITURE FOR EQUIPMENT AND MAINTENANCE.

Through Mr. W. D. Brown, editor of the Rural Free Delivery News, I have received an itemized statement of the amount that I the rural carriers in the second congressional district of Oklahoma, from which I was elected in 1912, spent in 1913 for equipment and maintenance. Each report is signed by the carrier, and an itemized statement is presented. I present a tabulated statement, giving name of carrier, salary, and amount spent for equipment and maintenance for 1913.

According to the foregoing statement the average cost for equipment and maintenance to rural carriers in my district is $521, and the average salary for the carriers in my district is $1,090. In other words, according to this statement, rural carriers in my district received only a net salary of $569 annually. It may be difficult to provide by law a salary that will be equitable in all cases.

Mr. W. D. Brown, the editor of the Rural Free Delivery News, who has, no doubt, given this subject very careful consideration, discusses this proposition in a letter which I received from him under date of January 12, 1914. Referring to the proper basis of adjusting salaries according to service rendered, road conditions, and cost of equipment and maintenance, he says:

ditions, and cost of equipment and maintenance, he says:

I take the liberty of suggesting two bases as tending to adjust the compensation more nearly in proportion to the service rendered, road conditions, and cost of equipment maintenance:

First. In addition to the present salary of each carrier, provide an annual equipment allowance of $120 minimum and $300 maximum, provided that carriers on routes not less than 16 miles in length shall be allowed a minimum of $150; on routes not less than 20 miles in length, a minimum of $200; on routes not less than 24 miles in length, a minimum of $240. Major fractions of a mile to be considered a full mile. Additional equipment allowance to be based upon condition of roads, quantity of mail handled, and length of time required to serve route.

Second. Fix arbitrarily the length of a standard rural delivery route at 24 miles and the pay for same at $1,200 per year; for each mile above the standard add $30 per year, and deduct a like amount for every mile below the standard, major fractions of a mile to be considered a full mile. In addition, allow for equipment maintenance for routes not less than 20 miles in length a minimum of $100 per year and a maximum of $200 per year, provided that the total of salary and equipment allowance shall in no case exceed $1,400.

I hope that before this bill shall be passed proper amendments may be made and that we shall place upon the statute books a law that will give every rural mail carrier adequate pay for the service he renders and make due allowance for what he is compelled to pay out in maintenance and equipment.

EXTENSION OF RURAL DELIVERY SYSTEM

I am heartily in favor of extending the rural delivery system. In this service there must be no halting, no hesitation, no delay. The work must go on. We must give to every citizen of the United States the advantages of daily mail as rapidly as suitable public highways shall be provided. The people now understand the value of this service. If the system is not selfderstand the value of this service. If the system is not self-sustaining, this will not justify any backward step relative thereto. The people are willing to pay what is necessary to secure this service. The people who reside in the rural distinct. tricts are entitled to a daily mail to place them to some extent upon an equal footing with the splendid free-delivery system But aside furnished the inhabitants of our towns and cities. from the question of justice, this system is a good investment for the Nation. It is worth far more than it costs. The Post Office Department, as a rule, should be made self-supporting. In the main, it should be managed as a business institution. But there are exceptions to every rule. The manifest and manifold benefits of a daily mail to all our people bring the rural delivery system within the exception. We can afford to provide this system even if it is not self-supporting. If we have in view the welfare of the people of this Republic, we will continue to develop, extend, and perfect the rural delivery until all of our people orients. all of our people enjoy its advantages and benefits.

Unanimous consent was asked by Mr. French, Mr. Ashbrook, Mr. Rubey, and Mr. J. M. C. SMITH to extend their remarks in

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho, Mr. FRENCH; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ASHBROOK; the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Rubey; and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to make a speech upon this proposition, but my good colleague from Missouri [Mr. Russell] made my speech before I got the chance. [Laughter.] I will say, however, in this connection that, in my opinion, no employees in the Government service receive as small compensation for the work done as do the rural route boys, who carry the mail throughout the length and breadth of this land. They are the poorest paid, yet they do the hardest work. They serve the people in all kinds of weather. It never gets too hot; it never gets too cold; it is never too dry; it is never too wet. In the sunshine or in the rain, through the dust of summer or through the snow and ice of winter, the faithful carrier "wends his weary way," bearing his ever-increasing burden of mail and distributing it cheerfully and good-naturedly to the most appreciative patronage on earth—the American farmers, their wives and daughters.

During the Christmas holidays I prepared a letter which I mailed to the 92 carriers in my district. In that letter I submitted 10 questions, as follows:

1. How long is your route? How long have you been a carrier? What is the average length of time, in hours, required to make your

5. What is your net monthly salary—that is, how much do you make, exclusive of all expenses incurred by you in carrying the mail?

6. What kind of a road have you? How many months in the year is your road good, how many months bad? Has your road been recently improved? If so, how? What kind of work has been done upon it? Are your roads, as a rule, getting better or worse?

7. In your opinion, would an annual appropriation by the Government of $20 to $30 per mile, to aid in road work, be of material benefit to your roads? Would it stimulate road improvement?

8. Are your patrons pleased with the rural mail service? What do they think of the parcel post? What is the sentiment for improved roads?

8. Are your parrous present they think of the parcel post? What is the sentiment for improved roads?

9. Make suggestions of your own regarding (a) the improvement of rural mall service, (b) the roads, (c) the parcel post.

10. Add any suggestions or comments you may wish to not included in the foregoing.

This letter was mailed December 31, and up to the present time I have received replies from more than two-thirds of thecarriers. One or two of the carriers wrote me that they would be pleased to respond to my letter, but they were not allowed to do so under the ruling of the Post Office Department. These carriers evidently were laboring under the impression that the old "gag" rule, abolished by the last Congress, was still in existence. Many of the letters which I have received treat the subject exhaustively, and contain information, not only upon the rural route service and the parcel post, but also data in regard to the character of the roads, the methods of improvement, the local sentiment, together with valuable suggestions as to how our public roads may be improved. I am frank to say that the information I have received from the carriers in my district has amply repaid me for the time and trouble of preparing and sending out the letter.

The average annual salary paid to rural carriers in my district, on routes having six times a week service, is $1,040, or a little less than $87 per month. The average annual cost of maintenance, repairs, and so forth, is $408, or $39 per month, leaving the carrier an annual net salary of $572, or about $48 per month. The salary paid to city carriers ranges from $800 to $1.200 per year, with no expense for equipment. When the work of the city carrier requires the use of a conveyance, he is given an additional allowance of from $200 to $400 to assist him in the maintenance of his equipment.

I represent an agricultural district. My people appreciate the rural-route service; they are pleased with the parcel post, and they are entitled to receive prompt and efficient service. It is unfair to ask the carriers to render such service at a compensation which nets them now but little more than half what is paid to the carriers in the cities. The boys in the country who serve the farmers are entitled to equally as good treatment at the hands of the Government as the boys in the cities who serve the city folk

The present salary of the rural-route carrier was fixed before The present salary of the fural-totte carrier was face before the parcel post went into effect. Recently the limit of the amount carried has been increased to 50 pounds, and we are told that it is to be further increased to 100 pounds. The increased limit in the parcel post will ultimately compel the rural carriers to increase their equipment. Mail matter must be protected from inclement weather, and soon the boys on the routes will be compelled to provide themselves with 2-horse, covered conveyances in order that papers, letters, and parcelpost packages may be protected from the rain and snow, and possibly from the heat of the summer sun. Congress should either increase materially the salary paid to the rural-route carriers or it should grant to them an annual allowance for the maintenance of their equipment. The patrons of rural routes are entitled to receive, and carriers are anxious and willing to render, efficient service, but with the increased burdens and the small compensation they are now receiving the time will come, and that soon, when they will be absolutely unable to render that kind of service.

Walt Mason, in his inimitable style, in a recent paragraph, has this to say about the rural mail:

THE RURAL MAIL.

A fierce and bitter storm's abroad, it is a bleak midwinter day, and slowly o'er the frozen sod the postman's pony picks its way. The postman and his horse are cold, but fearlessly they face the gale; though storms increase a hundredfold, the farmer folk must have their mail. The hours drag on, the lonely road grows rougher with each mile that's past, the weary pony feels its load, and staggers in the shrieking blast. But man and horse strive on the more; they never learned such word as fall; though tempests beat and torrents pour, the farmer folk must have their mail. At night the pony, to its shed, drags on its cold, exhausted frame; and after supper, to his bed the wearled postman does the same. To-morrow brings the same old round, the same exhausting, thankless grind; the journey over frozen ground, the facing of the bitter wind. The postman does a hero's stunt to carn his scanty roll of kale; of all the storms he bears the brunt—the farmer folk must have their mail.

Vos. Mr. Chairman, as Walt Mason says. "the farmer folk

Yes, Mr. Chairman, as Walt Mason says, "the farmer folk must have their mail." Additional rural routes will continue to be established; the parcel post will be improved and per-fected, that we may give to the people of rural communities in-creased and better mail facilities. But what of the carrier,

"the postman who does the hero's stunt"? Shall we give him a compensation commensurate of the work he is doing? The Post Office Department is now self-supporting, and so long as this continues not one dollar for its maintenance will come out of the Federal Treasury. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has reported an increase; this House, I believe, favors even a larger increase than that recommended by the committee. To-day we are face to face with the proposition that no legislation can go upon an appropriation bill without either a special rule, or unanimous consent, and the objection of one man will be sufficient to prevent, for the time being, any action being taken in the matter. I am glad to know, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will very shortly report a bill upon this subject. Within a few weeks this House will be given an opportunity to voice its sentiment in the passage of a bill which, I am sure, will mete out simple justice to the rural carrier.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the debate on this bill. The people generally are more interested in the bill which provides the revenues to run the Postal Service than any of the great appropriation bills, because it most directly concerns every man, woman, and child in the land. We appropriate for the Army and Navy, for the rivers and harbors, and for this and for that, without seeming regard as to where the money goes or where it is to come from. But when we reach the Postal Service then every item must be carefully scrutinized and all increases in salaries come in canary bites. This bill carries about three hundred and five or six millions of dollars. But what of that? That is not much when considered in a proper light; not much, because it all comes back into the Treasury. No other branch of the Government is self-supporting except the Post Office Department. The people who use the mails-and everybody does-pay the money to run this great system, and they are entitled to the best possible service; the great army of employees who make this splendid service so nearly perfect are entitled to more than a

Who is there in this Chamber or anywhere else that does not want to pay well for good service? The Hitchcock administration seemed bent upon but one thing, and that was to make the Postal Service self-supporting, regardless of the needs of the country. I am glad that we have a Postmaster General now who is proceeding on broader and bigger lines. With 2-cent letter postage there is no danger of a deficit, and for one I am opposed to a reduction in existing rates. The rate is low, when the service is considered. The people are content to pay 2 cents to mail a letter to the next town or 3,000 miles away. The mail-order houses and big business concerns want 1-cent letter postage, but I do not care if they do. Let us continue existing rates, and thereby be enabled to enlarge and extend the service and give the boys in it better pay. This bill gives many increases of salary and is twenty-two millions greater than ever before appropriated for any fiscal year. I am glad of it. I wish it was more, and I claim to be an economist, too. Every dollar collected from the people for postage should be expended to better and improve the Postal Service. Give us more rural routes, extend the city delivery, and increase the number of city carriers. Give us more clerks in the post office and in the Railway Mail Service; enlarge and improve the service and enlarge the pay.

There are two classes of employees in the Postal Service who are particularly entitled to better pay, to wit, the railway postal clerks and the rural carriers. The railway clerks receive on an average something like $1,300 or $1,400 per annum, if I am correctly informed. Consider the risk they run, the service they render, and the ability they must possess to fill these positions. Other employees either receive too high pay or the railway clerks receive too little. I think it is the latter. would cheerfully vote for an increase of $100 for each year they are in the service until their pay reaches $2,000 per annum. No one can accuse me of trying to pour water on my wheel by my advocacy of the increase of the pay of railway mail clerks. I do not suppose there are more than a dozen railway post-office clerks who live in my district, and half or more of them are out on their runs on election day. I plead plain justice for these employees who handle the mail with lightning rapidity in the railway post-offices and who was greater risk of life. in the railway post offices and who run greater risk of life than any other class of postal employees.

This bill increases the pay of the rural carriers on a standard-length route $50 per annum, making the compensation $1,150. It further provides that on routes more than 24 miles in length $22.50 per mile additional per annum for each mile in excess of the standard route, provided no carrier's pay shall be increased more than $75 per annum. I am glad for this increase, but believe it should have been $100 instead of $50, with an allowance for additional pay of not less than $30 per mile for each mile in excess of 24 miles. Some seem to believe the rural carrier is well paid—even overpaid. I have carefully examined the statements sent in to Mr. W. D. Brown, editor of the Rural Free Delivery News, from the carriers of my own district. I know the boys who made these reports, and that they are reliable reports. Four hundred and fifty dollars, I take it, is a fair average of the cost of maintenance of the necessary equipment per annum. Some carriers report an amount considerably in excess of $450 and some considerably less; so I take it that $450 is a fair average.

It is no argument, in my opinion, against proper pay for the rural carriers and all other postal employees, because there are a dozen or more applicants to fill each vacancy. Why, gentlemen, I already have four fine gentlemen back in my district who are after my job here, and I have never even intimated to anyone that there was a possibility of a vacancy in my district. There are plenty of good men in every congressional district who would fight for our places here if our salaries were cut in two. But because of this fact, how many Members of Congress believe they are overpaid? Then why should we use such an argument against the poor fellows who make a bare living. It is poor argument and falls of its own weight.

With the $450 deducted from the salary of $1,050 to $1,150 leaves but $650 to $700 for the carrier to live upon and support Not a very princely salary after all. In one of these reports to Mr. W. D. Brown, who is surely a friend of the rural carriers, I read this notation:

Bad days and bad roads, the huckster makes no trips, the farmer stays at home, but the rural carrier must go.

And so he must, for the arrival of the rural carrier is waited with impatience by every patron of this splendid service.

The rural carrier must keep at least two horses, two vehicles, harness, and so forth; the feed of the animals, the upkeep of the equipment, and the depreciation will easily equal the $450. It is true that when a rural carrier owns an automobile it is not an all-day's job during the summer and fall months, but the expense of the machine offsets the time saved. It is an all-day's job on the average, the best you can make out of it. Farm hands and laborers get from $2 to $3 per day, so that a rural carrier only gets ordinary day-labor pay.

I would offer an amendment to the bill increasing the pay to $1,200 of a standard route, with additional pay for each route in excess of 24 miles at the rate of $30 per mile if I thought it would do any good. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Moon, would do any good. The chairman of the committee, art. aloos, informs me that it would be objected to, and would therefore avail nothing. I want to go on record, however, in favor of the increase just mentioned. I have no criticisms to make of the chairman or the members of the committee. They have shown their hearts are in the right place by bringing in this bill with an increase, carrying an additional expense of $3,000,000 for the rural free delivery carriers. But they have not gone far enough, in my opinion. With the parcel-post limit now at 50 pounds, and soon to be increased to 100 pounds, I say to you gentlemen that a further increase must soon follow. The rural free delivery wagon can no longer be a light vehicle drawn by one horse, but must be a strong wagon with a good team, and will resemble an express wagon or the old-time stage coach. The people demand this increased service and they have the right to have it, but the Government will be compelled to pay for it by further increasing the pay of the rural carriers. I gladly vote for this $50 increase, and stand ready to vote for a more substantial increase, which must come at no far-distant day.

I wish to include in my remarks a letter just received from Mr. W. D. Brown, giving valuable information upon this subject. JANUARY 20, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Ashbrook: As per my letter to you of the 12th instant, I inclose herewith statements from a number of rural letter carriers in your district, showing the original outlay and annual cost of maintenance of equipment necessary to properly serve their routes. These statements were requested on January 10, and all carriers have not yet responded, but as the Post Office bill is now under consideration in the House, I send you all we have received, so that you may know something of conditions of rural service in your district. From these you will see that the average cost of equipment maintenance of your carriers who have reported is $468; average salary, $1,062; leaving net salary $594.

I am to-day mailing to Members of Congress more than 10,000 of

I am to-day mailing to Members of Congress more than 10,000 of these statements from carriers in every State, and the general average is about the same as in your district. If you think the above figures are extravagant, please consider the following:

mately	$20, 000, 000
Interest on investment at 6 per cent	1, 200, 000 4, 000, 000
Feed of only 1 horse per route, $150 per year; 43,000 routes	6, 450, 000
Motel cost non mean	11 050 000

As a matter of fact, the average requirement is two horses per route and the cost of feed per horse more than as shown above, not including repairs to vehicles, etc.

In his splendid speech, when presenting the Post Office appropriation bill, Chairman Moon stated that on July 1 next the Postmaster General would increase the weight limit of the parcel post to 100 pounds. The expenses indicated by the inclosed statements cover only parcelpost weight of 20 pounds. What will they be with the present weight of 50 pounds and the 100-pound limit now in sight?

I feel sure that under these conditions you will appreciate the imperative need of a substantial increase in compensation, either in straight salary or equipment allowance, for rural carriers, and that the carriers in your district may count upon your active support.

Sincerely, yours,

W. D. Brown.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. For several years I have believed that the rural carriers were the poorest paid employees in the Government service. Last summer I determined to investigate conditions in my own district and learn, if possible, just what salary the average carrier made above his actual expenses. I wrote each carrier to send me an itemized statement of his expenses as mail carrier. The information I thus gained has borne out my belief and has demonstrated to me how extremely low their pay is.

Out of 53 replies from carriers whose salaries ranged from $1,000 to $1,100, though I believe there are some under the former figure, I found that their total expense for horse feed and hire, repairs, horseshoeing, and other actual expenses incurred in carrying mail for one year was $20,517.23, or an average annual expense to each carrier of $387.11. Divide this by 12 and we see that there is a monthly expense of $32.26.

Assuming the equipment—horses, wagon or buggy, harness, and so forth—to be worth $500, and assuming the life of this equipment to be four years, there is an additional annual expense for depreciation to each carrier of $125, or a monthly expense of $10.41, making the total actual expense of carrying the mail $512.11 per annum, or $42.67 per month. Considering that each of these carriers is paid $1,100 per annum—though many of them receive less than this—we find that their monthly salary is $91.60. Deducting the expense of $42.67 upkeep and depreciation from the salary of $91.60, we find that each carrier receives $48.93 for his month's work, and this is a liberal estimate of the amount of money which he clears after paying his carrying expenses.

The average Government clerk begins his service at a salary of from $60 to $75 per month and does not even have to buy so much as a cedar pencil. He is provided with comfortable quarters. He is promoted from year to year until his salary is doubled or trebled. The rural carrier has no system of promotion, but draws the same pay year in and year out, and his work carries him for a long drive each day, no matter how severe the weather.

For years the rural carrier has been in this condition. It is long past the time when Congress should raise his pay in Georgia to a living wage.

The parcel post is a source of revenue to the Government, but it is a source of additional expense to the carrier. Weight soon will be increased from 20 to 50 pounds, and on July next it will be increased to 100 pounds.

For these reasons I introduced a bill increasing the salaries of these carriers $30 per month, or $360 per year, making the salary on 24-mile routes $1.460. I think this only justice and right. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." I regret that a point of order can be made on any increase in this great Post Office appropriation bill which will prevent any increase in the salary of these underpaid servants of the Government. I sincerely trust and believe a rule will be brought which will permit justice to the carriers and give them reasonable compensation. I am convinced this is the sentiment of this House and that justice will yet be done.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I have been impressed very much by the lack of arguments in opposition to the demand made for an increase in the salaries of the rural-mail carriers. Not one word has ever been offered here, by the committee or by anyone else, in opposition to the arguments which have been advanced in favor of this increase. The point has been made that their average compensation is approximately $50 a month after paying the legitimate expenses of operation. As Representative at large from Minnesota, I have taken occasion to examine the certified reports made by every Rural Free De-livery carrier in that State, and I find that when the actual expenses of repairing their wagons and harnesses and feeding their teams are taken out of their salaries they have left, on an average, as pay for personal work and responsibility less than $600 for the year; less than $50 per month each.

It requires only the exercise of a little common sense to realize that a man can not carry and distribute a load of mail and parcels over a route 25 or so miles long every day in the year but Sundays and the like, regardless of weather or condition of roads, without lots of wear and tear and expense. The wonder is that they can make above expenses as much as $50 per month on an average. Does any man claim that this is a fair wage? Can any man support himself and family decently and educate his children now, when everything is so dear, out of a salary of $50 per month? Does the committee think they are giving these men a fair deal by the terms of this appropria-The laborer is worthy of his hire.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield for one moment?
Mr. MANAHAN. For a question.
Mr. FOWLER. The committee have incorporated a provision for an increase in these salaries.

Mr. MANAHAN. I recognize the fact that the committee have made a provision increasing the salary $50 a year, leaving it still pitifully and shamefully inadequate. It is no substantial increase to a man getting only $50 a month to increase his compensation five or six or ten dollars a month more. Does the committee pretend that $50 a year increase meets the point that the men who render these services are getting approximately only $50 a month net? Is the committee so singularly obtuse that it can not recognize the fact that $60 a month or $70 a month or $80 a month net to the men who render this service to the Government is still inadequate compensation under the circumstances? I can not relieve myself from the suspicion that the committee are willing to sacrifice these toiling men; and, more than that—and this is the most serious consideration I desire to offer to my colleagues—to place in jeopardy the whole parcel post system of the United States. That is the important consideration to me, although I do not belittle the importance of giving men fair compensation for the service they render. But it is more important, Mr. Chairman, that we should so pay these men and so maintain this service to a point of efficiency that it will not jeopardize that great system of transportation when the increased weight of parcel-post packages is placed upon the shoulders of these men. I can not overestimate the importance of this consideration.

The department has increased the size of the parcel-post packages. The parcel post is the only system yet devised by our Government to render proper service to the public in the matter of transportation of parcels. It is the only scheme yet devised by this Government to check the extortion and tribute which for years the great express companies have levied upon the people of this country. The parcel post should be further enlarged, extended, perfected; its rates should be revised and lowered; its service should promptly and cheaply reach every nook and corner of this country, and its work should be done in the city and in the country by live, well-paid, and contented men. It should handle all public transportation of parcels and packages of light freight to the minute all of the time and everywhere, and not limp, as it has so long, in the rear of great corporations. It should assert its right to the whole field of parcel transportation and delivery and drive from that field the express companies, who should never have been permitted to fasten themselves like double-mouthed parasites, with one end sucking from the railroads and the other from the general public. The parcel post has no more important field of operation than in the farming districts. Why should the committee controlling this bill try to cripple this service in this field by overloading and underpaying the rural carriers, upon whom its success so much depends? Why should the committee play into the hands of the express companies by crippling their only possible competitor? Is it economy to so run a business as to break it down in its most important department?

The cry of economy made in defense of this miserable wage to rural carriers is a false cry-a cheap, false, cringing cry-that should deceive no one. Talk about economy. Your committee in control here to-day are not economical at all in the main provisions of this measure. They are penny wise and pound foolish. They starve the clerks and carriers who do the work by less than a living wage under modern conditions; they feed full the railroads with the pull in Congress as well as out of it. The committee appropriates over $55,000,000 to pay railroads for hauling the mail over steel rails as freight, with no work of distribution; it has a spasm of economy when we suggest anything over $55 a month net to ordinary men for the work of carrying and distributing mail over the country Figuratively speaking, locomotives seem to have more pull than human beings have in the field of legislation as well as in that of transportation.

Mr. Chairman, let me suggest a way in which economy may be served by the Post Office Department without underpaying clerks and carriers. In addition to the $55,188,000 appropriated for railroad transportation for the coming year, I notice on the next page of the bill an additional appropriation of $5,412,000 to pay railroads for the rent of post-office cars for next year. What does this mean? I find on page 136 of the hearings before the committee that Mr. Stewart, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, who asks for this five million and odd dollars to pay to the railroads for use of cars, testified that last year there were 1,102 railway post-office cars in use.

Assuming that the same number of cars will be used this year as last, it means an appropriation of approximately $5.000 per car. This same report on the next page shows that a large number of these cars are old wooden affairs, averaging over 10 years old and not worth anywhere near as much as they earn for the railroad, at least get, from the Treasury of our generous Government as rent annually. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, these wooden cars are a constant menace to the lives of the underpaid clerks who work in them. In case of any sort of accident to the train they crumple up like an eggshell and burn. But who cares on this committee if considerable mail is burned up and several mail clerks are mangled and killed? Men are plentiful and cheap, some people think, but railroad dividends are mighty sacred things to the safe and sane statesmen of all parties.

Mr. Chairman, the criminal folly of these monster rentals for cheap old cars that long ago should have been consigned to the scrap heap is very plain when we consider what it would cost the Government to build new and modern all-steel cars which would protect the mail and the men also and save the largest portion of this $5,000,000 annual appropriation. The Interstate Commerce Commission carefully investigated the whole subject during the Sixty-first Congress and reported to the Senate (Doc. 810) that all-steel cars cost $8,500 to $9,500; average, $10,000. Cost of repair for average use per 1,000 miles (my estimate from cost of passenger cars reported), $2.50; cleaning, per 1,000 miles, $1.50; lighting, per 1,000 miles, $2.75; heating, per 1,000 miles, 50 cents.

Figured on the basis of 100,000 miles per car, which is more than the average, as shown by this report, it would make the full cost to the Government of $725 per car; and as the railroads are well paid for the hauling of all the mail carried in these cars the cost of hauling them would be nominal.

It is therefore very clear, Mr. Chairman, that if the department really wishes to economize it will, with our authority, build not less than 100 cars a year until the Government owns its own post-office cars as well as its own post offices. shuts off the graft of the railroads in this respect alone, it will save enough to substantially increase the wages of the men who do the work and who, to my mind, are so much entitled to our protection and consideration. The intelligent, if not patriotic, management of the big trusts who have heavy transportation, long ago adopted the plan of building and owning their own cars. Why should not the Government, with its constantly increasing burden of transportation? The railroads and railroad subserviency in this body is the only answer. I know men hide behind the pusilanamous cry of paternalism or sidestep anything that smells like socialism or Government ownership without understanding either; but I am fully per-suaded that all right-thinking men with capacity to understand the difference between a Government function and private business who will carefully study this question will favor the Government building all of its own post-office cars as well as decently paying its own men.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, because after looking over the statements of expenses, compensation, and net income of the rural carriers of my district I am convinced that the carriers there, and in the country as a whole, are among the most poorly paid of the Government employees. I was surprised to find, in one instance, a carrier who works more than 300 days in the year, furnishing his own equipment, and who receives less than $185 a year net compensation. I find that the average salaries of the carriers of the district, so far as they have come to me, amount to $998 a year; the average expense of equipment, maintenance, and so forth, is $476 a year, leaving the net average salary $522 a year; I wish to call the attention of the House to the net compensation now received by some of the rural carriers in the fourth congressional district of Maine, men who in winter travel the snow-blocked roads of northern Maine, often when the thermometer is 25 below zero and the winds blowing a gale.

The Rural Free Delivery News has submitted to me a statement of the net compensation of carriers in the district I represent, and, according to that report, the net compensation of the carrier from North Dixmont, for instance, is $184.20; the carrier at Brownville receives $250.79; at Golden Ridge, $261.50; Jemtland, $359.75; West Enfield, $387; La Grange, $416.45; Patten, $489.82; Bradford, $530; Houlton, $543.30, $650, $553.20, and $628.70; Newport, $632.20, $575.95; Dexter, $620; Milo, $628.80; Springfield, $703.92.

When I compare the compensation of the carriers mentioned above with the salaries paid to other men in other branches of the Government service in the capacity of carriers in the cities, clerks in the Railway Mail Service, and clerks in hundreds of other lines of work under the Government, I am impressed that men in the Rural Service, who go out in all kinds of weather, under all kinds of conditions, with the increasing burdens that are being added to the service they perform through the adoption of the parcel post and the increased weight of parcels, as well as the further consideration that the carriers are obliged to make a heavy personal investment in horses and equipment before they can qualify for the service—that when we consider all of these facts, that as a class they are greatly underpaid; and I believe it to be the duty of Congress at this time to increase their compensation and their allowance for expenses. It is but a matter of simple justice to do so, and I hope that the amendment now before the House will receive the support necessary for its adoption.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I shall favor the slight increase in salaries of the rural mail carriers, with the regret that it is not more, in view of the fact that the rural carriers purchase their horses and equipment and maintain them out of their salaries. This cost in my district runs from $400 to $500 a year, and leaves the compensation for their splendid service unreasonably low. The additional work due to the development of the Parcel Post System will add to the expense account of the carriers. Many persons think that these carriers get an allowance for maintenance of equipment, which of course is not true. It is unfortunate that some plan is not provided in this measure to make definite allowance, separate from actual salary, for the purchase of equipment and maintenance of the same. phase of the question must be met and satisfactorily adjusted in the near future. In this connection I submit the following statement of the monthly expenditures for maintenance and living of a carrier in the district (tenth Pennsylvania) that I have the honor to represent:

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the position of rural mail carrier under the present compensation paid by the Government is one of the last positions I would advise anyone to seek. The salary as now paid is in almost every case wholly inade-quate. When compared with the compensation of carriers in towns and cities the pay allowed rural carriers is unreasonable and unfair. I am heartly in accord with the spirit of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. The main objection I have to the proposed amendment is that it does not provide for a sufficient increase of pay for rural mail carriers. In my judgment the increase now should be at least $350 a year for the standard 24-mile route and a proportionate increase for other distances. Reports I have received from my district show that the average yearly compensation paid rural carriers is $1,028, and the net amount per year received by each carrier, after deducting expenses for horse feed, repairs of vehicles, and depreciation of and interest on equipment necessary for the work and furnished by the carrier, is but $463. On this magnificent sum the carrier must support himself and those dependent upon him throughout the year.

The Rural Mail Service is of the most practical and valuable assistance to the farmers of the district I have the honor to represent and to the rural population of the entire country. There is no good reason under the sun why the farmers of this country should not be entitled to as good Postal Service as their brethren in the towns and cities of this land. And there is no good reason why the rural carriers should not be proportionately as well paid as the city carrier who delivers mail to the city man in his office, factory, or home. The fact is that the present underpaid rural carrier has a much more responsible and difficult daily work to perform than the city carrier, who receives relatively more than twice as much compensation. The rural carrier is obliged to be out in all kinds of weather. He must travel over rough and ofttimes uncertain country roads. Through the blighting heat and the blistering san of summer days and through the storms and snows of winter weeks he must as best he can make his way over his long and frequently lonesome route. Altogether unlike the city carrier he has no near refuge from the winds and the mins and the snow, but must often suffer the severest exposures in the performance of his duties.

If the Democratic Party desires to economize in its administration of the Government, as has been suggested in this debate, it occurs to me that this is unquestionably the wrong place to begin the practice of economy. The cry of economy comes with poor grace from any party when made to deprive the underpaid and overworked of a relatively fair compensation for their services. In other employments additional work is followed by additional compensation. If the work of a postmaster or postal clerk is increased his salary is increased. and duties of a man in an office or shop is added to his salary is likewise increased. Although the adoption of the parcelpost system has brought a greatly increased amount of work to the rural mail carrier and his labors have been added to as the limit of the weight of packages has been increased from 20 to 50 pounds and will be further made more difficult when the Limit is raised to 100 pounds, as I anticipate it soon will be, the rural carrier is expected to continue faithfully at work with practically no increased compensation.

The inadequate, unreasonable, and unfair salary paid rural carriers should be substantially increased. This increase of salary should be provided for now and in this bill. It should be such an increase as to provide for them a compensation fairly proportionate to that paid other employees in the Postal Service who may be required to perform similarly difficult and re-

The rural carriers six days in each week bring cheer to thousands of country homes with news from neighbors and letters from near and dear ones. They it is who are rendering splendid service in bringing closer together the producer and the consummer. To them we may safely look to eliminate many of the items of the present high cost of living. Through their assistance the farmers are being freed from the graft and the grasp of the great express companies of the country. They are, as I have met and known them in the West, a brave, intelligent, highly responsible, and faithful body of men. They are men far more than worthy of the hire they are now receiving. owe to our own sense of fairness, and we owe it to them and to those whom they serve on their daily rounds, to provide for them adequate and relatively reasonable compensation for the services they are rendering the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there abjection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. I heartily favor a reasonable increase in rural carriers' compensation. I have long advocated additional compensation for service upon the long routes. Many routes in my district extend over a distance of more than 30 miles; some are as long as 32 miles. Standard routes are 24 miles, and a carrier on such a route receives the same pay as one who carries the mail over 32 or more miles. I think distance should be taken into consideration.

I have repeatedly introduced bills providing for extra pay on the long routes, and I hope a rule will be brought in to allow such a provision in the bill. The rural carrier now has an such a provision in the bill. The rural carrier now has an added burden in the shape of parcel post. Cost of maintenance and equipment has increased, and justice requires a recognition of this fact.

Unanimous consent was asked by Mr. Rubey, Mr. Allen, Mr. Barton, Mr. Francis, Mr. Rupley, Mr. Smith of Maryland, Mr. FALCONER, Mr. HENSLEY, Mr. BELL of Georgia, and Mr. TREAD-

WAY to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Rubey; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ALEN; the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Barron; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Francis; the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]; the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rupley; the gentleman gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Bell; and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Treadway, ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] should interpose with a point of order against the amendment offered to this bill. The rural carriers are the least paid for the services they render than perhaps any other servant in the employ of the Government. It is one of the most popular services rendered and serves a most important function. work is constantly increasing and will continue to do so.

Because of the parcel post, very much has been added to the labor of these men, and as the parcel post is constantly growing in popularity, the work for the rural carriers must necessarily increase. Therefore their wages ought to be increased in proportion to the great service they render to the country. It many instances they have had to secure additional equipmenthorses, wagons, and harness—for the purpose of performing the duties imposed upon them because of the increase of work. I do hope that before the bill is passed some ample provision will be made in it for the remuneration of these men because of the extra services they are required to render the public.
Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.
Mr. BARKLEY. How much does the gentleman think ought to be the compensation of the rural carriers?

Mr. CULLOP. I offered an amendment that their pay should be increased $250 per annum, because of the additional work for the upkeep of their equipment. This increase is reasonable and just and has merit.

Mr. BARKLEY, Making it $1,350 per annum? Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and I do not think that is too much. I think that was a very reasonable increase, and for that reason offered it, and I hoped the House would see fit to adopt it and increase their salary for the increased services they will be required to render because of the parcel post. I regret a point of order was made against it.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley], in charge of this bill, has assured the House at an early date we shall have an opportunity to vote on a measure giving an increase of pay to the men engaged in this branch of the public service. I shall for one welcome this opportunity. I believe the laborer is worthy of the hire. These men endure hardships and through all the seasons of the year make their daily rounds serving the public. Their duties will multiply yearly because of the ever-increasing population and business which must necessarily ensue. With the enlarged demands of the public service follows the increasing labors as a natural consequence.

Now, because a man is engaged in a public duty is no reason why he should not receive a compensation commensurate with the duty he is to perform. A public servant should always be paid a fair remuneration for the services rendered and the hardships endured. In this case that is not done, and we should see to it that it is done. I insist here is a case of merit, one which appeals to us for justice and we should grant the appeal.

True another part of this bill provides for an increase, but the increase proposed is not sufficient and is wholly inadequate and hence I hope the point of order will be withdrawn and that the increase proposed by my amendment granted. If we do this, we will perform a duty which the conditions require and one which the public will approve.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the Postal Service, office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, after line 22, insert the following paragraph:

"All persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service in the Civil War, either in the Federal or Confederate Army, shall be exempt from any age limitation in the selection of fourth-class postmasters, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such office."

Mr. MANN. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. Mr. FINLEY. I trust that the gentleman will not make the point of order. The Civil War has been over many years. Here is an effort in this year 1914 to give to these old men, where they are physically and mentally qualified, an exemption. I believe that the Federal soldiers have it under the general law. This amendment is offered by the gentleman from Tennessee from Maryland, Mr. Smith; the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. so as to place the Confederate veterans under the same rule as Hensley; the gentleman from Washington, Mr. Falconer; the applies to the Federal veterans, and I wish to congratulate the so as to place the Confederate veterans under the same rule as gentleman from Tennessee for offering the amendment. It is such an amendment as should have been made long ago. There is no question to-day or difference among the people in all sections of the country. The majority of the Members who are here were either born after the Civil War or they were children at the time of the war.

I was one of the men born the first year of the war-1861. I want to say that I am sure there are very few old soldiers on this floor, but I do not believe there is one anywhere who would object to this amendment.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. I will.

Mr. COX. I am for the amendment, but I want to ask the gentleman for information-either the gentleman from South Carolina or the gentleman from Tennessee. Under the Executive order issued by President Wilson last spring all fourth-class postmasters paid less than $180 a year are not required to submit to a written competitive examination.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Now. in that particular class of offices, if the salary pays less than $180 a year, does the age of 65 obtain?

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that it does. Mr. HOUSTON. It does not, I understand; I do not think so. If I understand the gentleman from Tennessee correctly, under the Executive order issued by President Wilson last spring, where the salary is less than $180 per annum men over 65 years of age can be appointed to that class and grade of offices where the salary is less than $180.

Mr. HOUSTON. I so understand. Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentlema If the gentleman will permit, I will offer this suggestion: Under the Executive order issued by President Wilson, where the compensation is less than $500 a year the age limit does not apply. It is only at offices paying more than $500 a year where the limitation applies.

Mr. FINLEY. This proposed amendment will include offices paying more than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, but I simply gave that Mr. FINLEY. It is a very proper amendment, particularly at this time, and I do not believe that any Federal soldier, I care not who he is, would make objection to it here; and that being true, I know of no one who would be warranted in making an objection when the men on the other side of the firing line in the Civil War would not make it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. I understand the only disqualification that an ex-Confederate soldier would have would be his age at this time. Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

BUTLER. Is not that subject to Executive order?

Could it not be remedied by an Executive order?

Mr. FINLEY. Well, we can remedy it here.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, and I have no objection to it; but is it not within the power of the President of the United States to remedy it?

Mr. FINLEY. The law exempts the Federal soldier.
Mr. BUTLER. The law exempts the Federal soldier?
Mr. FINLEY. That is my understanding. The purpose of this amendment is to place the Confederate soldier on a parity, subject to his having the physical and mental ability.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about the law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a supersection of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not make the point of order which has been reserved. against this amendment. I think it a most reasonable and just provision to ingraft into the law of the land that men of this age who were in the Army, no matter whether it was the Federal or the Confederate Army, should be at least relieved of the age limitation. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have in the Revised Statutes of the United States to-day this provision:

That persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds received or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to the civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity for the proper discharge of the duties of such office.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not go to that tent. These men are given preference by that statute who were in the Federal Army, who are within the qualifications here set out; but the purpose of the amendment only goes to the extent that men who were either in the Federal or Confederate Army shall not be debarred from holding fourth-class post offices by virtue of their having reached the age of 65 years,
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman quote the statute?

Mr. HOUSTON. I read it.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman read it so softly we did not hear it. Will the gentleman again read it? We want to hear it.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is the provision of the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 1754-I have not the section before me, but I have an excerpt from it in the postal regulations-

That persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds received or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to the civil offices: Provided, That they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

The statute I have read made a preference in behalf of Federal soldiers. We do not ask for a preference for soldiers in this amendment, but we only ask that these old veterans of either Army shall have an even chance and that they shall not be debarred because of the fact that they have reached the age of 65 years. Under the civil-service rule they will be required to pass the examination as all others are required to do. At present, under the rules of the department, they are not admitted even to examination after they have reached the age of 65 years. I think it but just and right and proper, because there are many of these old men, although aged and decrepit, are yet fully competent, mentally and physically, to discharge the duties of a fourth-class post office. Many of them are filling these offices now, men who are maimed and crippled and going on crutches, who are not able to make a living otherwise, and yet are competent to act as postmasters, and are making the most satisfactory postmasters in the service. The amendment provides that they shall have a chance to take the examination, and, if they have the qualifications, not to be debarred on account of their age.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, the time has come when no man in this House will raise an objection to extending this kind of privilege to a Confederate soldier any more readily than he would to a Federal soldier. I hope the bitterness and ani-mosities of the war have passed away. I think an era of peace and brotherly love prevails all over this country, and the soldiers of both armies should at least be put upon the same footing.

Mr. RUSSELL. I agree with all the gentleman says, and I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the postmaster of this House to-day is a one-armed Confederate soldier and a man of splendid ability?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; and a man that would not be permitted to take an examination for a fourth-class post office on account of his age.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee correctly understands the existing law. This matter has been up before the House a good many times. The existing law gives a preference to the Federal soldiers who were discharged from service in the Army during the Civil War because of wounds, and so forth, incurred in the service. It has long since been practically of no importance whatever. There are very few soldiers now who were discharged from that service-practically none, and there have not been for years-that are competent to attend to the work. The law does not apply to Federal soldiers generally, as it is proposed to have it apply here both to Federal and Confederate soldiers.

This is a matter wholly within the power of the President. He can change these regulations if he chooses. He has already changed the regulations concerning fourth-class post offices, and can make further changes if he wishes to do so. I am not willing to break down the law by making these preferences one way or another, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That if the revenues of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1915, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MOON and Mr. TREADWAY rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

After this provision in the bill there are a number of other sections-some eighteen of them, I believe-three or four of which, on motions made during consideration of other parts of the bill which have been passed over, have already been incorporated into the act. Other sections in the bill are subject to the point of order. It is well understood, of course, by every Member of this House that you can not under the rules of the House change general legislation on an appropriation bill. That is the effort, in this instance, as to the sections that I have named. These are very important sections. They affect the weighing of the mails, the diversion of the mails, and measure the computation or pay for various employees, and one section provides for the purchase of cars for the purpose of experiment, in order to determine whether the Government itself can carry the mails cheaper, as it has been asserted it can do, by $30,000,000 in this way than in some other way.

There is a section that provides for the increase of the pay of rural letter carriers and a number of other sections that I will not mention that are before you that are of great importance. There is one that provides for taking out of the civil service and making subject to appointment by the Postmaster General all assistant postmasters. It is impossible for the House to give consideration to those sections without a special rule changing the general rule of the House in order to make them in order. By the direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads I submitted a rule incorporating all of these sections, which was referred to the Committee on Rules with the request that a rule be brought before the House in order that the House itself might determine whether it would consider this most important legislation on this appropriation bill or whether it would not.

Now, for 40 years every important measure affecting the postal affairs of the Government of the United States has, in the main, been carried upon the Post Office appropriation bill.

The original proposition for rural free-delivery service, the postal savings bank, the parcel post, the reclassification act, the antigag act, the city-delivery propositions, all were carried upon this bill. It can not be said by the Committee on Rules which up to this moment has failed to make a report upon these sections and upon the rule submitted-that it has not been a custom of this House to present and discuss upon an appropriation new law

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. CAMPBELL, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee does not charge dereliction of duty upon the whole Committee on Rules. I can say for the members of the Committee on Rules who sit on this side of the aisle that we have been ready to meet and to take up the rule submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee ever since the day it was referred to the committee, but for some reason or other a meeting of the committee has not been called by the chairman of the committee or by any other In fact, demands have been made for meetings of the Committee on Rules for the consideration of other important matters, and for some mysterious reason there has been no meeting up to this hour. I am ready now-and I am sure that other members of the committee are ready-to report to make it in order to increase the pay of rural mail carriers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to conclude what desire to say upon this subject. It will take only a few

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire? Mr. MOON. It will take me only 5 or 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to criticize the Committee on Rules; particularly none to criticize the gentlemen who say they have not had opportunity to consider this But we might as well be frank in this House. would have been no objection at all to this important legislation, every particle of which is asked for and demanded by the Post Office Department, save one or two sections. But for those other sections, which were incorporated in accordance with the judgment of the committee in this bill, there would have been, beyond question, a consideration of them by the Committee on Rules and a report made here. The objection was chiefly to section 6, which provided that the Postmaster General might appoint assistant postmasters.

is true or not. I am inclined to think that perhaps it is not true. I hope that the President of the United States has not descended to the point where he will demand, as the Executive of this Government, that men shall vote in accordance with his will and not in accordance with their own on this floor. I can not believe that to be true. [Applause.]

But, sir, there have been other influences. There is nobody in public life that I think more of, personally, than the Postmas ter General. He is a most estimable, conscientious, and able man, and he has made a splendid Postmaster General, and I have upheld him in the past and propose in the future to uphold and sustain him wherever I can. But I think that when we consider the differences between the coordinate branches of this Government, the power of each, and the necessity of each to refrain from interfering with the functions of each other under the Constitution, the Postmaster General made a slight mistake when he addressed an open letter to me, as chairman of this committee, in opposition to that section. It was well that he might voice to me personally or by letter, or to members of the committee, his objection; but when that objection has gone so far that the Committee on Rules, or the Democratic part of it, shall make a visit to him and take the dictation of the department and decline to report a rule here, it is going a little further than I am willing to see a Democrat or anybody else go. [Applause.]

I went before the Committee on Rules—I mean the Democratic portion of it—and I said; "Gentlemen, I believe that this section 6 ought to pass; that it ought to be the law. We have 290,000 men in the public service in the Post Office Department to-day, and, in my judgment, not one man out of fifty, scarcely, is a Democrat. They have been covered in by civil service, and that civil service must be fraudulent." I said that these postmasters who were covered by Executive order of 1910 for the most part, and 200 of them covered in two weeks before Mr. Wilson was inaugurated as President, ought not to remain there in the interest of good and honest and efficient public service, and I will ask you to amend this section that gives the control and power to the Postmaster General to make these appointments, and provide that these men, many of whom the Republican inspectors in their reports have declared to be incompetent, shall be subject to civil-service examination, just exactly like the President, in his modification of President Taft's order, made fourth-class postmasters subject to examination.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Tennessee dropped one remark inadvertently. So far as I know, there has been no visit of the Committee on Rules to the Postmaster General.

Mr. MOON. I know there has been. [Applause.] A special committee of two.

Mr. POU. I take issue with the gentleman. There has been no such visit, in the sense that the gentleman means.

Mr. MOON. Oh, I do not mean to say that they went down there to take orders

Mr. POU. Certainly; but the truth might as well come out. Mr. MOON. I have no objection to their visit.

Mr. POU. The only thing that I know of that has taken place is that the Post Office Department, as the gentleman knows, favored certain items in the rule and desired favorable action; and I think there were two members of the committee who talked over the matter generally with the Postmaster General

Mr. MOON. Why, I was there when that committee was appointed, and it went for the purpose of getting the opinion of the Postmaster General mainly on section 6. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. May I have five minutes?
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not censure this committee too severely. I am going to give them credit for everything. I said to them, "If you can not give a favorable report on section 6, I am not going to insist upon a report on other matters in the bill that I think of less consequence." Thus far I may be, in a measure, responsible for no report; but the vital question, in my judgment, was the one involved in section 6! There ought to be a report upon that question. And as the time has been given me, I want to say briefly that the attacks made by the press upon the Post Office Committee, to the effect that I do not know the origin of that objection. It has been stated upon the floor of this House and elsewhere that the President was utterly opposed to it, and therefore the Members under his direction and control have offered opposition before the Committee on Rules, or before the Democratic portion of it, to the consideration of this question. I do not know whether that

What is a spoilsman, that they speak of so glibly? Is he a man who is a common plunderer and thief, who wants, on account of political advantage, to do wrong and injustice to anyone of the opposite politics who is in office? Or is he one who believes in the honest enforcement of the laws that exist, in a civil service that has merit in it, in a civil service that gives equal opportunity to all men of all parties and all conditions in life? Has it come to this, that when gentlemen inveigh against a spoils system within the alleged merit system, by which men of one party alone can get office, that when a man demands that his party, ordered and decreed by the people at the ballot box to take charge of this Government, shall have a voice in it in the administrative departments, he is to be denounced from headquarters as a spoilsman and a practical plunderer?

Mr. Chairman, I believe in an honest civil service. believe in the life tenure for offices of any kind. In this civilservice arrangement there ought to be a term of years. Men ought to go in who are capable and shown to be capable under examination. They ought to be kept for a reasonable term of They ought to be reexamined time and again. ought to go out of this service before they reach the age of inefficiency, to the end that the Government may get the best service out of its employees, and that the employees themselves may have the advantage of going out with the experience they have had and take their chances with their fellow men in the walks of life, in order to avoid the payment by this Government of a civil pension. I believe that no party called to power can, with justice to the people, enforce those principles and policies of government that the people desire to have enforced with the enemies of the party in power in all the high and the low places of Government. I have nothing against these assistant post-masters. There are but two of them on the earth that I have ever seen. Both are very clever men. One is a Democrat and one is a Republican. Both are competent. I have no objection to their remaining in office, but they ought to be subjected to the examination because of the manner in which they were covered into the service for life.

In my opinion the President of the United States is one of the most scholarly and accomplished statesmen that ever held that exalted office. Surely, he is entitled to the respect and confidence of the American people for the great work that he initiated on the question of the tariff and the currency, and the laws that he has just spoken of in his great message. Surely, the work that he has done commends him to the people of the United States. He is a great Democrat and a great man. Let me tell you that no President, however great, however powerful, can, for the purpose of enforcing his policies, directly or indirectly, for a moment attempt to influence, according to his will, another coordinate branch of the Government without bringing his administration into disrepute. [Applause.]

We said of the Republican Party that you had no judgment of your own, that you are creating a government of commissions and of bureaus, of petty chiefs; you multiply everywhere and under all conditions official positions, for which the people must pay out of their taxes. That cry went out throughout the Republic. The great questions upon which the battle between the parties was fought, in my opinion, had no more effect than that one proposition that the Government of the people of the United States was being administered by one man instead of one executive, one legislative, and one judicial branch of the

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am not asserting, and do not want to be understood as asserting, that the President of the United States is now pursuing the policy that we claim the Republican Party did, and upon which it fell from power. But I say on the threshold that, for want of proper consideration on the part of the committee of the rights of this House, we face

Do you tell me that with 140 Democratic majority on this floor, with 90 per cent of the offices of this Government held by Republicans under a system that was not a merit system but was a system of favoritism and prejudice instead of one of efficiency, that with this vast number of Democrats there are as many tender-feet gentlemen as we find here actually advising you to let alone that section because the department does not want you to pass it? Whether there is any merit in the proposition or not, we must preserve the integrity, the dignity, and power of the legislative branch of the Government or you will sink lower in the estimation of a great and virtuous people than you are now. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE, Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON. If I have time.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I notice that section 9 provides for a small increase for the rural carriers. It is true, it is a pittance. Does the failure of the Rules Committee to act on these sections take out of this bill this small increase for the rural carriers?

Mr. MOON. It takes out that and everything that follows, beginning with section 2, providing a point of order is made against it; but we shall bring in these measures in a legislative bill later, not subject, as an appropriation bill is, to a point of

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, confession is good for the soul when it is honest. We on this side of the aisle have known for a long time that the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives was not located across the aisle from us, but was at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue in the White House. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Tennessee has just admitted as much, so far as the matters that he has discussed are concerned. But it is to be regretted, Mr. Chairman, that the first condemnation of the President of the United States from the Democratic side of this House comes upon a matter where the President should be commended rather than condemned for trying to preserve the civil service of the United States against the spoilsmen of the Democratic Party.

The gentleman criticized the Committee on Rules, and justly so; but as my colleague, Mr. Campbell, has said, the Republican membership in that committee is not to be charged with that criticism. We were ready to meet at any time and consider the several propositions involved in the gentleman's rule, and the Republican members would have been glad to have supported some of those provisions.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LENROOT. Yes.
Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman be willing to give us rule giving the letter carriers the increase as provided in the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly will. Will the gentleman's party do as mucl.? Will the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules be willing to bring in a rule making that section in order? The Republican members will vote for it, if you do so. [Applause on the Republican side.] But so far as that criticism of the Committee on Rules is concerned, you Democrats had a caucus last night, and you discussed several questions. did you not discuss these questions, if you are free and inde-Why did you not pass upon the question of increasing the salary of the rural carriers? Does anyone believe that if the Democratic caucus last night had determined that no point of order should be raised against this section increasing the pay of the rural carriers that the gentleman from New York would have made the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would have I would have, regardless of the Democratic caucus. I hope that satisfies the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Democratic caucus had passed such a resolution and the gentleman from New York had done what he says he would do, does anyone believe that the Democratic Committee on Rules would not have immediately brought in a rule making the section in order?

Of course, we all know that that would have been done; but, Mr. Chairman, crocodile tears were shed by gentleman after gentleman upon the Democratic side half an hour ago when they each got up and said, "We are all in favor of increasing the pay of rural carriers, but we regret the gentleman from New York has made the point of order," making the gentleman from New York the goat

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LENROOT. Making the gentleman from New York the goat, when it is the Democratic majority that must stand the responsibility. How many of you gentlemen who got up this afternoon and said you were in favor of that proposition got up in your caucus last night and tried to bring it to an issue? Were there any of you?

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). No.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course you did not; but you are willing to get the benefit of your individual speeches trying to make your constituents believe that you stand for these things, but you were not willing to do the thing that would have brought the increase to the rural carriers. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, there are some provisions in this proposed rule that I and my Republican colleagues would oppose. There are other provisions of which we would be in I should favor attaching to an appropriation bill legislation that is so intimately connected with the appropriation itself that it can not well be separated, and that was exactly the case with reference to the rural carriers. And I now and here challenge the Democratic Members of the Committee on Rules to come out this afternoon and bring in a rule making this section increasing the pay of rural carriers in order, and if they fail to do it you Democrats must take the responsi-bility as a party and not blame the gentleman from New York

[Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] should not complain where the Democratic majority is located. It is immaterial to him whether it is located in this House on this side or whether it is located in the White House at the other end of the Avenue

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Because he voted for two important legislative propositions submitted by the Democratic Party in this Congress, so he is with the Democratic Party when he votes, however much he may differ from it where he sits. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman name those propositions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The tariff bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not vote for the tariff bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For the currency bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Well, the gentleman wanted to vote for Mr. FITZGERALD.

the tariff bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield once more? the Democratic Party was located on the gentleman's side there would be some possibility of Republicans appealing to them, but when it is located at the White House anything we say upon this floor can have no effect whatever. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, nobody expects the appeals made by Republicans in this House to have any effect on legislation. The Republican Party was in absolute and unlimited control of the Government for 16 years, and at the end of that period they received the most thorough defeat from an outraged public that any political party ever got in the history of the country. Their position in this House is not to regulate and control legislation. If they wish to understand what the country meant, it was that they should sit quietly by and learn how a great political party, when it comes into power, can carry out the pledges it makes to the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

The gentleman from Wisconsin is one of the original progressive insurgents in the House of Representatives, one of that little band that year after year sat here and protested against the Committee on Rules bringing in special rules making legis-lation in order upon appropriation bills and giving Members an opportunity to vote for items in bills in which they were peculiarly interested. What is the difference between the Speaker and two or three Members appointed by him under former conditions agreeing to a rule that would bring legisla-tion before this House and the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin asserts he is willing with other Members of the Committee on Rules to bring before the House a proposition in which he is interested but is unwilling to bring before the House the other provisions in which other Members of the House are interested?

It so happens that I agree with him about the provision as to the assistant postmasters, but for a different reason. It is not to protect the Democratic assistant postmasters that I am opposed to the provision taking them out of the civil service, but, if the provision be not adopted, a great many men in the gentleman's party will be protected. Therefore he is opposed to taking these men out of the classified service. I stand on a higher and more patriotic ground. I am a real civil-service I know that a great many of those men are so incompetent that they will not remain long in an administration that insists upon competent men discharging their duties; but I am not attempting to protect incompetent Democrats, and I have no desire to protect any Democrat covered into the classified service who is not required to take the same test any other man would take when placed in the service.

This talk about the rural free-delivery compensation is bun-combe on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Len-ROOT]. Men are in favor of that provision because they think it is an important matter politically. I do not criticize them for that reason; but, Mr. Chairman, somebody must take some responsibility in this House in standing against the demands of the Government employees for increase of compensation. I believe that the postal employees, on the whole, are sufficiently well paid. I remember the long struggle that took place some years ago to obtain the increase of pay, not for any one par-ticular branch of the service, but for the postal employees generally. Although some of it was done in a Republican House, it required the persistent urging and insistence of the Democrats in the House to secure the classification and adjustment of the pay

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask for a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-

GERALD] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not only safe, but there is some politics in it, for the gentleman from Wisconsin to challenge the Committee on Rules to go out and bring in this rule. Think of the gentleman from Wisconsin, in the minority, challenging the Committee on Rules to bring in a rule, when he was one of the early pioneers who portrayed the Committee on Rules and its tyrannical and drastic power as one of the greatest abuses of our whole system.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman explain, before he sits down, why the city carrier should receive more than a rural carrier, who goes out through the rain and the sunshine and furnishes his own horse and buggy? Mr. FITZGERALD. I could not do that before I sit down,

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; you can not explain it. Nobody can.
Mr. FITZGERALD. To be perfectly frank about these matters, one of the difficulties about adjusting compensation of postal employees is the very markedly different conditions under which they labor. From the information I have received I believe that some adjustment, or readjustment, should be made of the compensation of rural carriers; that there are some places and that there are some routes where the compensation is inadequate; and there are a great many where the men are living in a luxury they never heretofore dreamed of living in. And that is not true alone of the rural carriers; it is true of the city carrier. Letter carriers in cities of 75,000 population and upward—or, rather, in first and second class offices, which frequently are in cities of much smaller population—receive the same compensation. It is a farce to compare the conditions of the carrier in a city like New York or Chicago with the conditions in a city of 100,000 or of 50,000 popucago with the conditions in a city of 100,000 or of 50,000 population. The cost of living is infinitely different. The conditions of life are infinitely different. Where a man gets $1,200 for service in one of these smaller communities he is amply paid. Contrasted with men in similar walks of life in a few of the larger cities, he is hardly sufficiently paid.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this is the year for the Democratic Party to be indulging in wholesale increase of compensation. This provision only meant a difference of $50 a year to each individual, but it meant $2,700,000 added to the expense of the Postal Department. Among the pledges made by the Democratic Party in the last campaign, sometimes somebody should remember that one of them was a pledge to conduct the Government economically. I hope it will be thought of more and more before the session is ended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

Mr. Chairman, this is very entertaining to me. I remember so well how that side of the House insisted upon two great reforms of the rules.

We were going to have a provision by which any gentleman could move to discharge a committee from the further consideration of a bill and promptly bring it before the House for a I wonder that some gentleman interested in rural carriers has not found that provision in the rules and made use of it and brought this matter before the House for a vote.

And we were told in the days of Speaker Cannon that the only way in which a matter could be brought before the House was for some humble—they always used the term "humble"—Member of the House to seek out the Speaker's room and, with hat in hand, make a prayerful appeal to the Speaker. We had that all corrected by a new Committee on Rules, and now we learn that while the Speaker's room used to be at least a convenient place to make the convenient place to the convenie venient place to make the appeal, where you might hold your hat in hand while making the appeal, it is in order now to move up the Avenue—to the other end of the Avenue—leave your hat on the table, and beg permission to ask the Secretary of the President if you may ask the President for the right to bring a matter before the House. [Applause and laughter.]

What has become of all these needed reforms? Twelve gentlemen in one lump this afternoon received permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD to show how necessary it was to adopt this amendment, and in the time given for debate not a single Member of this House spoke in opposition to the proposition. A man from the outside coming in here would have said, "It is unanimous. Everybody is in favor of it."

[Laughter.]

Everybody is in favor of it in their own districts. But has no one the nerve or the brightness here under the reformed rules to get a vote upon the proposition in the House-a proposition that everybody favors, except one gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD? [Laughter.] Has he become greater than Cannon, the Speaker? [Renewed laughter.] Is he the one now to whom we all appeal? Everybody in the House in favor of a proposition, the Democratic majority all favoring it with one exception, but without capacity to bring it before the House for a vote! It is either without capacity or else it is ordered not to do so by the President of the United States.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I congratulate the President upon his stand upon the proposition. If I were in his place I would be opposed to the proposition concerning the destruction of the civil service, and if I were in his place and had a subservient majority [laughter on the Republican side] anxious to do a thing, but without the will to do it; afraid that if they forced these appointments they would not get them [renewed laughter]; fearful that if they overrode the President he would not give them the jobs—if, I say, I had such a sub-servient majority I would do what the President has done. I would tell you, "You dare not do it; you must not do it; you will not do it." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not believe in accepting rumors as facts. I do not believe that any positive proof has been presented to the committee as to the intervention of the President of the United States in the duties of any committee. If he has intervened. he has done so in a good cause. If the Postmaster General of the United States has seen fit to emphasize that efficiency in the service is a greater consideration than the filling of offices by men who are seeking them, then the Postmaster General of the United States, in my opinion, is to be commended and not condemned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I take it for granted-and I challenge any opposition to this statement-that the vast majority of the people in this country are more interested in an efficient public service than in filling What kind of patriotism is it that seeks for an office and makes that the sole or principal excuse for voting? Is the follower of a party to be concerned only with the seeking of a Is the voter in this land to forget entirely that petty reward? principle is at stake, and is his whole consideration of party victory to be bounded by the mere consideration that when the victory is won some small, petty reward may come to him or to a friend?

I believe that while there may be merit in the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the committee that has this bill under consideration, to the effect that there are defects in the civil-service law and that there have at times been demotions instead of promotions, it is because human institutions are not No man is impeccable and no man is infallible, and it is for us to correct the mistakes if we can, but we should not go at it in a bullheaded way.

I think the people of the country are more concerned, for instance, in the passage of this bill, carrying hundreds of millions of dollars, in order that the postal work of the Government may proceed, rather than in a dispute between men here as to who shall occupy public office. [Applause.] And let me say that there may be merit in what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] says; I hope abuses will be corrected. Men have said to me that they have worked here in the departments in Washington; that they have shown great ability and earnestness in the discharge of their duties, and by partisan influence they have been demoted, thus recognizing partisan influence which spoke for those less worthy. Well, I trust that the Democrats in charge of the different departments in Washington will recognize merit, and if injustice has been done, that injustice shall no longer be done, but merit shall be the supreme guide which shall govern them in promoting or demoting men in the service. I take it, however, that subterraneously, be-neath an honest attempt to correct abuses, there is a hungering for office; and I am one who has always been a believer in the civil-service law and its absolutely honest and just enforcement. I believe that there is no greater power in the world to debauch politics and make political parties ineffective than office mongering. It is the thing that brought about a condition in this Congress back in the years before we had genuine civilservice reform, when men elected by the people were hampered in the discharge of their duties by the constant pestering of men who sought public office. Read the debates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Read the debates and you will find that Senators and Representatives were longing for the opportunity to lay down this burden that oppressed them, were impatient for the opportunity to do something for the entire people rather than to be concerned alone with a horde of office seekers.

Gentlemen upon this side, we speak about our party being in power. We must remember the fact that power does not give unbridled license to do as we please; and, if we are in power, we must remember that we are a minority party. The Progressives and the Republicans combined would have left us no opportunity to obtain the power that we possess to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, in any district this great consideration for a job does not engage the time and attention of the voters. What care they who occupies the position of assistant postmaster, whether it be Jones or Brown or Smith, if the man in the place is efficient and able to discharge the duties of his office? No one cares. We should recognize that

In the last Democratic platform it was said that merit and ability should be the standard of appointment and promotion, rather than service rendered to a political party. Promises must not be like pie crust, easily broken. We must remember that a pledge is a pledge and a promise is a promise. I recall just now the words of a Democratic Senator, George Pendleton, a man who, I think, has written his name high upon the scroll of honor, because in conjunction with men in the Republican Party he served the public purpose and the public good by giving to this country the civil-service law. [Applause.] Listen to what he said at the time:

The prolific parent of fraud, corruption, and brutality lies in the general effect of the intrigue, solicitation, and coercion for these offices without stable tenure.

I believe it was a gentleman from Rhode Island, Thomas Allen Jenckes, who came to this House in 1863, who made a comprehensive study of this question of administrative reform and laid the basis for the great work that was accomplished in other days; under the generous influence and aid of such Presidents as Grant, Hayes, and Garfield the reforms contended for by Jenckes found favor, though his bill failed of passage because of the unpreparedness of the public mind. And remember that it was a bullet from the pistol of a disappointed office seeker, Guiteau, that stirred this country to action and made them recognize that the public service should be open to all, and that was true Americanism. [Applause.] That is what gave an impetus to civil-service reform and led to the passage of the Pendleton law. To-day we are a long way removed from the time when the slogan "To the victors belong the spoils" was emblazoned on the Democratic banner.

My friends, let us strengthen that law. Let us not miss the opportunity to keep it inviolate in order that we may keep our promises to the people. [Applause.] Let us keep back forever the forbidding spectacle of political vassalage. The officeholder who keeps his place through servility to his patron is a slave and without manhood or independence. The Representative whose official nod, dictated by party organization, is responsible for the filling of an office must recognize a weakening of his position as a man and a real representative of all the people.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the amendment? The CHAIRMAN. To strike out the last word.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not but feel just a little bit tolerant of the gratification of the Republicans over what they are pleased to term a division of Democrats. There is the old saying that hope long deferred maketh the heart sick, and they have been sick so long that I am willing they should get what little consolation they may by virtue of this debate.

I was somewhat amused by some of the things said on both sides of the House. I have often observed that most of the denunciation of the Executive for legislative interference is indulged in by gentlemen only when the position taken happens to be contrary to their own. Whenever the Executive agrees with a particular Member of the legislative body, why, then the expression of the view of the Executive is a proper performance of his high office, and only when it serves to interfere with such Member's particular program is it subject to severe censure and denunciation. [Applause.]

For my part, I fail to see anything that gives rise to the least excuse for criticizing the action of the Executive. I have opposed and I shall always oppose the putting of legislative riders on appropriation bills by a party that controls the Government.

[Applause.]

I can understand it being done by a party having control of only one branch, where it desires to force a concession from a hostile Executive, but I can not understand any reason or excuse for doing it on the part of a party that has complete control of the Government. And I can not understand it, especially when urged by a chairman of a committee that has legislative jurisdiction as well as appropriating power.

It is not necessary that you shall have a special rule now to make these reforms in the postal laws, because the very committee that brings to this House this appropriation bill has, under the rules of the House, the power to bring in legislative matters amending the postal laws in all the particulars that may be desired.

Mr. MOON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. MOON. Does not the gentleman know that the only opportunity for this legislation is on appropriation bills? That that has been the history of previous postal legislation?

Mr. SHERLEY. That only shows how badly we have acted in the past and how far afield we are from the true position.

Mr. MOON. That is practical politics.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is too much practical politics in the whole proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. The gentleman knows that you can not get anything through the Senate that is not on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not willing to condemn a Democratic Senate in any such way.

Mr. MOON. You are insinuating that somebody attacks the President, and now you are insinuating that it is an attack on

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not insinuating anything; I am only stating what occurred on the floor of the House. For my part, I am not willing to sit silent and listen to what I believe to be an unjustifiable attack-criticism, if you like it, as a less offensive word-of the President of the United States. I have not talked with him, and I know only what I have seen in the press as to his views. I do not think that it is a subject for criticism for the Executive of the country to indicate that he does not desire to have put upon a great supply bill a provision that he does not agree to and then be forced to the alternative of either agreeing to such provision or vetoing the supply bill. I do not think we ought to put him in that position, Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman think it is a wise policy in view of our constitutional provision for the President to do any more than to perform his duty under the Constitution, as far as Congress is concerned, by sending a message expressing his views on public questions? I do not say that the President has

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman in this way: have never known a President that amounted to anything that did not have some real influence besides simply sending messages in the shape of policies of the party of which he was the leader. [Applause.] I know that the American people have never yet condemned a President because of taking an active part in shaping his party's position. What they condemn, when they have condemned, is the position taken. If that be wrong, he is properly subject to criticism. But is it fair to put up to him the alternative of vetoing a great supply bill or taking some one matter when we under our rules can pass it as a separate

Now, I submit to you another proposition: You come in here with a provision in regard to salaries of employees. It is a very simple and a very easy matter for you to thus increase the salaries of a class of employees. Few men in the consideration of a supply bill stop to think what the total means and where they are going. We ought to have in connection with such matters a consideration of them as separate proposals and not as riders on appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an honest civil service on merits, especially an honest civil service, and I believe that the country is ready for a change to an honest civil service. [Applause.]

The defense of this civil service here to-day by Republican Members is only a repetition of history. The Democrats at the close of Cleveland's adminstration made the same defense and here reverse their position. [Applause on the Republican side.] And now, when the tables are turned and the Republicans are retiring from control, to maintain their appointees they are upholding what they then spurned and condemned in the Democrats. [Applause.] The people are growing tired of one political party justifying its crimes by citing the wrongs of another political party. They are weary of political parties making a football of the civil service, and are ready to supplant subterfuge and pretense with an honest, open civil service upon merits.

As long as this civil service is maintained as a controlling system it will be administered as a spoils system, in disregard of merit and efficient service. Administered by a Republican administration, Republicans will be preferred and favored. Administered by a Democratic administration, Democrats will be favored and preferred; and all this, no matter under what administration, will be under the claim of impartial considera-tion upon merits. To maintain this civil service will postpone honest and good-faith civil service, with the spoils system perpetuated under the guise and cloak of merit.

Mr. Chairman, I know not what conditions prevail in other sections of the country, but I do know that we have most peculiar psychological conditions in Indiana. [Laughter.] I do know that we have a most remarkable mental phenomena there. [Laughter.] I do know that we have a most unusual exhibition of the varying powers and capacities of the human mind. explain: We have in Indiana a very intelligent people, both Republicans and Democrats. [Applause.] Children of both Democrats and Republicans go to school together and make the same grades and gain the same promotions and advancements. [Laughter and applause.] Democrats and Republicans attend church and divine worship together and maintain the same moral standard. Democrats and Republicans engage in business side by side and attain the same business and financial success. Democrats and Republicans are equal socially, morally, and intellectually, and in every respect save one—Democrats fall under this civil service to maintain their equality with other citizens of the State. And, as a consequence, less than 10 per cent of the civil-service employees are from the Democrats.

Whenever we question the sincerity and good faith of this sham civil service we are solemnly admonished of the "spoils system." Mr. Chairman, this system is more than the spoils system. It is the spoils system with all the contaminations of deceit, hypocrisy, sham, and false pretense. [Applause.] Under this system the victors not only take the spoils but they seize upon them with the hypocritical claim of rare piety and virtue and the exercise of equal and impartial justice. The man who even upholds this system is chargeable, as an accessory after the fact, with all the crimes of the decalogue against honest and good-faith dealing. He is guilty of subornation of deceit, subornation of hypocrisy, subornation of sham, and subornation of false pretense.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to participate in the administration of this civil service. I do not want to take part in its enforcement. I do not want to undertake its justification or defense. I do not want to answer for its discriminations and This civil service is an abomination in the its favoritisms. sight of the Lord, and honesty is not in it. [Applause.] I want a civil service upon merit, with practical examinations to ascertain the true qualifications and fitness to discharge the real duties to be performed. But, above all things, I want an honest, open, and good-faith civil service. I want a civil service in the administration of which you can look every man in the face, tell him the truth, and shame the devil. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes additional, Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection if I can get the five minutes which has been promised me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of debate has been limited. Is there objection? [After a pause.] There is none.

Mr. GRAY. I want a civil service under which you can stand on your honor and declare your manhood to the world. I despise the deceit, hypocrisy, sham, and false pretense of this so-called civil service. I charge that no man can long participate in its administration and either preserve his own respect or retain the respect of his fellow man. No man can be false in one thing and wholly honest in another thing. His falsity will in time permeate his whole general character, undermine his conscience, his moral strength, and his will power to uphold the truth and persevere in the policy to do right. I stand for a merit system, but if the time shall come when I must choose between a sham and dishonest so-called merit system and an honest, open partisan system, I will choose the honest partisan system and preserve my honor and self-respect. Honesty covers a multitude of sins, and I, for one, believe that it is the best policy.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee can be recognized for three minutes, after which time all the debate will be closed on the paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish to say to the Chair that the debate will not be closed on the paragraph, but that it will be closed on the amendment.

Mr. MOON. I thought I made the motion to close it on the paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The particular inquiry was addressed to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] as to what it was, and he said it was to strike out the last word-

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes, and am willing to wait until I can get it. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

SIMS] is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will be politically honest, at least on the present occasion. [Applause.] I voted for the Bartlett amendment to repeal the Executive order of President Taft placing fourth-class postmasters under the civil service, which was offered in the latter part of the last Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will suggest to the gentleman that I offered that amendment, and it was lost in the Senate.

Mr. SIMS. I voted to repeal it, and it was repealed in this House, but failed in the Senate. When President Wilson came into power he modified that order, and as he modified it I have tried to live up to it as far as I am concerned and I have not winked at it in any respect. I will place in the Record a letter that I received a few days ago from an able circuit judge in my district. It was dated the 10th of January, and on the 13th of January I replied to it before I knew a question of this kind was going to arise. I have written a hundred similar letters. I will ask your attention to it, as it expresses the views which I entertain. The following are the letters:

LEXINGTON, TENN., January 10, 1914.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, Washington, D. C.

Hon. T. W. Sims, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Sims: My kinsman, Mr. J. P. Vandyke, of Sardis, is thinking of undergoing an examination before the Civil Service Commission with a view of making application for appointment as postmaster at Sardis. He is a young man of excellent character and in all respects well qualified for the place, and is a Democrat. He stood two examinations some time ago for position in the Rural Mail Service, and his grade, at least in one of them, was much better than either of the other contestants, but in some mysterious way the place was given to the other or another of the contestants.

I merely refer to this by way of explaining the fact that he now feels a degree of uncertainty and anxiety respecting the matter of making the contest for the post office; or, in other words, Mr. Vandyke felt in respect to the former defeat as if preference had been given to his opponent because of him being a Republican.

Of course, in this instance, he would not have any reason to expect Republican partiality. However, it is a case of a burnt child dreading the fire. I have assured him, and I think correctly, that under the present arrangement no partiality will be shown on account of any political consideration whatever, and that it will be disposed of strictly upon a basis of merit. I wish you to write me something pertaining to the safeguards that are being thrown around such examinations and actions thereon as a protection against political partiality or against other improper influences. I am,

Hon. N. R. BARHAM, Lexington, Tenn.

JANUARY 13, 1914.

Hon. N. R. Barham, Lexington, Tenn.

Dear Judge: I have your letter of 10th with reference to the application of J. P. Vardyke for appointment as postmaster at Sardis, in your county. I note what you say about his having passed a satisfactory examination for rural carrier on previous occasions and was not appointed, although, as I infer, being entitled to it if his merits had only been considered. I must believe naturally, until undisputed facts convince me otherwise, that the civil-service tequirements under the Executive order of President Wilson as to the appointment of fourth-class postmasters will be lived up to in letter and spirit, and the applicants will be appointed upon the ratings made by them in the examination. It is true that there may be administrative or departmental reasons why the highest of the three from which the appointing power must choose should not be appointed, but these reasons ought to, and no doubt will, appear in the report made by the Civil Service Commission or the inspector who visits the locality. Under no circumstances ough these administrative and departmental reasons be arrived at from suggestions made by the Member of Congress in whose district the appointment is to be made. As postmasters are now being appointed under these rules and regulations no other matter should be considered, because the appointment is practically one for life.

I shall not be consulted and ought not to be consulted as to what the department should do in carrying out its duties as prescribed by its own rules and regulations. As far as I am concerned, I shall be no party to a mere pretense of maintaining and enforcing the merit system, when in fact as between those who may be highest on the eligible list an appointment should be made upon my suggestion in order that a political or personal friend of mine may be appointed upon assumed departmental and administrative reasons which are otherwise not apparent to the appointing power.

If there are no departmental or administrative reasons which in fact require the appointment of one other than the highest of the three on the eligible list, the department must find those reasons without any suggestion or influence of mine.

There is a general impression that the civil-service law was not administered under Republican rule in letter and spirit, and no such suspicion should attach to our Democratic administration, and therefore I shall not do anything to justify such a charge.

If Mr. Vandyke is highest of the three on the eligible list, he ought to be appointed, and certainly will be appointed so far as I am concerned.

Very truly, your friend.

Very truly, your friend,

T. W. SIMS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed on this paragraph and section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] moves that all debate be closed on the paragraph. Is there objection? Mr. TREADWAY. I trust the gentleman will give me an opportunity to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. MOON. He can offer an amendment to the section. Mr. TREADWAY. I also desire to discuss it.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can offer the amendment now or at some other time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 6, insert the following:

"That the following paragraph of section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to wit:

"That it shall be the duty of the editor, publisher, business manager, or owner of every newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication to file with the Postmaster General and the postmaster at the office at which said publication is entered, not later than the 1st day of April and the 1st day of Octuber of each year, on blanks furnished by the Post Office Department, a sworn statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editor and managing editor, publisher, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation; and also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders; and also, in the case of daily newspapers, there shall be included in such statement the average of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold or distributed to paid subscribers during the preceding six month: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, and scientific, or other similar publications: Provided further, That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities. A copy of such sworn statement shall be published in the second issue of such newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed next after the filing of such statement. Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail if it shall fall to comply with the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order

Mr. MOON. I regret to say to the gentleman that I can not, because it is a subject that will take too long to discuss.

Mr. TREADWAY. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman strictly on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman have five minutes?
Mr. MOON. We want to get through with this paragraph, and this amendment is irrelevant.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not occupy the time of the House very often.

Mr. MOON. I will yield five minutes to him, but I am not going to reserve any more points of order, I give notice now.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I understand it, this feature was inserted in the Post Office bill two years ago in just the manner that we have been discussing here this afternoon. It was some sort of a rider, as I understand it, not considered by the Post Office Committee, and I claim, Mr. Chairman, it is of such an inquisitorial nature that newspapers should not be subjected to it.

I would like to have it explained to me why any man, because he happens to be the owner of a paper and user of the secondclass mail, should be required to report publicly in that paper under a sworn statement to whom he may owe any money. There is a requirement in this section whereby a man owning a newspaper, if there is a mortgage against his property, must make that fact known to the public. Now, has not that man just as much right to use the columns of the press, has he not as much right to do that kind of business-publishing a newspaper-as I have to go on with the kind of business that I happen to be engaged in for a livelihood, without making that information public to the world at large? It is a hardship in every sense of the word upon the publisher of a small newspaper, although I judge it was originally intended to affect the publishers of large or metropolitan dailies in an effort to discover whether they were controlled by outside or concealed influences

The advertiser in any paper has every opportunity to find out what the merits of the paper itself may be. There is no newspaper manager who is not willing at any time to show his circulation department sheet to any advertiser. It is an effort, as I see it, to get a little inquisitorial information against a very legitimate line of business, which ought not to be countenanced at all, and which crept into the law because the newspapers wanted to avail themselves, in increasing their circulation and in reaching their subscriptions, of the privileges of the low rates on second-class mail matter.

I claim, Mr. Chairman, that this condition of affairs ought not to be countenanced in the law, and I claim also that this amendment is not out of order and can not be ruled out on a point of order, because it reduces expenses. There is an expense to the Government involved in having the blanks printed upon which the returns are made. I took occasion to look up the cost, and I find there is a matter of nearly $500 of expense to the Post Office Department in providing these blanks. Consequently, I claim, sir, that it is within the province of the rule whereby legisla-tion is in order if it will reduce expenses. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter when, during a weighing period, on account of floods or other causes, interruptions in service occur on railroad routes and weights of mail are decreased below the normal, or where there is an omission to take weights, the Postmaster General, for the purpose of readjusting compensation on such railroad routes as are affected thereby, is hereby authorized in his discretion to add to the weights of mails ascertained on such routes during that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been normal, the estimated weights for that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been not normal or where there has been an omission to take weights, based upon the average of weights taken during that part of the weighing period during which conditions are shown to have been normal, the actual weights and the estimated weights to form the basis for the average weight per day upon which to readjust the compensation according to law on such railroad routes for the transportation of the mails, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, requiring that the average weight shall be ascertained by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than 90, as the Postmaster General may direct: Provided further, That readjustments from July 1, 1913, may be made under this provision on routes in the first section affected by the floods in the Ohio Valley and tributary territory, commencing about March 25, 1913.

Page 30, after line 19, insert:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,300 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $22.50 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, an increase of 10 per cent per mile per annum; on routes carrying the mail three times each week, of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the delivery of mails, whether in the city, on the railroad trains, or on the rural free delivery, is an exacting service, and it has always appeared to me that the compensation paid to the employees in the several branches of the Postal Service was inadequate for the work done. I have offered this amendment for the relief of the carriers in the Rural Service in a very moderate amount, less than should be paid, but an advance over what is now paid. The rural carrier appears from the bill, upon a standard route of 24 miles in length, with a six times per week service, to be paid $95.83\frac{1}{2} per month for his services in delivering mail to the patrons of his route. But immediately this compensation is burdened with a heavy charge for the transportation of the mail to the addressees, including a proportional part of the permanent investment for equipment and cost of maintenance. Recent legislation, such as the establishment of the parcel post, has added an additional burden without granting, it seems to me, a proportional increase in pay. The carrier must deliver the mails irrespective of weather and road conditions, and if legislation increases the cost, it by so much diminishes his earnings. might appear that the carrier receives nearly $96 per month for his services, while really he receives that amount for his services, replacement and maintenance of equipment, and so forth.

The result is that the net amount out of which he must provide a living for himself and his family, and provide a reserve for times of need, or age, is but little more than a moiety of that amount. A number of carriers reporting from the various portions of my congressional district, and I think their reports are fairly representative of conditions, report an average invest-ment for horses per carrier of $257; vehicles drawn by horses, $121, and harness, and so forth, $39, making a total average investment of $417 each. The average cost for horses is $101, for vehicles $68, and for harness, and so forth, $39. This does not take into account one motorcycle at $200 and one automobile at $700. They report an average maintenance cost for feed, horseshoeing, and so forth, repairs to equipment and incidentals, and not including interest on investment, depreciation, additions, or proportional cost of replacement of $353 per year, or practically $30 per month. Adding to this a monthly proportion of interest and depreciation, and the added cost for delivery in the coming year due to the increased size of parcel-post matter, more than 40 per cent will be taken out of each month's pay for operating expenses, and there will be left as real compensation some $57.50 per month, on the basis of the present bill, a sum entirely inadequate. The amendment I propose will increase his real pay per month to some $66—not enough, but a partial relief. In the above computations I have computed very conservatively, and I believe the real compensations is less that the state of the stat tion is less than I have given.

In justice to a hard-worked, efficient, and faithful service, I appeal to the sense of fairness which distinguishes the membership of this House to adopt the proposed amendment.

I offer the amendment in this form that it may be in order. The real remedy would be to make an annual allowance for equipment and its maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, in seeking to amend this measure under discussion there is no desire to antagonize this committee or its chairman, who prepared this bill. tionably this section received consideration at their hands when the measure was in preparation. However, in view of the great importance of this branch of the Postal Service, it is but right that special attention be directed to the needs of this vast army of rural carriers and that their just demands receive consideration in the appropriation that seeks to fix their compensation for the service they are to render.

This most important branch of the Postal Service is undoubtedly that branch which seeks to carry the mail to the door of the farmer. No great hardship would be inflicted upon people living in cities or towns if they should be required to go to some designated place in their city or town to receive their mail. But with farmers, many of whom reside from 10 to 12 or even 15 miles from the post office, unless the rural service be ex-tended, they will be deprived of any benefits whatever from this vast appropriation. The requirements of his labors, the remoteness of his home, and in many cases the impassability of the roads makes this his only avenue of contact with the outside world. Our Government went a long way in an experiment when it established the rural delivery, but results have more than justified the hope and confidence of those who secured the enactment of the law under which this service has been extended to a large number of those residing in rural communities. The great expense attendant upon this service has prevented extension to yet a great part of the people and has made some question the wisdom of extending this service. And upon this ground, and this alone, have been fought all efforts on the part of friends of the rural carriers to give them adequate pay for the service required. All effort to secure for them a living wage has been met with the statement that to grant the increase justly demanded would be to curtail, if not to finally destroy, this branch of the Postal Service.

Without a doubt this presents a serious question, because the revenues derived are so insignificant as compared with the expenses of the service that it is proving a heavy drain upon the postal revenues. This, however, is no fault of the carrier, and no efficient service can be had without a reasonable compensation, and that their service has proven efficient no one questions.

In the bill now under consideration the maximum salary of a rural carrier can not exceed $1,150, and for this sum he must not only contribute his entire time, but must furnish an equipage consisting of some mode of transportation for himself and the mail, the average cost of which an investigation shows to be about $450. The cost of maintaining this equipage will range from $200 to $300 a year, with a depreciation of about 20 per cent of its first cost.

At a glance it becomes apparent that with this investment and the cost of maintenance and depreciation that the service can not long be maintained at its present high state of efficiency without an increase in the salary of the carrier. It has been said here upon the floor of this House, in answer to an argument of inferior pay for this class of Government employees, that the positions are much sought after. This may be true in some sections of the country where the road conditions are ideal and the route length is not so long and the labor not so arduous, but in other sections I know these conditions do not

As a concrete illustration conditions confronting this class of Government employees in my home town may prove instructive. There are six routes leading from this office: No. 1 is 26½ miles; No. 2 is 27½ miles; No. 3 is 26 miles; No. 4 is 29 miles; No. 5 is 31 miles; and No. 6 is 15½ miles, and the road conditions are bad. During the winter months routes 4 and 5 are almost impassable. The carrier serving route 4 is an intelligent, careful, and energetic man, and with a strong team of two horses the average time required throughout the year to serve his route is about 9 hours and 37½ minutes each day. Many days it requires from 10 to 14 hours. Others are just as bad. It is fair to presume that these are average conditions in which the majority of the carriers engaged in this service labor. The proposed amendment seeks to fix the average wage for a standard route of 24 miles at $1,200, and give an additional $30 for each extra mile or major fraction thereof, with additional annual compensation of not less than $100 or more than $200 for maintenance of equipage, for all carriers on routes 20 miles or more in length, the amount being determined by the Postmaster General in view of the quantity of mail and road conditions under which the service is to be rendered.

The parcel post, recently effective, has greatly increased the burdens of the carrier. When the weight limit shall have been increased, as is now contemplated, to 100 pounds, and the farmers realize the great service that the Government is capable of rendering to them by this means, it becomes apparent that the rural carrier will have to double his equipage, with increased cost for its maintenance and depreciation.

No branch of the service should ever be developed, extended, and perfected at the cost of unfair treatment of the employees. Without question the most exacting labors, the greatest expenditure, and the longest hours required of any of the Government employees are expected from the rural carrier, while at the same time the greatest benefits and largest profits that the Post Office enjoys are reaped from their labors.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. COPLEY, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. HUGHES of Georgia were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows: Sec. 10. That after June 30, 1914, the compensation of postmasters at post offices of the first, second, and third classes shall be annual salaries, graded in even hundreds of dollars, and payable in quarterly installments, and shall be ascertained and fixed by the Postmaster General on the basis of the gross receipts of their respective offices for the calendar year, to take effect at the beginning of the ensuing fiscal year at the rates now prescribed by law.

The Clerk read as follows;

On page 17 strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That hereafter the Postmaster General shall have authority to employ acting employees in place of all employees or substitutes hereinafter mentioned who are injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the employee's salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and the Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives, for the benefit of wife, children, or dependent relatives of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Railway Mail Service, post-office inspector, letter carrier in the City Delivery Service, rural letter carrier, post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence.

"To enable the Postmaster General to carry out the provisions of the above, $134,500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a roll call on that.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like, with the permission of the gentleman, to present a privileged report (H. Rept. 189) from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DIES. Did I understand the gentleman from Illinois to ask for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] presents a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER.

The gentleman will state it.

Does this give any precedence or take any-Mr. BURNETT. thing away from the agreement this morning made by the Pensions Committee?

The SPEAKER. This has nothing in the world to do with that. Pensions, under the order of this morning, come up tomorrow.

It does not give this bill any precedence over any other bill; the merely presenting of this report does not give this bill any precedence.

The SPEAKER. Why, it is a privileged report, and a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is a privileged motion, but it does not take precedence over the order of the House made this morning.

Mr. BURNETT. There is no motion here to go into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not speaking of what would happen. We can not pass it without going into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill, and the Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. MANN. I demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays on the Reilly amendment. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-six gentlemen have risen in favor of the yeas and nays. The other side will rise and in favor of the year and flays. The other side will like and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and six gentlemen have risen in opposition. Forty-six is sufficient, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Reilly amendment will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the followin; title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested: S. 1983. An act to amend section 3618 of the Revised Statutes

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1914.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, January 22, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expira-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 48 will be proceeded with.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Territories as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are very few Senators in the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Goff	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Gronna	Newlands	Smoot
Bradley	Hollis	Norris	Stephenson
Brady	James	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Johnson	Perkins	Stone

Mr. SHAFROTH. My colleague [Mr. Thomas] is unavoidably absent to-day. He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON

Mr. RANSDELL. My colleague [Mr. THORNTON] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent. I will let this announcement stand for

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to state that so far as the committee amendments to the first section of the bill are concerned, they have all been offered, modified, and adopted, but I understand that there are amendments to be proposed by other than members of the committee to the first section. It seems to me it might be better to finish the committee amendments to the whole bill and then take up general amendments to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the proper way.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it is the better way. I hope that Senators who have amendments to propose will adopt that course in reference to the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. It is my understanding that we have finished the committee amendments to section 1. I have no objection, however, if the chairman of the committee prefers, to withhold the amendment I was about to offer to that section until the committee amendments to the bill have been disposed of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would prefer to take that course.

I think it would hasten the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Out of deference to the request of the Senator from Oregon I will not offer my amendment now. I wish to state, however, that I do not desire to be precluded from offering an amendment to the first section of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be open to amendment after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall desire to offer the amendment as soon as the committee are through with their amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have two amendments that I wish to suggest to the first section; but I, of course, will defer to the wish of the chairman of the committee and will not present them until a later time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 5, after the word "work," insert "all of such engineers and other persons selected from civil life to be, in the location and construction work herein provided for, under the direction and supervision of such engineers of the United States Army."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the following amendment to the amendment

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 9, line 21, after the word "property," insert "including existing railways."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 11, line 3, after the period, insert: The method of accounting, bookkeeping, and auditing prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the railroad companies and systems of the United States shall be observed and applied in the con-struction and operation of the railroads herein provided for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the following amendment to

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 21, at the end of the line, before the period, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the total amount authorized by this act to be appropriated or contracted for shall not exceed the sum of $40,000,000, including any sum in er by this act appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let it be read again, Mr. President.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment. Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from Oregon to withhold that amendment until after the one I propose shall be voted on, because there would be a slight conflict, I think.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will be glad to withhold it. I submit the following amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary. On page 13, at the end of the bill, insert a new section, as follows:

new section, as follows:

SEC. S. The jurisdiction of the District Court of Alaska shall extend to any and all controversies which may arise between the United States and any person, association, or corporation growing out of any acts done or threatened or contracts entered into under or pursuant to this act. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury. The venue in any case involving such a controversy shall be in the division in which the cause of action arose, if it arose in Alaska. If it arose elsewhere than in Alaska, the venue shall be within the division in which the capital of the Territory. Process in any such case against the United States may be served upon the district attorney assigned to the division in which the action is brought.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question for information. I understand that the bill now prowides for taking over the present railroads.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not necessarily.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know; but it provides that they can be taken over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. effect this amendment would have upon any condemnation proceedings? Undoubtedly condemnation proceedings are undertaken under some rule of practice that is already laid down. This provision might take it out of that, and might it not place it before the judge alone? I wish to ask if the Senator has considered that phase of it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The purpose of the amendment is to give the court there jurisdiction of controversies which arise between people in Alaska and the railroad company, whether growing out of contract or otherwise. It was not the purpose to create any different tribunal for the trial of condemnation proceedings than is now provided by the laws in Alaska. It is barely possible that the amendment might conflict with it. I will state that we have no intention of doing so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have it read again, The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, would the effect of this amendment be to destroy the right of trial by jury, for example, in an ordinary action of trespass brought by the Government against an individual if it grew out of the building of

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Or out of the provisions of this bill? Mr. SUTHERLAND. Or out of the provisions of this bill? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am inclined to think it would under that provision. I will state to the Senator that the committee agreed on the general terms of the amendment, which was pre-pared by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. I have not critically examined it; and I should like the Senator from Montana to state his view upon that particular subject. It seems to me the way the amendment is framed that it would have the effect of taking all causes, even condemnation proceedings, away from a jury.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was it that the committee desired to accomplish by an amendment of this character?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There was no provision in the laws of Alaska, so far as we knew, that would enable parties litigant to institute proceedings nor was the jurisdiction fixed in controversies that originated between the Government of the United States and parties who might be dealing with the United States in connection with the road. The purpose of the amendment was to enable people to institute proceedings to determine their rights.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would also, as I caught the reading of the amendment, include a case brought by the United States against a citizen.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Montana is here, and I should like him to state his view of the subject. My understanding was that it was the purpose to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of Alaska to determine controversies between citizens of Alaska and those contracting with the Government under the provisions of this proposed act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like very much to have an explanation of the amendment by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is simply to permit actions to be brought against the Government. It has no proper application at all to actions brought by the Government. The Government may sue in the courts of Alaska without reference to this statute at all in condemnation proceedings or for trespass or otherwise. Of course, the condemnation proceedings are local in their character; they must be brought in Alaska. This does not limit or restrict any juris-diction which now exists; it adds to that jurisdiction by declaring that the jurisdiction of those courts shall extend to controversies, and then contemplates service upon the Government, the purpose being that if in the construction or operation of the railroads a trespass should be committed by the officers of the Government upon the private property of any individual he would not be obliged to come down here to Washington and appeal to Congress for an act giving him compensation for the damages which he had sustained, whatever they might happen to be, but that his right to recover should be tried out in the courts of Alaska at home. It was considered, however, that in such an action as that brought against the Government of the United States a disposition might be evinced by juries to be particularly liberal as to claimants against the Government. Considerations of that character induced Congress to provide in the act which authorized actions to be brought in the circuit court of the United States against the Government on claims founded upon contracts not exceeding in amount $10,000 to insert therein a provision, the same as is here found, that there should be no right of trial by jury. Of course, the Government of the United States may withhold altogether the right to have itself subjected to suits upon any claim, and having the right to withhold it altogether, it may impose just such conditions as it sees fit. This amendment, it seemed to us, safeguarded the right to have redress from local courts, which is a right that ought to be accorded to anybody who suffers by reason of these acts or who may have contract obligations which are equitable and which ought to be enforced, and at the same time it safeguarded the public interest.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Montana that it is within the power of Congress in extending to the citizen the right to maintain an action against the Government to limit it in any way it pleases. It may require that any such controversy shall be heard before an administrative officer, if it pleases; it may withhold the right of trial by jury, if it pleases. Having a right to withhold the remedy entirely, of course the General Government may condition it as it pleases; but the provision which is now proposed, if I read it understandingly, is very much broader than that which the Senator from Montana states. The language of the proposed provision is:

The jurisdiction of the district court of Alaska shall extend to any and all controversies which may arise between the United States and any person, association, or corporation growing out of any acts done or threatened, or contracts entered into under or pursuant to this act.

It is quite true that it would not be necessary to have the language as broad as this appears to be, so far as the right of the Government of the United States to maintain an action would be concerned; but it is in terms sufficiently broad to cover that case as well. Of course that case is covered by the law, and to that extent it would be a mere repetition of that which already exists. But the provision continues:

All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury.

One of the provisions of the act is that extending the jurisdiction of the district court to any and all controversies that may arise between the United States and any person, association, and so on-and this, in its terms, includes actions brought by the United States as well as those brought against the United States.

Mr. WALSH. If there is any obscurity, it would be easily obviated by simply inserting the words "against the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. So as to read, "all causes against the United States brought and tried."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course that could be done. not undertaking to criticize what might be done hereafter, but I was undertaking to criticize this particular amendment as it is. If that is done, then, Mr. President, it brings us to the question not of power, but to the question of policy. The effect of the amendment, then, would be to grant a right to a citizen to maintain an action against the United States arising from a contract or an ordinary action of trespass, an ordinary commonlaw action, and yet would deny the right of trial by jury in that sort of a case. Of course we have the power to do that; but I very much doubt the advisability of doing it. I believe in preserving ultimately the right of trial by jury in all controversies of that character, and I see no reason why it should not extend to a case brought by a citizen against the United States, if we give him the right, as well as in cases over which the courts now have jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it occurred to me, in hearing the amendment read, that it might extend further than the committee thought. I assume that there will be many causes of action that may arise in the courts of Alaska under the provisions of this act. I can conceive of a great many that might arise. By an express sentence standing by itself in the amendment as it has been handed to me is the provision:

All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act-

Not "under the provisions of this section," but "under the provisions of this act" shall be tried by the court without a jury.

That was one of the features that struck my attention when That sentence stands by itself. it was read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Would not an amendment striking out the word "act," and inserting the word "section" cover the objection the Senator makes?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was my purpose simply to call the attention of the committee to it, so that, if they thought it needed remedy, either by way of amendment or otherwise, they might prepare it.

Mr. WALSH. I think if we insert the words "against the United States," all possibility of doubt about the meaning of the provision will be removed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, perhaps, would be true.

think that would better it very much.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the committee proposes to eliminate the provision with reference to denying the right of trial by jury?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. I will state to the Senator that we propose to limit the cases to those that are brought against

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was detained from the Chamber this morning and only arrived a few moments ago. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] has stated the reason why it was thought necessary to deny a trial by jury, but, on first impression, I would be opposed to denying the right of trial by jury even in this class of cases. I should like to know the views of the Senator as to the necessity of denying the right of trial by jury in this class of cases.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to avow myself now distinctly an unchangeable friend of the system of trial by jury. We are not here, however, as seems to be suggested, denying any right of trial by jury. Everything that we give is so much of a con-cession. There is no right of trial by jury now; there is no right even of suit now. We are making a concession to anyone who may have a just claim against the United States, and in making that concession it is simply a question as to whether we should go so far as to grant the right of a trial by jury or whether we should limit it, as has been the policy in the statutes thus far enacted, granting any right of action against the United States.

You have no right of trial by jury, as a matter of course, in the Court of Claims; you have no right of trial by jury in actions brought in the circuit court of the United States against the United States under the statute authorizing suits in actions founded upon contract to the extent of $10,000. That has been the policy of the Government thus far, namely, that whenever it did grant the right of action against the United States to so provide that the cause could not be tried by a jury. I hoped to avoid at this time any question of a departure from that established policy of the Government in the framing of this amendment, anticipating that it would give rise to a discussion which I hoped very much to avoid.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course there can be no controversy with the Senator as to the legal proposition he states, that is, that this is a concession, and that it is simply a question of how far we shall go. We may stop anywhere we wish to Perhaps I would have been more accurate had I said that we were refusing to give a trial by jury in this class of cases. It is not in one sense denying the right, because they have not that right now; but we are giving a right of action, and then we are withholding the usual manner of trying those classes of actions-to wit, damage cases, and so forth-by a

The Senator from Montana no doubt has observed that, unfortunately, it seems to me, the Supreme Court of the United States has apparently come to regard the right of trial by jury as a question of procedure rather than a fundamental right, Even with reference to common-law cases and those cases in which it is supposed that jury trials are an essential part of the method of securing a right determination of questions, the Supreme Court of the United States in two or three cases has treated the whole proposition as a mere question of procedure and not looked upon it as a question of fundamental right with reference to these matters. Therefore, while you are not denying the right of trial by jury I do not see the wisdom of the policy of withholding the right of trial by jury in this class of cases

Of course, as the Senator has said, it has been the custom of the United States, or, rather, the precedent, to do that; but my observation and my experience have been that it has sometimes resulted in a great deal of hardship and injustice to the citizen, because I do not think he can get that kind of justice and an adequate remedy in court trials with reference to these matters that he can with a jury. If we go so far as to concede the proposition that he should have a right to a trial, I think he should have a right to a trial in the full sense of that term; such a trial as we give him in reference to other matters where damages are involved. While the Senator is entirely correct, of course, as to his legal proposition, yet I do not see the necessity of extending these precedents any further, nor do I see the wisdom of doing so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in order to remove any doubt in reference to the matter, I request that there be inserted in the proposed amendment, after the word "causes," in the sixth line, the words "against the United States," and after the word "this," in the next line, that the word "act" be stricken out and the word "section" inserted, so that it would limit the causes of action to those against the United States, as has been suggested.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How will it read then?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. After the word "causes," in line 6, it is proposed to insert the words "against the United States," and in the next line to strike out the word "act" and insert the word section," so that if amended it will read:

"section," so that if amended it will read:

SEC. 8. The jurisdiction of the district court of Alaska shall extend to any and all controversies which may arise between the United States and any person, association, or corporation growing out of any acts done or threatened or contracts entered into under or pursuant to this act. All causes against the United States brought and tried under the provisions of this section shall be tried by the court without a jury.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when that amendment is passed on I want to offer an amendment to strike out the word "without" and insert in lieu thereof the word "before," so as to read "tried by the court before a jury.

Mr. REED. Important engagements have compelled me to be absent from the Chamber during the greater portion of the day. A moment ago, as I returned to my seat, I heard the amendment under discussion read in part. Because of my enforced absence I am unfamiliar with the trend of discussion throughout the day and am unacquainted with the context of the amendment. I therefore arise to make an inquiry.

The bill proposes that a railroad shall be constructed in Alaska by the Federal Government and that the Federal Government shall operate the road. If I caught the purport of the amendment, it is that controversies arising out of the construction or operation of the road may be tried in the Federal court, but denies to the parties litigant the right of a trial by jury. In other words, if I understand the amendment, it confers upon any citizen the right to go into a Federal court and sue for an injury to his person or property, but refuses him a jury. In order that I may be certain that I have not misunderstood the amendment I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if my construction is correct?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that that would be the effect of it. The purpose of this amendment has been explained by the Senator from Montana, who prepared the amendment at the request of the committee, and showed that it was conferring a right upon claimants against the United States to institute a proceeding against the Government which they have not now by statute. As he has stated, the amendment has followed previous legislation upon the same subject where the right of action against the United States is conferred.

Mr. BRADY rose.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator wish to ask a question or to take the floor? I have not concluded.

Mr. BRADY. I was going to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri vield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Yes. Mr. BRADY. In case a citizen owned a piece of property over which this line was run, and it became necessary to con-demn the property in order to secure title under this section, would he have to have that case tried before the court instead

Mr. REED. I take it, from the answer just given by the chairman of the committee, that that would be true. I should have no doubt about the meaning of this section, and should not have been obliged to ask the question I did except that I was not here when the preceding sections were read. Hence wanted to know that I was right.

Mr. President, I can not give my assent to a proposition of that kind. As long as a Government is engaged in the exercise of a strictly governmental function, of course, it can not be sued except by its own express consent registered in some law.

Many reasons may be advanced justifying the refusal of the Government to permit suits against it for injuries resulting from the exercise of its governmental functions. When, however, a Government goes beyond its purely governmental duties and embarks in a business enterprise for profit, an entirely different question is presented. Under such circumstances either the Government ought to refuse to the claimant the right to any trial whatever and remit him for relief to the legislative department or it should give to him the full benefit of the courts.

I insist that a right to a full trial under the general rules of law should not be denied.

The doctrine I contend for is not an innovation. Perhaps this is the first time it has been proposed that the Government shall embark in a strictly business enterprise, but for many years cities and other subordinate governmental agencies have engaged in business undertakings. Ordinarily a city can not be sued for anything done of a strictly governmental character, but if the city goes beyond its governmental functions and engages in a business enterprise it can generally be sued the same as an individual or private corporation.

To illustrate, if a city acquires a waterworks plant and engages in the business of selling water to consumers, it can be sued for any injury occasioned by the mismanagement of the plant. In such an instance as I have cited a suit may be brought against the city in the same way and tried in the same manner as it could be against a corporation or individual engaged in the same business.

The rule of law I have referred to has never been regarded as dangerous or unjust. Why should it not be applied to the Government of the United States if the Government sees fit to go into the business of building and operating a railroad system?

I am opposed to this amendment because it proposes to give a person injured a right of action which may be tried before a court and at the same time denies to the claimant the right to a trial by jury. Why should the right to a jury trial be denied? Has it come to this, that the Congress of the United States proposes to lay down the precedent and establish the principle that trial by jury is a thing to be feared?

Is trial by jury so opposed to the proper administration of justice that the Government is not willing to submit its controversies arising out of a business in which it intends to engage to a jury of 12 men? The position can only be justified by the assumption that a jury is incapable of or unwilling to mete out justice to parties litigant.

Mr. President, I have thought well of this bill, but as highly as I have regarded it if there is written into it a single line impairing the right of trial by jury I shall vote against it. If the amendment proposed is adopted, it will be the first act of a great legislative body in aid of the assassination of the right of trial by jury. I had rather never see a foot of railroad built in the Territory of Alaska, either by a private corporation or by the Government itself, than to have the Congress of the United States solemnly write into the statute books of this country a provision which, in effect, declares that the Government itself refuses to repose confidence in the judgment and fairness of 12 men summoned from the body of the community.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Certainly. Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator goes further, I desire to the attitude of having taken a step in this matter toward curtailing the right of trial by jury or denying it to anybody. The language of this amendment is taken from the language of the act giving to parties the right to spe the Government of the United States upon claims founded upon contracts amounting to less than $10,000. The right to sue the Government of the United States was long ago given through the medium of the Court of Claims, and the right of trial by jury was not then given, so the question is presented as to whether a departure should now be made from the fixed policy of the Government with respect to the matter, and not whether this should be a first step in that direction.

For myself, I am quite willing that this clause shall be stricken out, and I shall vote in favor of an amendment to it. I simply do not like to have the committee put in the attitude of now taking the first step toward denying anybody the right of trial by jury.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can not agree with my very good friend, the Senator from Montana, that the precedents he refers to are applicable here. Those precedents cover claims against the Government arising out of the exercise by the Government of its sovereign powers. They do not apply when the Government is engaging in the conduct of a business for profit. The Government may well say to an individual who has a claim against it arising out of the performance of its governmental functions, "You have no right of action; you can not sue the Government in any court, but we will give you the privilege of appearing before some board or tribunal where the facts may be ascertained, and the facts having been thus ascertained for the benefit and enlightenment of Congress, we will then remit you to Congress for your relief."

Such a course by the Government may be entirely proper, because it is being asked to render compensation for injuries arising out of the exercise of the sovereign powers it employs for the protection of the people. If the Government of the United States, in the performance of its governmental duties, sends its Army across the country, and in the course of its march private property is injured, it may be entirely just for the Government to say to the citizen whose property has been injured, "We remit you for relief to a certain tribunal authorized to ascertain the facts and afterwards to Congress for legislative relief." That is one class of cases. They arise They arise out of acts of the Government which it is compelled to perform in the exercise of its duties as a sovereign. But, Mr. President, the class of cases which I have just referred to is entirely dis-tinct from those causes which will confront us if the United States, going beyond its immediate governmental functions, starts into the business of constructing railroads and thereafter operates them in the transportation of goods and passengers, charging for the service rendered a tariff and making money out of the transactions. In the latter case the Government is engaged in a money-making enterprise-a business enterprise-while in the former case it is engaged in the exercise of its governmental powers.

The illustration given by my friend is, therefore, not per-tinent. The fact that the Government has hitherto refused trial by jury as to claims against the government growing out of the exercise by it of its sovereign duties is quite a different thing from the refusal of a trial by jury for cause arising when the Government is engaged in commerce.

If the Government of the United States is to engage in railroading, in the transportation of freight and passengers, in the performance of the multitudinous duties devolving upon a railroad, and in the course of its business as a railroad proprietor injures persons or property and can not safely submit to the arbitrament of 12 jurymen the questions of fact in-volved, then the Government would better not embark in the railroad business.

If this amendment is adopted, those who are anxiously awaiting the hour when they may successfully strike at the inestimable privilege of trial by jury will cite it as conclusive evidence that the Congress of the United States has found it necessary to repudiate that right.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question right along that line?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If we should write into the act the proposed amendment, would it not be giving a business conducted by the Government a privilege over a like business conducted under corporate management, and thus make a discrimination?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly; but while that is a potent circumstance to be considered, it is not, in my judgment, of the say that the committee does not like to be put by the Senator in Every man in this body knows that for many years there has been a quiet agitation going on for the curtailment or abolition of the right of trial by jury. Magazine and news-paper writers have exhausted the vocabulary of scorn and contempt in describing the alleged ignorance of the unlettered and uneducated juryman. They have paraded before the country the fact that long periods of time have been employed in em-They have commented upon the inefficiency of the juryman. They have persistently held up before us the idea that we can not trust the ordinary citizen in the trial of questions of fact.

I affirm, sir, that when the right of trial by jury is stricken down the last and best bulwark of the liberty of the citizen will have fallen. I insist that 12 men in a jury box will be right more often than the judge of the court. I assert it to be true that the right to have questions of fact tried by 12 men summoned from the body of a community is the most sacred and valuable privilege reserved to us by the Constitution of the United States. It will be a sad day for the Republic when the Congress of the United States declares, as it will in effect declare if this amendment is adopted, "We have not confidence in the intelligence of the ordinary citizen. We will not trust him to try a question of fact. We propose to put questions of fact and questions of law alike in the hands of one man appointed by the President of the United States."

I make no attack upon the courts when I say that 12 men, bringing into the jury box the experience of 12 individual lives and viewing questions of fact from the practical standpoint of practical men, will make less mistakes than any judge who ever ornamented the bench, and this because the judge views questions from the standpoint of a single individual trained to particular profession.

I protest against this amendment. I protest, and will continue to protest as long as I have the ability to speak, against any amendment which strikes at the right of trial by jury in the American Republic. It is a right that was obtained through centuries of battle and struggle. It is a right that is baptized in the best blood of our forefathers. It is a right that is necessarily inherent in any free government. If the Government of the United States can not run a railroad and try its cases before a jury of 12 men, then it had better keep out of the railroad business. But, sir, the Government and the people can safely trust to the courts and the juries of the land.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, after a conference with the members of the Committee on Territories, and after the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Missouri, the committee think probably it would be best to leave out the two lines which have been under discussion in the proposed amendment, leaving these cases to be tried by a jury as other cases are tried.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] has very plainly shown that it was not the purpose of the committee to deprive litigants of the right of trial by jury, but in this case it was thought best to follow the precedents that have been established by Congress in days gone by, and to limit the right here as other statutes have limited the rights of litigants in cases against the United States Government.

If those two lines are stricken out it will leave the matter in the same situation as other cases pending against the Govern-

Mr. BORAH. What are the two lines to which the Senator

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The two lines which read:

All causes against the United States brought and tried under the provisions of this section shall be tried by the court without a jury. Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator designate the page and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This is not in the printed bill. It is committee amendment. It seems to me that would meet the objection of the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator believe that would meet the objection of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not any doubt that it would. It confers a right that a party does not now have. In other words, it gives the right to sue the United States and relegates it to the courts generally, simply establishing the place where the trial shall be had.

Mr. REED. I would suggest to the Senator this language, and I read the whole sentence with the change:

and I read the whole semence with the change:

All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried in the same manner and subject to the same rules as controversies between citizens.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That would reach it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that language either; but it occurs to me we should say, "All causes brought and tried ployment would not apply to Alaska at all.

under the provisions of this act shall be tried the same as similar causes are triable in Federal courts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is substantially what the Senator from Missouri has suggested.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; substantially so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In other words, the committee is perfectly willing to reserve the right of trial by jury while conferring the right of suit or action upon litigants. If the Senator will send to the desk his form of amendment, I think we will probably be able to agree on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification suggested will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After the words "shall be tried," strike out the remainder of the sentence and insert "in the same manner and under the same rules as controversies between citizens."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is right.

Mr. REED. That is satisfactory to me. It is the same language, practically, that I suggested. It is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have no objection to the change in the phraseology of the provision; I think it ought to be made; but I think the construction of it would be the same whether the language that is now proposed to be inserted were inserted or the whole clause eliminated.

I think the initial mistake in this legislation is in putting the Government of the United States into the business of running a railroad. Whenever we undertake to do that we ought to face the consequences of it, and we ought to make the Government of the United States responsible for whatever happens in the operation of the railroad precisely the same as if it were operated by an individual or a corporation. But I am sufficiently oldfashioned to believe that the Government of the United States ought not to engage in business any more than business ought to engage in government. I think the Government of the United States ought not to undertake to run railroads any more than railroads should be permitted to undertake to run the Government. I believe the two functions are fundamentally different, and I think they ought to be left as they are now, the Government engaged in the function of governing and leaving its citizens to operate the business concerns of the country. this bill is passed, as it apparently will pass, and the Government of the United States goes into the business of operating a railroad, and an employee of the railroad is injured, the Government of the United States ought to be responsible to that employee precisely to the same extent and precisely in the same manner as a railroad company would be liable to him.

I am not certain whether under the language of this amendment that would be the case. I should like to submit to the Senator from Oregon: We have provided by law that when certain employees of the Government engaged in hazardous enterprises are injured they shall receive certain definite com-I am not certain whether that would apply to the case of Alaska or not, but if it does not then the further inquiry arises, whether or not the various defenses which existed at common law against actions for personal injury, and which have been abolished so far as railroad companies are concerned, would be abolished so far as the Government of the United States is concerned. In other words, if an action be brought against the Government of the United States under this clause for a personal injury, may the Government set up contributory negligence on the part of the employee as an individual might have done at the common law, may it plead the fellow servant's rule, may it defend upon the doctrine of assumption of risk? All those defenses have either been absolutely abolished or curtailed by the legislation which we have enacted with reference to railroad companies, and that ought to be the case with reference to the Government if the Government is engaged in the same business

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—— Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise for information. Have we abolished it as to Territories where the business is not interstate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is my recollection that the law applies to Territories.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have given no attention to the question with reference to Territories, and I was not sure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not entirely sure, but I am stating my best recollection. I think it applies to interstate commerce and to railroads engaged—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a copy of the act, I will state

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The employers' liability act?
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The proposition the Senator suggested as to employees of the Government engaged in hazardous em-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was not certain about it.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will read to the Senator the language of the act, and he will see the act is not broad enough to cover Alaska. It is the act approved May 20, 1908. It provides:

That when, on or after August 1, 1908, any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy yards, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification work, or in hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, is injured in the course of such employment.

And so forth.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So apparently it would not extend to the case of the operation of a railroad in Alaska.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; the act would have to be amended in order to bring this construction work within the provisions of the law. In reference to the general act to which the Sena-tor referred, approved April 22, 1908, an act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in cer-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator read the first section

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (reading):

That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce.

So I do not think that act would apply.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then apparently the act would not apply in the case of Alaska, and that discovery emphasizes what I have been saying. When the Government of the United States engages in operating a railroad, I think common justice demands that it should be subject to precisely the same burdens and the same remedies upon the part of the citizens as a private corporation engaged in that business. In other words, I do not believe the Government of the United States engaging in this business has any right to compel a corporation or a private citizen to be more generous to its or his employees than the Government is willing to be to its employees.

I believe very firmly in the idea of substituting workmen's compensation for employers' liability, under which fair and reasonable compensation will be provided for every accident, irrespective of negligence. However, if we have not come to the place where we are willing to substitute that, but are going to continue the present employers' liability system with reference to the railroads operating in this country, I think we ought to compel the Government, when it engages in this same kind of business in Alaska, to be subject to precisely the same rules.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-Mr. SUTHERLAND. Evi Mr. SUTHERLAND. Evidently under this provision as framed, taken in connection with the employers' liability law, that would not be the case, and there would be a difference. In the United States a railroad company operating a railroad would not be required to set up the defense of assumption of risk or the defense that the injury resulted from the act of a fellow servant, while in Alaska apparently the Government, engaged in the same business, would be allowed to set up those defenses

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator. Mr. REED. Before the Senator takes his seat, let me ask him, Is it not true that so far as a workman's compensation act is concerned, when that is passed, if it be passed, the language of the bill could be so shaped as to make it applicable to any railroad the Government should operate the same as an individual?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; that could be done, but that would not obviate the objection which I am now urging, namely, that under the existing state of law, if we assume that that will continue, there would be a different rule applicable to the Government operating railroads in Alaska than that which would be applicable to private persons operating railroads in the United States.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to say in his time, since he was about to take his seat—
Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I have not quite finished. However, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I wish to state that I neglected to say, and I do not want to leave my remarks of a moment ago without saying, that I do not want anything I have said to be taken as an intimation that either the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] had any purpose in offering this amendment of cutting off the right of trial by jury, because I know there are no two men in the Senate who are more thoroughly in sympathy with the maintenance of that right. I ought to have said that in my remarks before, but I say it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have said what I have said with reference to this matter for the purpose of indicating that this amendment ought to be drawn with a good deal of care.

In further reply to what the Senator from Missouri asked me with reference to the workman's compensation bill including the Government, of course such a bill, if it were passed, could be so amended. We have pending a bill that I introduced some time ago which provides in substance the same rules with reference to all employees of the Government, with reference to compensation as that which is proposed in the so-called railroad accident compensation bill. I think that is wise and proper legislation. I think we ought to enact a bill applicable to all the employees of the Government, giving them adequate compensation in all cases of injury.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator does not want to embody that in this bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; but I do want something in the bill which will compel the Government of the United States, if it engages in business operations, to assume precisely the same burden in every respect that it compels private citizens and private corporations to assume.

Mr. WALSH. I think, Mr. President, that everyone will recognize the force, in fact, the unanswerable force, of the suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with respect to this matter; but I do not know any reason why we should burden the pending bill with any provision in relation to it. What he offers obviously should come in the nature of an amendment to the employers' liability act and the act providing for compensation for those injured in the lines of activity indicated in the act to which the Senator from Oregon has referred. It seems to me the whole matter can be better considered whenever such a measure is before us.

Such an amendment will precipitate a discussion as to whether there is any more reason why compensation should be awarded to the employees of the Government on the railroads in Alaska than there is to employees of the Government who might be injured in the Public Printing Office or in a great many other places in which the Government employees are liable to be injured.

I trust we shall not burden this bill with too many amendments of that character, which would be likely to imperil it, and which will come very much more appropriately in the form of an amendment to other acts.

I am very sure that all of us here will be glad to join with the Senator from Utah in a bill which will so amend those two acts as to extend their provisions, beneficent as they are, to the case of individuals injured in Alaska.

But, Mr. President, you will understand that the purpose of the amendment under consideration is not simply to meet the case of employees of the Government who shall be injured in the operation of the road. It is intended to provide for the case of anybody who has any just cause of action against the Government arising out of the location, construction, or operation of the road. An action founded upon any kind of tort, trespass upon real estate, diversion of water and blocking of water so that it floods a man's premises, a cause of action arising out of a breach of contract, and everything else which might form the foundation of a just claim against the Government of the United States is to be adjudicated in this manner. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought not to tack on here a provision distinctly and specifically applicable to those who may have a particular cause of action. We can safely trust, it seems to me, to Congress to make the appropriate amendment to those two acts in view of this extension in its activities.

I desire to say before taking my seat, Mr. President, and I should not like to be silent in view of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], that it meets my hearty concurrence. I am perfectly willing-in fact, my own view is that it would be a wise thing-to grant the right of trial by jury in actions brought against the Government of the United States under the authority of this statute. In the framing of it, however, the committee did not think it wise to inaugurate a departure from the settled policy of the Government.

Mr. President, I desire to advert to another statute per-mitting suit against the Government of the United States which embodies the principle which has heretofore obtained. statute which denied an Indian or anyone of Indian blood a right to a tract of land to which he claims a right under a statute of the United States to sue the Government of the United States in the district court likewise prescribes that the action shall be tried by the court without a jury.

I do not believe that we are running any risk in establishing this departure, but I simply desire to have it understood that the committee are not endeavoring to deny to anybody the right of trial by jury. They are not inaugurating any departure which signifies an encroachment upon the right of trial by jury. Everything that is provided for here is in the nature of the granting of an additional right not now accorded to the citizen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is one other amendment that I desire to offer, and I think that will complete the committee amendment, except one which I am withholding at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. I offered an amendment the other day for my good friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], who has been detained at home on account of illness. I approve of the amendment, and I send it to the desk and ask to have

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On page 10, line 12, after the word "desirable" and the semicolon, insert the following:

And the President shall withdraw and withhold from private entry all public lands for at least 1 mile on either side of the right of way of said railroad as located and to withhold such lands from entry until such railroad is completed and ready for operation and further action of Concress

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the amendment read again. As I caught the reading of the amendment, it stated at least 1 mile on either side of the right of way.'

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment

will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment. I have the amendment now in my hand, and I Mr. SMOOT. notice I was right in my understanding that the amendment gave the President authority to "withdraw and withhold from private entry all public lands for at least 1 mile on either side of the right of way of said railroad." It seems to me that such withdrawal for 1 mile would be sufficient, but under this amendment the President could withdraw all the remainder of the lands in Alaska that are not now withdrawn. I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to that fact and to ask if that was their understanding when they prepared and offered the amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say, Mr. President, in fairness to the committee, that I really did not submit this amendment to them. I did not have an opportunity to do so, and I do not know how the committee feel about it. I knew they would express themselves if they disputed it. I took the liberty of doing it myself. From a hasty reading of the amendment, I thought it would limit the withdrawal to 1 mile. As a matter of fact,

I think the land has been withdrawn anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And it is rather a work of supererogation to introduce it, but inasmuch as it is simply blanketing what has already been done, it seemed to me that it could not do any harm.

Mr. SMOOT. I fully agree with the Senator from Oregon in the opinion that the lands are already withdrawn, and therefore the amendment would not affect the situation in any way; but I do feel that it would be improper for the Senate to adopt an amendment of this kind, which is so broad in its terms.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that it seems to me that it goes further than the present situation in that, as I construe this language, if the President should withdraw any land under it, then he is required to keep it withdrawn until Congress otherwise provides. He can not then restore it.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely. If the land is once withdrawn, the President can not restore it, nor can it be restored to entry unless by act of Congress. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he does not think that the withdrawal ought at least to be restricted to 1 mile?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I do, Mr. President. Mr. SMOOT. Then, I will ask the Senator if he will not offer such an amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest, then, the elimination of the words "at least."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Oregon in regard to the amendment, as to the need of it and the purpose of it. Of course, authority should be given to the President to withhold and reserve such land as may be required in connection with the construction of the railroad, but I fail to see any necessity for reserving lands a mile on each side of the entire line. In some places it might be necessary to do that, but in other places there might be no reason whatever for doing it.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection I want to say that the President now has authority to withdraw all of the lands of Alaska if he wishes to do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The effect of this amendment upon that authority, of course, as the Senator from Utah knows, is to make it mandatory upon the President to reserve a mile or a 2-mile strip-as I understand, a mile strip-on each side of the railroad tracks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suppose the Senators in charge of the bill will answer your inquiries in a few moments, and I would be very much gratified to hear from them as to what their plan is with regard to this property? Do we wish the adjoining property excluded from settlement? Do we desire to preclude any business for the road when it is finished? I have prepared an amendment on a very different line that I have thought of offering, which I will read simply for information. It is as follows:

That before the President shall begin the construction of the railroad in Alaska he shall take the necessary steps to open up the public domain along the line of said road. Said public domain may be opened up either under existing land laws or, in the discretion of the President, he may direct the leasing of mineral lands or such portion of the mineral lands as he may deem advisable: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, reserve such coal lands from entry or lease, the reservation of which he deems necessary for the use of the United States. United States.

I had dictated it to my secretary more in the nature of thinking upon the subject myself than having a conclusion, but it occurred to me that we would want business on the line of the road, and that at least contemporaneously with the construction of the road something should be done that would encourage the development of business along the line of the road.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one moment further. Of course I understand there are two views to take of this matter. One would be the view that we would build the road and retain the property, improving the property belonging to the United States, with a view subsequently of selling it, when the road was finished, for higher prices than it would bring now, or of leasing the mines for very much better prices, Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I have the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Georgia-

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I will complete what I had to say in a moment, and I would rather the discussion would not

The VICE PRESIDENT. The opinion of the Chair is that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] had the floor and had yielded to other Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Senator from Utah had yielded the floor to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I yielded to the Senator, but I was not through with my statement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Utah first yielded to Mr. SMOOT. Now, then, I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only want to add, largely in accord with what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has said, that it seems to me the object of the Government in regard to the lands adjacent to this railroad not only should be to encourage occupation and settlement but to hasten occupation and settlement. Instead of delaying the advent of population to the part of the Territory that this railroad goes into, every step should be taken to get population there as early as possible. If there were any reason for shutting out settlement upon these strips of land two miles wide along the railroad then this amendment would be perfectly proper and we could very well afford to reserve a strip that wide, if there were any necessity for it—if it were needed in the plan of railroad construction, but it is not needed for that purpose and it could not possibly be needed. Unless some good reason for it shall be given by the committee, which does not occur to me, I shall be compelled to vote against the amendment.

There seems to be a misapprehension in regard to the policy of reserving lands in Alaska; at any rate, I have noticed some of the Senators who apparently favor this amendment who have denounced forest reserves. My understanding of the forestreserve law, as it is written upon the statute books, is that it encourages settlement upon the lands in the forest reserves. My contention has always been that the difficulty with the forest-reserve policy of the Government was in its administration and not in the terms of the law itself.

I have never been in favor of shutting out the use or occupation of any land, whether in a forest reserve or outside of it, and I am not in favor of adding to the burdens of Alaska what has been denounced so earnestly as an incubus upon its development, by an unnecessary further withdrawal and reservation

Mr. President, I notice that under the agree-Mr. SMOOT. ment, I have not now time to say what I intended to say on this bill, but I will take occasion to do so when I offer my amendment. I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia, however, that I heartly approve of the object of his amend ment; but I doubt very much whether it would be administered properly considering the few words contained in the amendment. I will also say to the Senator that when I speak upon my amendment I will bring to the attention of the Senate legislation now pending either before the Senate or in committee looking to the opening up and development of the resources of Alaska.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to say, if the Senator from Georgia will allow me

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one moment further, and then will take my seat. I want to say, Mr. President, that I approach the consideration of this matter with a very earnest desire, so far as possible, to do what the Senator in charge of this bill wants done, and I want to find a way to vote for all I can that he does want. It is in no spirit of antagonism that I have made the suggestions which have occurred to me, but rather in a spirit of doubt.

When the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] claimed the floor a few moments ago I was calling attention to two lines of thought that were in my mind, involving the question as to what we expected to do with Alaska. Do we contemplate the construction of railroads in Alaska for the purpose of developing property belonging to the United States which the United States Government intends to keep to make all out of it it can, or are we contemplating opening up a country according to the old system by which people can go there and take up land as rapidly as possible, preferably to find homes, or do we contemplate the union of both purposes? It occurs to me that we ought to have our policy in those regards definitely advanced along with the construction of the railroads.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that, as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], there are a number of bills pending before the Senate now, some of which have in view the very purpose suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. In addition to that, I have in course of preparation, and hope to introduce next week, a general bill having for its object the development of Alaska; so that I think the discussion of the subject matter of the proposed amendment could better go over until that time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I have not determined to offer this amendment. I dictated it rather as an immature expression of a thought that was in my mind. I do feel that we ought, in connection with the construction of any railroad in Alaska, to proceed definitely along a line that provides for the use of that Territory. I understand that the railroads there now are practically bankrupt, due to one of two things-either that there is nothing there to use or that the methods employed by the Government of handling whatever there is to use have not been sufficiently intelligent to furnish opportunity for use. Therefore the construction of a railroad now by the Government would be practically useless, unless, along with it, there is perfected a plan for the use of the agricultural lands and mineral lands, so as to furnish business for the railroad to be constructed.

I have during the progress of this discussion brought myself to the place where I am about willing to vote for one line to go up into Alaska, intelligently selected and properly constructed; but I do not like to leave it entirely free in the shape it is, nor to any kind of selection. I wish the committee had before the Senate a well-prepared plan to build one line from the water to Fairbanks, the best-selected line, splitting Alaska: and I wish also they had a definitely prepared plan to develop the Territory which could be tried out. If it proved a success and the Territory did develop and took care of the road, then afterwards I would be no obstacle in the way of further development

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have an amend-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am through.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an amendment which I expect to offer to this bill, providing for the building of one main line from tidewater to the interior of Alaska to subserve, in my opinion, the very purpose suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, lest any misapprehension should be entertained concerning my attitude toward this amendment, I desire to say simply that I am in entire accord with the views expressed in relation to it by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter]. I can see no occasion at all for the incorporation of an amendment of this character in the bill; indeed, I should regard it as a most unfortunate thing if the President were compelled, whether he saw any public reason for it or not, to withdraw from entry this vast tract, a mile on each side of a railroad through Alaska, 450 miles in length. A thousand miles are authorized, in fact, which would make 2,000 square miles of land withdrawn from any kind of entry-bear in mind, any kind of entry at all—so that prospectors could not go within that region a thousand miles long and 2 miles wide and locate a quartz mine or locate a placer bed, and the settler could not establish a farm or a homesteader could not go there and pick out a piece of land. I should regard a policy of that kind as entirely unfortunate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will yield just a mo-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to say that I think there might be occasions, possibly, where portions of that tract should be reserved. There might be some strategic point, a town site, or something of that kind-

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Which, under the discretion which the President has, he could withdraw; but it is an entirely different thing to make it mandatory upon him to shut out not only the miners and prospectors, to whom the Senator from Montana has so pertinently referred, but every man who wanted to take up a homestead and, encouraged by the advent of transportation, build a home there for himself and his family at some point that did not interfere in any way with the railroad and the withdrawal of which involved no public policy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the observations now made by the Senator from Washington with respect to this matter are very pertinent indeed. I myself can not conceive now of any reason why any of this land should be withdrawn, except for town-site purposes, and the President has now power and authority to withdraw any land necessary for town-site purposes or really necessary for the construction of the road or necessary to be used in connection with the road. Indeed, I feel that if the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], at whose request this amendment has been offered, were here he would recognize the force of the suggestions which have been made with respect to the policy of this amendment.

Possibly he had in mind that coal lands within that area ought not to be subject to private entry; but it is to be borne in mind that all coal lands in Alaska are now withdrawn from entry and no title to any of them can be initiated. We hope, as speedily as we can and as soon as this bill is disposed of, to have considered some measure which will take care of the coal lands when the present embargo upon their appropriation shall be lifted.

I think I have in mind the idea that was at the bottom of the proposed amendment. It is now quite common in some of the European countries, in laying out a street car line or a railroad or anything of that kind, for the Government to acquire a strip of land upon either side of the property more than adequate for the purpose of the particular public utility, upon the assumption that that land will be very largely increased in value, and by the disposition of it the Government will receive funds perhaps sufficient to pay for the construction of the work.

Everybody will recognize, however, that that principle is not applicable to the construction of a road in a remote region like Alaska, where the lands have no particular value except to the man who goes out and discovers a mine or the man who desires to locate upon a portion of the land as a homestead.

I do not think the principle is applicable there at all, and the amendment would be distinctly harmful. It seems to me the President has full power now to withdraw such lands as ought to be withdrawn, and it might very safely be left in his hands.

to be withdrawn, and it might very safely be left in his hands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe that completes the amendments of the committee, with the exception I have noted. I now submit the matter to some of the Senators who have amendments to propose and substitutes to offer.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, just after the amendment previously adopted, it is proposed to insert the following:

riously adopted, it is proposed to insert the following:

The President of the United States is hereby further empowered, authorized, and directed to construct or cause to be constructed not less than 10 nor more than 20 vessels suitable and appropriate for the freight and passenger service between the ports of Alaska and other ports on the eastern and western shores of North America, and the ports on the eastern and western shores of South America, and the ports on the eastern and western shores of South America. Said vessels shall be constructed as near as may be so that they will be suitable for use in aid of the Navy of the United States as a merchant marine. After the same are constructed, the President is hereby authorized, upon such terms as he may deem best, to lease the same to the Panama Railroad Co. For the purpose of building said vessels the President is hereby authorized to raise money, and to expend the same in accordance with the terms provided in this act, not exceeding the amount of $15.000,000.

If, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the charter of the Panama

If, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the charter of the Panama Railroad Co. would not permit said company to perform the functions herein set forth, then it shall be the duty of the President to take the necessary steps to amend the charter of said company, or, if necessary, to secure a new charter for said company that will be sufficiently broad to permit it to perform the various functions herein set forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not at this time intend to take up the time of the Senate in the discussion of this amendment. It was quite fully discussed day before yesterday, and I believe it is generally understood. I only regret that the members of the committee do not see fit to accept it. While I feel that most of them individually are probably in favor of the proposition, it seems to me that, with the Panama Railroad Co. already doing business along this line, and having been in business for 10 years, the amendment ought to appeal to every man who wants to build up a merchant marine or who wants to develop trade between North and South America. It gives to the Panama Railroad Co. power to operate these vessels both on the Atlantic Ocean and on the Pacific Ocean, through the Panama Canal, and to all the ports of South America.

If we want to meet the situation in Alaska completely, we must not only get the coal and other products of Alaska down to her ports but we must meet those products there with vessels that are not already in a combination as completely as the railroads and other things in Alaska are in a monopoly and combination

It seems to me the amendment adds to the very theory of the bill—it will give relief to Alaska, it will give us a merchant marine, and it will develop our trade with South America. As I said, however, I do not care to go into the discussion again, and, as far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator correctly states the position of individual members, or at least some of the members of the Committee on Territories, who favor the proposition involved in his amendment; but we felt satisfied that to undertake to attach it to a bill that had for its purpose the construction of a railroad in Alaska would impair its chances of passage, because I know there is much opposition to that view both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. The matter will be a proper subject of consideration later; and I am sure the Senator will have my support then, as he will have that of some other members of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I knew I should have the support of the Senator from Oregon; but I should like to call his attention to the fact that between the introduction of a bill that would provide what this amendment provides and the reaching of the present parliamentary stage, where it could be voted on by the Senate, there are a great many obstacles that are very serious in their nature. The Senator knows the probability is that if we do not improve some opportunity like the present, where it is in order to put the proposal on a bill as an amendment, we may live many a day without seeing an opportunity of getting such a bill in the present parliamentary situation. It seems to me, therefore, that those who favor it ought to support it now.

Mr. President, the amendment will add to the bill. It will make the bill effective. It strengthens a weak point in the bill, which is that while it seeks to develop Alaska and will develop Alaska by the building of railroads, it makes no provision by which, after the products of Alaska have reached her ports, they can be carried to the other ports of the world, particularly of the Pacific coast, without running up against a steamboat combination such as now exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the oll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Gronna	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Bradley	James	Perkins	Sterling
Bristow	Johnson	Pittman	Stone

Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Williams
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Fall	Myers	Shively
Callinger	Noleon	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber when the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] was submitted for consideration, and I did not have the privilege of hearing it discussed. I now rise to call attention to what I think are very serious defects in the amendment.

I assume the Senator from Nebraska has in mind, in the effort he is making, the possible rehabilitation to some extent of the American merchant marine. For a great many years I gave my most earnest efforts and serious thought to this question, and succeeded in having passed through the Senate on two or three occasions bills that would have been of great benefit to the American merchant marine; but those bills failed to become laws.

More recently a provision was placed in the Underwood tariff bill as it came from the House restoring the ancient custom of preferential duties; but that has been dropped out, or, at any rate, it is not considered possible of enforcement under existing conditions. I suggested at the time that it could not possibly be enforceable because of the commercial treaties we have with some 30 foreign countries.

Mr. President, the provision that the Senator proposes is fatally defective in very many respects, as I shall point out. In the first place, the Senator proposes that the President of the United States shall build or cause to be built not less than 10 nor more than 20 vessels, and there is no restriction whatever as to their tonuage in the amendment. The President may build vessels of 1,000 tons or 2,000 tons or 5,000 tons or 10,000 tons, as suits his purpose. I can see very clearly that vessels might be constructed under this provision that would be utterly useless as either merchant vessels or vessels to be used in time of war.

Another defect is that there is no speed limit required. They can be vessels that will make 5 knots an hour, 10 knots an hour, or 20 knots an hour, according to circumstances, but the speed limit is not specified, as it ought to be.

The material of which they shall be constructed is not specified. They may be wooden vessels, which probably they would not be, but the specification that they shall be steel vessels is very important from my point of view.

Another thing is that these vessels according to this amendment can be built in American shipyards or in shipyards in Germany, or Japan, or Scotland, or in the shipyards of any other country in the world. It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we are to do anything toward reviving our shipbuilding industry and giving employment to American mechanics we ought to require, as every foreign country requires of its merchant vessels, that they shall be built in the shipyards of our own country.

While it is provided that these vessels may be used in aid of the United States as a merchant marine, there is no provision for having them constructed in a manner to make them useful for that purpose.

I say that the amendment is defective in so many important particulars that I feel sure the Senate will hesitate a long time before engrafting it on this bill.

Mr. President, I have prepared a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, but I will say in this connection that I shall not offer it as a substitute as in Committee of the Whole. I entertain the belief that the Senate will not agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and if the Senate does not agree to it the matter will be allowed to drop, so far as I am concerned:

The substitute that I have proposed is as follows:

The substitute that I have proposed is as follows:

On page 8, after line 20, add the following:

"The President of the United States is hereby further empowered, authorized, and directed to cause to be constructed not less than 10 nor more than 20 vessels suitable and appropriate for freight and passenger service between foreign ports and the ports of Alaska and also between ports on the eastern and western shores of North America and ports on the eastern and western shores of South America. Said vessels shall be American-built steamships, officered by American. Said vessels shall be constructed after the latest and most approved types, with all the modern improvements and plans for ocean steamers. They shall be divided equally into two classes. The first class shall be steel screw steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons. The second class shall be steel steamships capable of maintaining a speed of 16 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons. The second class shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, and according to plans and specifications to be submitted by the Secretary of the Navy. They shall be of sufficient strength and stability to carry and sustain the working and operation of at least four effective rifled cannon of a caliber of not less than 6 inches, and shall be of the highest rating known to maritime commerce. Before being accepted for the service herein provided for they shall be thoroughly inspected by a competent naval officer or constructor, detailed for that service, by the Secretary of the Navy, and such officer shall report, in writing to the Secretary of the Navy, and such officer shall report, in writing to the Secretary of the Navy, as suitable for the service required shall be accepted by the President."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not understand from the Senator from New Hampshire, as he read his amendment, what would be the cost of these vessels?

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not state the cost, Mr. President, but I will say to the Senator that from investigations I made two years ago, beyond a question they will cost at least $1,000,-000 each, and I think likely more than that amount; certainly, no vessel which can be converted into an auxiliary cruiser and be made available in time of war can be constructed for a less amount.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator believes that they could be constructed for about $20,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it possible that 20 vessels could be constructed for that amount, particularly if they were only of two types, as I have provided, because they would then be standardized and could be built much cheaper than if they were of different types.

Mr. President, this amendment that I have read follows closely the law of 1891, known as the ocean mail act. It will be remembered that we give a subvention to steamships carrying the mails, provided they are constructed according to plans and specifications of the Secretary of the Navy, and so constructed that they can carry a certain number of cannon effective in war, and that they shall have a speed that will make them really effective in times of war. It is idle for us to construct ships that will make 10 knots an hour to compete with the ships of a foreign country that will make 20 knots. If we are going into this expenditure, we ought to provide every possible precaution, so that the vessels may be of the highest possible type and in every way available for the purpose to which it is proposed to put them.

I will say frankly, Mr. President, that I do not believe in this legislation on the pending bill. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska; but if it shall pass as in Committee of the Whole, I will then take the liberty of proposing, when the bill reaches the Senate, the substitute which I have read.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate further. This is a vital question, one in which I am deeply interested. If we are to do anything along that line on this bill, we ought to do it so that our legislation will result in the greatest possible good to the Government and to the commercial interests of the people of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in connection with the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and desire to read for information an amendment which I have prepared to the first section of the bill.

Amend, on page 8, line 8, by inserting after the word "facilities" the following proviso:
"Provided, however, That the President shall not begin the construction of any railroad or railroads the construction of which, together with the necessary equipment, docks, wharves, and terminal facilities, shall exceed the cost of $15,000,000."

Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words with reference to this subject. It must be evident from the report of the engineers that $15,000,000 would construct perhaps the most desirable line from water to Fairbanks. I would vastly prefer that we should build one line and test it out before we undertake so extensive an expenditure and involve our Government in so many possible lines that may or may not prove a success.

I call attention to the proposed amendment at this time on account of the fact that the two Senators have suggested other uses to which the money of the Government might perhaps well be put, just as well, and perhaps better, than by spending $40,000,000 in Alaska. Twenty vessels would be upon the same line as the development of the road in Alaska, excepting that they would be broader in their use; their service would be more general. They would be more for the welfare of the general public and for the good of all the country than this very large appropriation to Alaska.

I do not believe I can agree at this time to commit myself to the proposition to build these vessels. I may or may not do so when the measures are before the Senate. I utilize the proposition to call attention to the other important services to which the money can be placed if we have more in the Treasury than we at this time need. I call attention to the general welfare that would be served by these vessels, especially the vessels suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GAL-LINGER], which would ply not alone upon the Pacific, but also touch some of our eastern ports as well as the Pacific. I refer to the amendment offered and the suggested amendment as arguments to sustain my view that $40,000,000 ought not to be invested in this proposed development in Alaska, but that $15,000,000 would be enough to build a road from the coast to Fairbanks and touch our coal fields and our copper fields and our gold fields. If we shall show intelligent business judgment in handling these properties and in the management of this road, it will be time enough later on to put more money into the construction of additional roads. If we find that the road is a failure and that this scheme is not a wise one, we will have saved the other $25,000,000 and will have time and opportunity, I think, to spend it in some other way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in reference to the proposition for the construction of a line of steamers, the Senator from Georgia is mistaken in assuming that a part of this appropriation of $40,000,000 is to be used in that connection. I think that was to be an additional appropriation. But I hope the Senate will vote down both these propositions, because I think the proposition to build a line of steamers would so overload the bill that it would practically lead to its defeat. I know the Senator who offered the amendment is friendly to the bill and to its general purposes.

Now, with reference to the estimate of $15,000.000 for an appropriation to build a railroad, I do not know where the Senator from Georgia gets his estimate. It is at variance with every estimate that has been made by engineers and with every estimate that has been made by anyone for the purpose of constructing the road. In other words, it would result in the road beginning nowhere and ending nowhere. If the Senator is really in sympathy with the development of Alaska—and he says frankly he does not know whether he is or not; in other words, he does not know whether he is in favor of building a road or not-

Mr. SMFTH of Georgia. Mr. President— Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He would not insist on reducing the appropriation from $40,000,000 to $15,000,000. I hope the Senate will vote down both amendments,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am cordially in sympathy with the development of Alaska. I am not sure that it would be wise for the Government to build one road, but if the bill were limited to one road from the coast to Fairbanks I would vote for it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to explain to the Senator from Georgia some of the troubles the committee had in trying to arrive at this matter as bearing upon the passage of any bill in relation to the subject. The hearings lasted for Friends of the various proposed routes in nearly six weeks. Alaska appeared before the committee and they have friends in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. apparent to the committee that if we recommended any particular route, instead of being a consideration as to whether also of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], I Alaska should be developed by a Government-built railroad it would be a consideration as to which route was the best of the three proposed routes. It was impossible for the committee to succeed in the passage of a bill before Congress by recom-mending any particular route.

As the Senator from Georgia said yesterday, the facts found by the railroad commission—not their conclusion, mind you, but the facts presented to Congress-seem to indicate that one of those roads will be far more serviceable in the development of Alaska than any other. I am satisfied that the President of the United States and those with whom he will very probably consult in adopting a route will come to the same conclusion the Senator from Georgia and other Senators who are familiar with this subject have reached. But, I repeat, from the evidence before the committee and from our experience in this matter I am satisfied, if we select any particular route, that Congress will never pass such bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Nevada will

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Conceding that that is true, and that it would be unwise for us at this time to name the route, would it not be practical for the bill still to provide that there should be only one route rather than to leave it in its present indefinite shape, permitting the President to select the route?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that believe with all this responsibility placed upon the President of the United States, he would very gladly consult any Member of Congress who was interested in this matter, and that, if the consensus of opinion, or, at least, the best opinion was that there should be only one route, he would undoubtedly see that the money was expended on only one route.

Now, let me make this suggestion to the Senator. It has been argued here very forcefully that $35,000,000 is not sufficient to build the two routes which have been suggested by the railroad commission. I am inclined to believe that that is true. If that is true, then the $35,000,000 will have to be applied to one Now, take the Senator's proposition of limiting the amount to $15,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator pardon me a moment'

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If those managing the enterprise complete one route and start another, the $35,000,000 or the $40,000,000 not being sufficient to complete both, it will place us in the attitude of being compelled at once to leave the other route only half completed or make another large appropriation to finish it. How would it do to provide that the mone; should not be used to start any route unless the appropriation carried a sufficient sum to finish that route?

Mr. PITTMAN. I see no objection to that at all. I see no objection to it, because I have sufficient confidence in the President to know that he would do that, anyway. If anyone has any doubt about whether he would do that, he may propose the Now, let me say just one word in regard to the suggested amendment of the Senator, that there shall be only $15,000,000 appropriated. He has in mind that the best route is the central route; that is, the route from Seward to Fairbanks. The estimate of the railroad commission is that it will take seventeen million and odd dollars to build not from Seward to Fairbanks but from the end of the Alaska & Northern Railroad to Fairbanks. If we purchase the Alaska & Northern Railroad, so as to make it a part of the Government road, or if we parallel it, it will increase the amount to the neighborhood of $30,000,000, according to the testimony in the printed hearings. Consequently, even if we build the Seward route alone, an appropriation of $15,000,000 would only be about half enough to construct such route.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I only put in those figures to attract attention to the subject. I did not mean that it would be finally the proper figure.

To build to the end of the Alaska & Northern over the central route to Fairbanks will cost $17,000,000, and it may not be sufficient, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggested the other day. If we parallel the Alaska & Northern, it will take at least $30,000,000 in all to build from Seward over the central route to the Yukon River. As I said before, I do not believe this money will build more than one central trunk line. I think the President will realize that, and I think the Senator from Georgia, with the interest he has manifested in this subject, will be able to consult with the President or those who have charge of this matter and probably convince them as he is trying to convince us now.

On behalf of the committee I want to say that there were many splendid suggestions offered to the committee; there were a good many amendments offered to the committee that contained much good; but from the experience the members have had, and from the discussion they have had with Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, they are satisfied that if you encumber this bill with any such amendments you are going to defeat it.

Now, take the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. That met with a great deal of favor in the committee among some. Others were bitterly opposed to it. Some argued that the exception in favor of building Government railroads in Alaska does not exist as to building Government vessels on the Pacific Ocean. The committee is not prepared to debate that question. I do not believe this body is prepared to debate that question. I do not believe the House of Representatives will debate that question. I am satisfied if we tack that amendment on this bill there will be so much doubt aroused in the minds of Members of this body and of the House of Representatives that they will find the only safe course is to vote against the bill.

On behalf of the committee I appeal to the Senator from Nebraska not to press his amendment. I appeal to him to place it in a separate bill and to bring it before this body, because he, as a member of the committee, knows exactly the fight that we had in the committee. I ask the Senate, or at least those Members of the Senate who are in favor of the passage of this bill, to limit it to the plain, simple proposition that the Government shall appropriate $40,000,000 to build railroads in Alaska—$35,000,000 for the building of the road and $5,000,000 for equipment. If you will do that, I believe you will pass this bill. If you do not do that, even if we pass the bill through the Senate, I am informed on good authority that it will very probably never pass the House of Representatives. I know Senators will say, why should we consider them, or why should we consider anyone? I say, in answer to that, this is a practical question, it is a serious question, and we have no right to take chances by encumbering the bill with legislation that may defeat it, when that legislation can be brought before this body for determination in a separate bill. I therefore hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say in answer to the Senator from Oregon, and also in answer to the chairman of the committee, that their argument that this amendment, if adopted, would defeat the bill, is not, in my judgment, well taken. I know that they will both concede and that they both believe I am as earnestly in favor, in a general way, of this legislation as they are. I would very much prefer to have the bill amended by providing that it should be operated by the Government or the Panama Railroad Co. instead of giving the President the authority to lease it. But, notwithstanding that, I am just as earnestly anxious to have the bill become a law as any member of the Committee on Territories. In answer to their argument, I want them to observe that when the amendment I propose is voted on you will find that every Senator here who is against the bill and will eventually vote against the bill will vote against the amendment. I am not criticizing them. Their position is logical.

I am not finding fault with any Senator because he is opposed to the amendment or because he is opposed to the bill, but I think that is a complete answer to the suggestion that if this amendment is adopted it will mean the defeat of the bill, because if that were true you would find those Members who want to defeat the bill favoring the amendment. But, be that as it may, the same thing might be said about any amendment. I believe myself that this amendment is as important as the balance of the bill. I do not believe that you will meet with success in developing Alaska if you fail to make some provision that will meet the combination of steamships that will carry the products of Alaska as soon as they come to the shore.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] has offered several suggestions as to why this amendment is not a good measure. In my judgment, none of those reasons can properly be urged if the Senator will give full force to the amendment I have suggested. He says, in the first place, that there are no restrictions as to tonnage. That is true; but the amendment gives to the President of the United States authority to build such vessels as in his judgment may be necessary; and then he should take in view the provision of the amendment which says that they shall be constructed of such a tonnage and of such a nature of construction as will make them beneficial as a merchant marine in aid of the Navy in time of war. That gives to the President a large discretion, I will admit, and many arguments could be made that we should not give to the President so great a discretion, but it is no greater than is given in the bill, and, in my judgment, it is one in the abuse of which there is no danger.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I was unavoidably absent, as I stated, when the Senator from Nebraska proposed his amendment. I presume that he discussed its provisions when he presented it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska occupied the floor only two minutes, according to the record.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not going to object to the Senator completing his speech anyway.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not take up more than 15 minutes, of course, altogether; perhaps not that much.

The Senator says that the material is not specified. I think the answer is that it is in the discretion of the President, and he will be able even better than a legislative body to discover just how the vessels ought to be built through the experts that he will have to give him the proper necessary expert advice.

There is no speed limit, the Senator says. I think it would be out of order to have such a thing as a speed limit in the Senate of the United States. But the President would have authority to provide, if the amendment should become a law, just exactly what the speed limit shall be, and whether the vessels shall be built of steel. He has within his discretion any number that he will provide for, with 10 as a minimum and 20 as a maximum. The amendment follows the lines of the bill, giving him the same discretion with regard to those vessels that is given in regard to the railroads. The discretion must be vested somewhere. It seems to me that the objections of the Senator from New Hampshire are fully met.

Mr. President, I realize that those who are opposed to the bill will vote against the amendment. I realize that the friends of the bill are advocating and asking others to vote against the amendment. They fear it will injure the bill. These two ends are working against the middle, as it were. It seems to me, as I have said several times before, that this amendment will strengthen the bill and make it complete. Unless some amendment of this kind is agreed to the bill will not be complete, for the reason that the development of Alaska alone will do it no good unless the products of Alaska can come to the ports of world without meeting monopoly anywhere, not only in Alaska proper but on the ocean after the products are afloat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] to the committee amendment as amended. [Putting the question.]

The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I could not let this opportunity pass without expressing my approval of the spirit of this amendment. Nine years ago when I made a report to the Secretary of War in regard to the operations of the Panama Railroad, I recommended that, unless the steamship monopoly on the Pacific coast was broken up by private enterprise, the Government ought to construct ships and put a steamship line on the Pacific Ocean. That monopoly has existed since, and I believe it practically exists now. I believe that the Panama Railroad Co. should be authorized to establish a steamship line on the Pacific Ocean, to be run in connection with the one it now has on the Atlantic Ocean between New York and Colon. This amendment offers an opportunity for the establishment of such a line, and I shall vote for it.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] yesterday, in referring to the operation of the Panama Railroad, said he believed it had been extravagantly managed and that a private railroad company could have transacted the business better than the Panama Railroad Co. has done. I take it for granted that the Senator from Georgia had not given sufficient study to the question to form an accurate conclusion or he would not have made such a remark.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Georgia and the attention of the Senate to a comparison of the management of the Panama Railroad since it was acquired by the United States Government with its management before it was acquired by the United States Government, when it was conducted as a private corporation. I invite a comparison of the management of the Panama Railroad with that of the New York & New Haven Railroad, with the 'Frisco, and with the exploitation of the Alton Railroad by the Harriman syndicate. Further, I invite a comparison of its management with the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad or of any other railroad in the United States. The Senator will find that its management has been better, from a business point of view, than has that of any of these privately managed railroads. He will also find that whenever the Panama Railroad management has departed from what sound business judgment would dictate it has been to satisfy some political exigency that the officers could not avoid and not from the free will and normal attitude of the managers of that road.

There is a great deal of alarm here because it is said the Government is about to go into some kind of business that is not a Government function. I do not want to alarm my ultraconservative friends, but we might as well face the question now frankly and fairly; but unless the management of cor-porations in this country, both industrial and transportation, show a little more consideration for the public welfare the United States Government within the next 10 years will be transacting a great deal more of the private business of the country than it is now transacting. The American people will not be exploited by a lot of selfish men who happen to get control of the stock of a corporation; they will not continue to be exploited in the future as they have been in the past.

I am not here advocating the Government ownership of the railroads of the country and the Government operation of the railroads; I am not yet ready to take that step, because I would prefer that the railroads be controlled by the Government rather than operated by the Government; but the system of operation which has been followed by the Government in the management of the Panama Railroad offers an example to the people of the United States that is food for reflection by all thoughtful men.

I do not care to cause any undue apprehension by my friends who are so afraid of the Government meddling in private business, but I invite their attention to the fact that the Panama Railroad can be used by the Government of the United States in the construction and operation not only of the railroads in Alaska, but of steamship lines on the Pacific Ocean or elsewhere, in my opinion, to the advantage of the people of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he really believes—and I ask this question merely for information—that a company that was chartered by the State of New York for the purpose of operating a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama can, by a provision in a bill of this kind, be put in charge of a railroad in Alaska and a steamship line across the oceans of the world?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Let me follow that out a little, if the Senator please

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Senator to do that for my information. I may be very dense in my conception of the matter.

The Senator from New Hampshire is not dense; he is anything but dense. He is as bright a man as there is in this body, and his mind works with great accuracy and precision and also with rapidity.

The Panama Railroad, it is true, was chartered to construct and operate a line of railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, and also steamship lines. What else is the Panama Railroad Co. doing now? The Panama Railroad Co. is running an icecream factory at Colon that manufactures more than 700 gallons of ice cream a day and sells it; the Panama Railroad Co. is running two hotels on the Isthmus of Panama that are as fine as any hotels in tropical America; the Panama Railroad Co. is running more than 30 eating houses on the Isthmus of Panama, and it furnishes as good a meal and for as little money as can be had in any country on the globe under similar circumstances; the Panama Railroad Co. is running a cold-storage plant; it is running a meat market, and it uses more than 700 quarters of meat a week; it is running retail butcher shops, and in Panama, if the Senator will go there, he can buy a porter-house steak, have it cooked in the Panama Hotel, and get meat of a better quality than he will get in the city of Washington for the same money.

Mr. LIPPITT and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair. Mr. BRISTOW. Just a moment. I want to get through with the Panama Railroad.

The Panama Railroad Co, is running a steam laundry which is as good as any laundry in Washington; the Panama Railroad Co. is running between 30 and 40 grocery stores, and it is running them with success; the Panama Railroad Co. is marketing all of the coal that is sold in Panama; it even sells the Panama Canal Commission the coal that it uses in operating its steam yield, and to whom?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas

Mr. BRISTOW. It is also running an ice plant, as has been suggested to me, and a lot of other things; I have not nearly enumerated all of them, and I must decline to yield until I get through answering the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Panama Railroad Co. is doing all those things; and I say that it is perfectly feasible and proper and sensible for us to authorize it to establish a steamship line from Panama to Alaska and to extend the Panama Railroad into Fairbanks if we want to do so. It can do this to increase the business across the Isthmus of Panama or across the railroad which it has established in Panama and which can take from the coal fields of Alaska

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. BRISTOW. Just a moment-the coal that it sells to the customers of the world as they pass through the Panama Canal. That would be in perfect harmony with its charter and in perfect harmony with good common business sense. I think now

I have answered the Senator's question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I fail to observe that these various activities of the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama have anything to do with extending its operations into Alaska. The much abused New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. and the Boston & Maine Railroad Co. have eating houses all along their lines controlled by the railroad; but that is a little side business; it is not in their charter, though they do it.

My question however, is a serious one—and the Senator answers it in his way very vehemently—and that is, whether we can amend the charter granted to the Panama Railroad Co. by the State of New York so as to extend its activities into Alaska?

Mr. BRISTOW. We do not need to amend it.
Mr. GALLINGER. No, provided they pay no attention to the charter; but all the same the charter does not give them authority to operate in Alaska.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not necessary to amend the charter. Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire was not present when my amendment was read; but he will find that there is in the amendment a provision that, if in the opinion of the Attorney General the things provided for in the amendment can not be done under the charter, the President shall take the necessary steps to have the charter, the President shall take the necessary steps to have the charter amended or a new one granted permitting those things to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Nebraska refer to the charter of the Panama Railroad Co.?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Surely, the President could not do that of his own volition. He can do many things, but not that.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly not; but the Senator does not think for a moment, does he, that there would be any difficulty in getting a charter? We could even authorize it by a law of Congress, if we wanted to do so. If Congress favored this bill, they would certainly take the necessary steps to secure a proper

Mr. GALLINGER. I have observed that there is a great deal of difficulty in doing anything in the Congress of the United States, and I am not quite sure that we could do that

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will close and let him have the floor.

Mr. President, I do not wish it to be understood that I am. in favor of the Government of the United States performing all of these functions here in our own country; I do not think it is necessary. The Panama Railroad Co. has been used to perform these functions in Panama, because it could perform them better than anybody else could do it, and when the Panama Railroad Co. can be used to perform a function and can serve the people of the United States better than a private company can serve them, the Panama Railroad Co. ought to be used. It is a short-sighted policy for those who are afraid of socialism to refuse to take a step which is legitimate and in the public interest because they fear it will be the recognition of a policy to which they are opposed.

The Government Printing Office down here has an element of socialism in it. It is a Government printing office; it prints books and pamphlets for pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. And at a high cost.

Mr. BRISTOW. At a high cost; that is true. If private enterprises can underbid it, they do so. Then there is no fear of the Government monopolizing the printing business of the country because we have a Government Printing Office. would like my conservative friends on both sides of the Chamber-I believe there are a few more of them on this side of the Chamber on this bill than there are on the other side, because the exigency or the stress of argument is a little more forcible on the other side than it is here, from some quarters at least-I hope that Senators will not be afraid to open their minds to a fair and free consideration of the question that we have here, with a view of doing that which will best serve the interests of the country and its people. We have in Panama constructed a canal and operated a railroad; we have a situation up in Alaska which demands that the Government take hold of it, control it, and manage it, and I am in favor of doing it right and constructing the railroad, and I would also construct the ships which are to operate under its supervision.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of discussion here of the powers and duties of the Panama Railroad Co. and on the question as to whether we can in effect amend the charter of that corporation. How does it become material whether we can or not? As I understand, the Panama Railroad Co. is in effect the United States Government; it is only an instrument through which the Government acts. The Government owns all of its stock. If a corporation, a railroad company, or any other kind of a corporation is necessary in order to enable the Government to carry out any of the purposes of this bill, it is not going to take very long to organize another corporation for that purpose, so that it seems to me we are wasting a good deal of time in discussing the question of the Panama Railroad Co.

Of course, an act of Congress can not amend the charter of a railroad company organized under a State law, and it seems to me equally clear, from what has been said here about the powers of the Panama Railroad Co., that it can not legally and within its powers operate in Alaska; but that, it seems to me, is a matter of no great consequence. We can easily provide the corporation if one is necessary. But why is a corporation necessary at all? Why may not the Government of the United States directly and through its officers do what is necessary to be done in the construction and operation of this railroad without a corporation just as well as with it?

I do not know what it was that moved the United States to purchase the stock of the old Panama Railroad Co. I suppose there was some apparently good reason for it at that time; but I am utterly unable to see why it is necessary that the Government should own a railroad corporation for the urpose of conducting the affairs that are intended to be provided for in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to submit to the Chair this question: The Chair called for a vote, the vote was taken, and the Chair announced that the "ayes seemed to have it." That has not been questioned as yet, and it seems to me that the only duty the Chair has left is to declare the amendment carried, unless some Senator takes some other step.

Mr. PITTMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said that the "ayes seemed to have it," and thereupon the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERIAIN] at once called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will withdraw the request for the present if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for the year and

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think we ought to have a call for a quorum if that is going to be done, and I suggest the absence

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators anvered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, this amendment orders the President of the United States to build and put into the commercial trade of this country not less than 10 nor more than 20 steamships adapted to ply between ports of Alaska and ports on the eastern and western shores of North America and ports on the eastern and western shores of South America, upon such terms as he may deem best, to lease the same to the Panama Railroad Co., and to spend not exceeding the amount of $15,000,000 for this purpose.

I do not think that there has ever been—there certainly has not been to my knowledge—a proposition of that magnitude pending before Congress during my service here which, in my opinion, had so slight a basis of merit and which hung upon such a slender demand. The whole proposition is fraught with dangers and embarrassments. It is in this country an unheard-of thing; it is an attempt to embark the country upon a new field of Government activity and exploitation.

It is more or less immaterial to me what company the President may lease these boats to after they are built, or whether the Government operates them itself. The Government will have upon its hands $15,000,000 worth of steamboats out there on the Pacific coast in commercial business, hunting for cargoes to carry, and the deficit, if they incur any deficit, would have to be paid for out of the money of the taxpayers of the country.

I do not know of anybody who is asking for this legislation. I know of no argument or evidence that warrants me in voting for it out of hand simply because it is offered on this floor as an amendment to this bill.

It is admitted that if the President should lease these vessels to the Panama Railroad Co. he would lease them to a company which, under its charter as it stands, issued by the State of New York, would be utterly unauthorized to use them for the purpose for which they are designed. There can be no question whatever that the charter of the Panama Railroad Co. was issued by the State of New York to Mr. Aspinwall and his friends to build a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, and it would be absolutely ultra vires for that company to attempt to run steamboats between Alaska and South America. Under the wildest stretch of language no court in Christendom, in my opinion, would for a moment sustain the claim that that company had such authority.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will inquire of the Senator if that company has not already operated steamship lines from the ports of the United States on the Pacific coast to Central and South

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The company can do anything that is necessary to build the Panama Canal, for which it was chartered. No doubt it has operated boats not only between the termini suggested by the Senator from Kansas, but between New York City and Panama and wherever it was necessary to do anything or procure anything for accomplishing the pur-pose for which the company was chartered; but nobody, in the wildest flight of his imagination, can claim that it is necessary in the construction or operation of either the Panama Railroad or the Panama Canal to build $15,000,000 worth of steamboats to connect with a railroad that is not yet chartered, to be built through the moraines and glaciers of Alaska Territory, dismembered from continental United States, and up in the neighborhood of the Bering Sea and the North Pole. It is wild and absurd as a legal contention. However, I do not care to waste any more time upon that, because it is self-evident to every lawyer.

It is said by the Senator from Nebraska, in order to heal that perfectly patent defect in the capacity of the company to operate the boats, if the President should lease them to the company, that the Attorney General or the President may go up to the State of New York and appear, with his hat in his hand, in the lobby of the capitol at Albany and beg them so to amend the charter that the United States of America may utilize a New York State corporation to do something that it does not want to do itself.

In my opinion, that would be a shameful spectacle. I do not think the United States of America has fallen to the level where it wants to ask the permission of any State legislature to accomplish any of the functions that all the States of this Union have conferred upon the Central Government. I do not want it to be at the mercy of the States.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator from Connecticut think it is necessary for the Government to utilize the Panama Railroad Co. in order to operate these boats or to construct a railroad in

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not. I entirely agree with the Senator that it is absolutely unnecessary; and why the make-shift, if that is the proper term by which to describe it, or the artificial arrangement is sought to be made is beyond my comprehension. We do not propose to call upon the Panama Railroad Co., chartered by the State of New York, to go up to Alaska to spend $40,000,000 in building this railroad for us because it built the Panama Railroad. Why should we call upon the Panama Railroad Co. to go up there and run the steamboats that are proposed to be run in connection with the railroad that the Government is to build and operate?

The whole proposition is, I will not say half baked, because that is not a classical phrase, but not well thought out; and it is not a proposition that any Senator here, if he, as trustee of anybody's estate, had control of $15,000,000, would invest it in and stand up in a probate court and give an account of his stewardship. Mr. CUMMINS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. How much time have I left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has seven minutes.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield for a question.
Mr. CUMMINS. I wish simply to ask a question. Does the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska require the President to operate these vessels through the Panama Rail-

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no. Mr. CUMMINS. Then, assuming that it does not, if the President finds the obstacles which are pointed out very graphically by the Senator from Connecticut-and I think some of them are very substantial-it is not necessary that he shall operate the vessels in that way?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, not at all. It is entirely optional with the President.

Mr. CUMMINS. So the Senator from Connecticut is really discussing a rather immaterial and irrelevant incident?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I am trying to brush it aside and not waste any more time on it.
Mr. CUMMINS. The real question is whether the Government of the United States wants to acquire and operate 10 or more steamships?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes: that is it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the real question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Exactly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Connecticut has not yet mentioned that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I probably shall not have time to mention it if I have but six minutes more, and there are 96 Senators who each want one of them.

I barely touched upon the question the other day in an off-hand way, and that is what I am doing now, as to the policy of the Government engaging in general commercial business, with some possible freight to be carried for its Navy in the shape of coal. I say that it is not at all demonstrated to me at the present time that we ought to engage in it, now at least. Admitting that if the United States Government owns Alaska as its possession it may be constitutional for it to engage in functions there in which it would not be constitutional for it to engage in a State of the Union, I say the question of policy still

The Senator from Nebraska is quite correct so far as concerns myself, at least, that if I were at liberty to vote upon both propositions, his amendment and the bill itself, I should vote against both. I shall vote against one, and should vote against the other if I were not paired.

Whatever may be the merits of the present building of this railroad, however, I can see no merit in the proposition sprung upon the floor here to affix to it these steamboats to ply to South America. I think we ought to make haste slowly in this matter. If this railroad will not be built for several years, as the chairman of the committee announced on the floor the other day, why not wait and see what the railroad is carrying, and whether ships owned by the citizens of this country offer in sufficient numbers to carry the goods brought down to the coast of Alaska, before having $15,000,000 worth of steamships built, with nothing to do, waiting to receive some conjectural freight that may be brought down there?

This whole matter is an experiment. If the road is to be built, and what is brought down is not cared for, the Government can easily build very quickly, or buy in the market, all the ships that will be necessary to take care of what ?reight is at first brought down there until the country is exploited.

My main objection, however, at this time to this whole legislation, which I suppose is going to be enacted, is that I do not believe this country has made up its mind what it wants to make the future of Alaska. If Alaska is to be regarded as a Government coal yard and developed as such, owned by the Government forever, not allowing any of its inhabitants to acquire title to any of its lands; if its resources are to be exploited for the Government and the whole Territory is to be regarded as a cold-storage plant and a fuel bunker and a butler's pantry for the Nation, then, of course, the Government has to go in and do all these things. At the next session of Congress, if this bill passes, I expect to see several bills and propositions pending to furnish to the poor people up there, who they say can not build any railroads or do any of these things for themselves as they have been done in other States, heat, light, power, provisions, and all the things that a socialistic government would be expected to furnish to its wards and tenants and lessees and "serfs," if that is the word that will describe the future condition of these glorious people that are to be coddled and taken care of at the expense of the rest of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I said in the opening of the debate, this is only one of the steps we shall have to take in order to make effective that which we are now authorizing; that is to say, the building of this railroad. Before we ever receive any real benefit from the building of the railroad we shall have to go much further than the building of the railroad. I think the proposition the Senator has presented is one of the other steps which we must necessarily take at some time if we follow up the principle embodied in the proposition of building a railroad.

Of course, by the time we get the railroad built and in opera-tion the public sentiment may have changed, and we may not ever take the other steps; but the railroad will either drift back into private hands and the whole matter will come under private control and private operation, or else we shall have to do more than the building of the railroad. The question is whether we should do it now or do it at some other time.

The chairman of the committee is of the opinion that fastening this amendment upon the bill will kill the bill; that with the amendment it could not pass either this body or the House. Neither the Senator from Nebraska nor myself nor any other Senator friendly to the bill wants to do that; and, so far as I am concerned, I am inclined to accept the view of the chairman of the committee upon those things. Before taking my seat, however, I wish to say, in regard to this matter, that we are entering upon what, to my mind, is a rather exceptional experiment, and nothing could justify it except the conditions which obtain in Alaska. There would be no argument in favor of building a railroad in Alaska if it were not for the fact that Alaska is found in the condition in which it is now found, and therefore the matter is sui generis. It stands alone. When, however, the Senator from Connecticut says we must wait to see whether or not it will be successful, he should bear in mind that it never will be successful-unless, as I say, it drifts back into private hands-unless we go further than the mere building

I should like to know what benefit it will be to those contributory to the natural resources of Alaska or to the people of the Pacific coast to have a jerkwater line of railroad in Alaska that connects it with nowhere and nobody. If we do not complete a system which connects it with the coal bins of the private citizens upon the Pacific coast, we might just as well stay out of Alaska and let private enterprise exploit Alaska, and undertake to control monopolies and combinations as we have undertaken to control monopolies and combinations in the United States proper.

So, whether it is wise to urge this amendment at this time or not, I venture to say that some time or other you will adopt the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska, and you will complete the entire system, as Mr. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, so well said, of developing a commonwealth and build upon the theory that you are developing a commonwealth, or else you will let this matter drift back into private hands.

While, as I say, I do not wish to do anything which will jeopardize the first step which is taken, I think the only argnment that can be made against it by those who are in favor of the bill is the mere matter of protecting the first step so that it may be taken, and the others forced in time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if there were nothing in this matter save the development of Alaska, I should be in grave doubt concerning the vote I shall cast. I think, however, this amendment is justified and amply warranted by another consideration which, I think, ought to appeal to everyone who believes the Panama Canal is to be beneficial to the American

We already have, I think, 8 or 10 boats plying between Colon and New York. The Panama Canal is about to open. We are about to encourage, by every fair means, commerce between the eastern coast and the western coast of the United States through the Panama Canal. We had hoped the canal would serve as a regulator of transcontinental railway rates. I think-and it is a view I expressed, I believe, a year or more ago—that when the Panama Canal is opened the United States ought to take the boats it already has and do business with them through the Panama Canal, either to the north or to the south of the Pacific terminus of the canal, as the commerce may require. I am confident that the United States could expend the money involved in this amendment in no other way more beneficially to the people of this country than by establishing a line of steamships that would ply from the eastern coast of this country through the canal to the western coast of the United States or to the western coast of South America.

That is not a new subject. It is not a "half-baked" proposition. It is a matter to which the most thoughtful men of the United States have given their most careful consideration and reflection.

While I do not pretend to say that there is anything like unanimity with regard to the enterprise, I believe those who are in favor of the enlargement of the functions of the Government so as to promote the public weifare are in favor of Government ownership and operation of a line of steamships through the Panama Canal, uniting the eastern and western coasts of this country. I intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska largely because I think these additional boats will serve a valuable purpose in the commerce of the country

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May we have the amendment read? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 8 of the printed bill, at the end of section 1, to follow the amendment already agreed to at that point, it is proposed to add the following words:

point, it is proposed to add the following words:

The President of the United States is hereby further empowered, authorized, and directed to construct, or cause to be constructed, not less than 10 nor more than 20 vessels suitable and appropriate for the freight and passenger service between the ports of Alaska and other ports on the eastern and western shores of North America. Said vessels shall be constructed as near as may be so that they will be suitable for use in aid of the Navy of the United States as a merchant marine. After the same are constructed, the President is hereby authorized, upon such terms as he may deem best, to lease the same to the Panama Railroad Co. For the purpose of building said vessels the President is hereby authorized to raise money and to expend the same in accordance with the terms provided in this act, not exceeding the amount of $15,000,000.

If, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the charter of the Panama Railroad Co. would not permit said company to perform the functions herein set forth, then it shall be the duty of the President to take the necessary steps to amend the charter of said company, or, if necessary, to secure a new charter for said company that will be sufficiently broad to permit it to perform the various functions herein set forth.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word which may, at least, explain my vote on this proposed amendment.

I may state that my first impression was in favor of the amendment; but as I reflect upon the magnitude of the undertaking in building a railroad to the interior of Alaska, what it involves in the way of power, in the way of discretion on the part of the President, and in the way of the expenditure pro-vided for, I can not help but feel that that is in itself undertaking enough.

So far as this amendment is concerned, I think it might be as well submitted as an entirely independent proposition, the question being whether or not the Government of the United States shall build from 10 to 20 vessels. It is not provided in the amendment that the vessels shall be engaged in plying between the ports of Alaska and ports in the United States. The only condition is that the vessels shall be suitable and appropriate for the freight and passenger service between the ports of Alaska and other ports on the eastern and western shores of North America and the ports on the eastern and western shores of South America. It does not require, of course, that they shall be employed in that particular service. It provides, further, that they shall be suitable for use in aid of the Navy of the United States and as a merchant marine. So that, so far as the amendment affects the main proposition of constructing a railroad in Alaska, it might be submitted as an entirely different, new, and independent proposition. It has little or no relation to the provisions of the bill.

As stated, we are undertaking a great thing in the building of a railroad in Alaska at a cost of thirty-five to forty million dollars. It is in the nature of an experiment, as we all admit: but it is justified, as we think, for the reason that the resources of Alaska will not be developed and made available to the people of Alaska and to the people of the United States without the building of this railroad. I think that is sufficient justifica-tion for the enterprise, and I would not imperil the passage of the bill by incorporating this amendment in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. Norris's amendment to the amendment was rejected. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment intended to be proposed by myself is in the form of a substitute, but I do not desire at this time to offer the amendment as a whole. At the conclusion of what I have to say I will offer an amendment to line 5, page 8, which will give the Senate a chance to demonstrate whether they are in favor of a single line of railroad, one main line, or of the authorization given the President in the bill. of building more than one line.

I have always been heartily in favor of the development of Alaska. The only way that it can possibly be developed, in my opinion, is, first, by the construction of a railroad, and, secondly, by the modification of our land laws and a different administration of the same.

It has been stated several times in this discussion that all the resources of Alaska are bottled up, and that if those resources were open for development it would be the means of bringing about a hasty settlement and development of Alaska.

Mr. President, I believe that to be the case. . I do not want the Senate to get the idea that there has been no action on the part of the members of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate to bring about this desired result. For the last six years the Public Lands Committee of the Senate has had under consideration legislation for the purpose of opening up Alaska. I wish to call attention to the fact that two years ago there was reported from the Public Lands Committee-and at that time I had the honor of being its chairman and reported the bill-a bill authorizing the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. On the 12th of this month I introduced the same bill. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and I expect in the very early future to get a report upon the bill. The bill authorizes the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. It provides for a royalty; the royalty is small, as in my opinion it should be. It provides that the royalty shall not be less than 2 per cent and not more than 5 per cent of the value of the coal for sale at the mine on all coal mined.

It also provides that no lease shall be for more than 3,200 acres of land, and that no person, corporation, or association shall be permitted to take or hold any interest as stockholder or otherwise in more than one such lease, and that any such interest held in violation of that provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General. It also provides against monopoly, both in mining and in transportation.

We have also on the calendar Senate bill 2511, a bill to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska. The object of the bill-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator before he passes the point he has been elucidating permit a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does not the Senator believe that if the coal-land laws which have already been passed, supplementing the original laws, and which were passed with sole reference to the situation in Alaska, had been allowed to have free operation the coal resources of Alaska would have been honestly developed?

Mr. SMOOT. In my opinion, of course, the coal lands of Alaska would have been developed under the Alaskan coal law; but I also desire to say in this connection that more than likely in that development the great bulk of the coal mined in Alaska would have ultimately fallen into the hands of very few people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, Mr. President, we hear that now and then—quite frequently, in fact. My own impression has been in regard to the Alaskan coal lands that there was a determination on the part of those in authority in the execution of the laws that none of these lands should be developed by private enterprise, but should be developed upon a leasing system such as that indicated by the Senator in his bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am quite sure the Senator from Wyoming understands the situation as well as any other Senator in this body, and that under present conditions it is absolutely impossible to pass through Congress a law opening the resources of Alaska for development unless it is surrounded by restrictions such as a lease law or other measures that will prevent the monopolization of those resources both in the products and in the transportation of the products of that country

As I was about to say, the object of Senate bill 2511 is to allow agricultural entries on coal lands. There are millions There are millions of acres of lands withdrawn as coal lands in Alaska the surface of which is as good agricultural land as is to be found in the Territory. Under Senate bill 2511 the entryman is allowed to enter those lands and secure title to the surface of the lands for agricultural purposes, reserving, however, the coal to the Government of the United States.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it would have been much better for Congress to have enacted laws similar to these before undertaking the building of railroads in Alaska. But I am convinced beyond a doubt that in order to develop that Territory, even with the passage of the laws referred to by me, we must have a transportation system in Alaska.

I do not believe that the President of the United States ought to be authorized to build railroads anywhere in Alaska, but as there is 99 per cent of the lands in Alaska still in the possession of the United States I believe that there is nothing wrong in the Government building one main line of railroad from tidewater into the interior of Alaska. In my opinion, that road should run from Resurrection Bay or Cordova Bay through the interior of Alaska to Fairbanks. I believe, if that system were adopted, it would develop that great Territory; and if there is to be any further aid to the Territory by the Government, I believe it ought to be appropriations to aid in building roads-wagon roads, if you please. That, in my opinion, would best develop the resources of that great Territory.

The railroad provided for in this bill will be a failure unless there is further legislation by there is further legislation by Congress. If the Government of the United States built a dozen railroads in Alaska, they would all be a failure unless legislation is passed by Congress providing for the opening up of the resources of Alaska for development by the citizens of this country.

I have no doubt in my mind that private parties would build railroads in Alaska if the resources of Alaska could be so developed. In fact, Mr. President, railroad routes were surveyed, the money secured, and the plans approved for building two great lines of railroad, to run from tidewater into the interior of Alaska; and if our land laws had been such, and if it had not become necessary to make the withdrawals to prevent monopoly, there is no doubt that by this time there would have been two main lines of railroad, with their branches and spurs, running from Cordova Bay up to the Yukon River and from Resurrection Bay, passing directly through the center of Alaska, to Fairbanks. If that had been accomplished, instead of having to-day 35,000 white people in Alaska, I believe there would have been a million people in that country.

I do not put so much importance upon the agricultural advantages of Alaska. I do not think that Alaska ever will become a great agricultural country, but she is immensely rich in coal, oil, gold, and copper, and there is no telling how many other of the precious metals. If there are no other resources in Alaska than those just mentioned by me, I predict that Alaska will yet be one of the great, successful, independent, and prosperous parts of this country.

Mr. President, I shall now offer the amendment referred to by me, and it is this: Strike out, in line 5, page 8, the following words: "such main lines for railroads," and insert the words "a main line of railroad."

So that it will read:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be located a main line of railroad from a point on tidewater-

Strike out "points" and insert "point." The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "such main lines for railroads" and insert the words "a main line of railroad," and on line 6 strike out the word "points" and in lieu insert the words "a point."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire merely to say that if this amendment of the Senator from Utah is adopted it will simply result in shutting the United States either out of the Bering River coal fields or out of the Matanuska, and will practically compel the Government to purchase the Cordova & Northwestern unless we intend to abandon the Matanuska coal field.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator I will say that I can not see why the Senator makes that statement. The Government of the United States under my amendment, which will be followed by other amendments of a similar character to make the bill conform to this one, if adopted, can build a line of railroad from Resurrection Bay to Fairbanks, if so desired, and not take into consideration the Alaska & Northern It can also build a railroad from Cordova Bay to Fairbanks without ever purchasing or considering the Copper River Railroad, or can purchase either one of these roads and extend them. The only thing is that the amendment provides the Government shall operate and control only one railroad.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I concede that that is true. The Government of the United States can go in independently of the established lines now; but assuming that the Government is confined by this bill to the construction of one main line; assuming that they will not purchase any of the established lines, but go in what is now known as the Copper River route, they can get in by a branch line to the Bering River coal field, but will be shut out from the Matanuska coal field. On the other side, if they do not, then with the Alaska & Northern, from Seward into the interior, they could build parallel with that route, but could not get into the Bering River coal field because permitted to build but one trunk line from any of these points. So, no matter which horn of the dilemma is taken by the Senator, they can not get into those coal fields by one trunk

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's bill provides for the building of switches, tracks, and so forth. If the Government of the United States builds a main line from Seward through to Fairbanks, all that would be required by any individual or company would be to build 23 miles from tidewater into the Bering coal field and there would then be competition. There would be competition then between the two great coal fields, which I think is one of the objects we ought to seek for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield. Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Utah, since I addressed the Chair, has mentioned what I was going to suggest. The Senator from Oregon, I think, states correctly the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, namely, that if the amendment were adopted it would exclude the Government from one or the other of the coal fields. But in the statement of the proposition by the Senator from Oregon he seems to leave out of consideration the fact that the Bering River coal field can be reached without any connection whatever with the Copper River & Northwestern system.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It can be reached by an extension of the line.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but it can also be reached from Controller Bay. It is my opinion, from more or less study given to the question, that any operator who reaches the Bering coal field, whether a private corporation or the Government, by that route will command the coal situation in Alaska on account of cheap transportation and the proximity of the coal to a good harbor. The operator who builds 25 miles of railroad over a flat, level river bottom, and can lay the ties on the grass, open up a gravel bed and ballast the road, for less than a million of dollars, as estimated by the engineers, so that it will be sufficient as a coal road, will occupy a strategic point so far as cheap coal in Alaska is concerned.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But I will say that if you build a line from tidewater into the Bering River coal field you stop there because you run into the mountain. You can not build a trunk line through that field.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I am speaking especially of coal. If you want to get at coal only, it is necessary only to go to the coal field. Of course, that would not solve the transportation question, but it would solve the coal question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMOOT. It would solve the coal question, and not only that but it would bring into active competition both the great coal fields of Alaska, and I think that is what the Government ought to bring about if possible.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think there is any question but that under the Senator's proposed amendment it would be impossible for the Government to utilize both these coal fields.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that. I agree to that perfectly. But, as I said before, if we develop one coal field and go through Alaska with one line and develop that part of the Territory, it seems to me that that is enough to begin with, at least.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am in favor of a single main line to be built by the Government from the tidewater into the interior of Alaska; but I hope the Senator from Utab, who also favors that general idea, will not insist upon his amendment, for it would have precisely the effect stated by the Senator from Oregon. I think that we ought to authorize a single main line. I have an amendment, offered some days ago as a substitute for section 1, which provides that limitation, but it also has a provision in it so that if the Government should conclude to take the route from Resurrection Bay, from Seward north, then it can also build a line of railroad which could in no sense be called a line of railroad leading from the east into the interior, from the ocean to the Bering coal field. Anyway, the President will have his option to take either of these routes and still reach both these coal fields; and I am sure that when the Senator from Utah has heard my amendment read, which is printed, he will be inclined to favor it rather than his own, which really interpolates matter that is hard to assimilate in this section as it is now changed. The Senator from Utah would have to change half a dozen other places in the section

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I said, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, that if the first amendment were withdrawn I should offer the substitute, which will correct all of the other provisions in the first section.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose to give the reasons for my position. While I agree with the Senator from Utah with regard to the expediency or the wisdom of limiting the present authority to a single main line, I can not vote for his amendment, because I do want to give the President authority to reach both of these coal fields.

I want to say to the Senator that the amend-Mr. SMOOT. ment which will be offered by myself, if the first amendment is carried, provides that very thing, because the amendment says: And for other Government and public uses, together with such branch lines, etc.

And the branch line to which the Senator refers in his amendment is provided for in my amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. Mr. President; the Senator from Utah is wrong about that. Suppose the President were to locate the main line beginning at Resurrection Bay and running to Fairbanks, the line from Controller Bay to the Bering coal fields would not be a branch line in any sense of the word, and we would simply be cut out of all rights to reach the Bering coal fields. They would be given over practically, under those circumstances, to the owners of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad. That would be the effect, though not intended, of course, by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. In my opinion, Mr. President, they never would be given over to the Copper River Railroad, for the reason that private parties or any corporation can go into Alaska and build a line from Controller Bay up to the Bering coal fields at an expense of something like a million dollars, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] has stated.

It seems to me that any corporation or any private party building a railroad equipped for the purpose of handling coal and capable of delivering coal to tidewater, with an expenditure in a railroad of a million dollars, will have every advantage in the world over the Copper River Railroad Co. or any other company that might build there in any other way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only mentioned that as an illustration.

Mr. CHAMBERIAIN. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order.

point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I make the point of order that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] is talking beyond his time on this matter

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah is talking in my

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator from Iowa to yield to me,

Mr. CUMMINS. I yielded to the Senator from Utah. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have nothing more to say with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot]. It seems to me that if he is really in favor—and I am sure he is—of a single main line, he will not attempt to fix up this section by the interpolation of a few words in it, but will favor the amendment which I shall presently propose.

Mr. SMOOT. To show the Senator from Iowa that I am perfectly sincere in this proposition, and that I have no pride of authorship in any way, shape, or form, I am perfectly willing now to withdraw the amendment offered by me and am perfectly willing to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment at this

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not, however, ask the Senator to do nat. I only wanted to point out to him what I thought were the objections to his amendment, which really has the same purpose in view as the one which I have prepared.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the amendment, and shall await with pleasure the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Iowa and shall be glad to vote for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the last section of the bill which was adopted as an amendment this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 8 of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That in actions for the personal injury or death of employees the liability of the Government shall be determined by the rules and subject to the limitations respecting defenses that are provided in the case of common carriers by the act of April 22, 1908, entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads to their employees in certain cases."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, for the committee I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment. I think it is a good amendment

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I now offer a substitute for section 1 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee as section 1 it is proposed to insert the following:

following:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to acquire for the United States, by construction, purchase, or condemnation, or partly by construction and partly by purchase or condemnation, a main line of standard-gauge railroad, with all necessary equipment, which main line shall extend from a safe and adequate harbor upon the south shore of Alaska to a point upon the navigable Yukon, Tanana, or Kuskokwim Rivers in the Alaska interior, together with such branches, feeders, sidings, switches, and spurs as he may deem necessary, and to operate the same until otherwise provided by Congress. The general route of said main line shall be designated by the President and filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior within 60 days after the passage of this act, and the final location shall be determined by him from time to time as may be required in the progress of the work and likewise filed with the Secretary of the Interior. The designation and location within the above limits to be such a designation and location as will, in his judgment, best promote the settlement of Alaska, develop its resources, and provide adequate and suitable transportation for coal for the Army, Navy, and other Government services; of troops, arms, and munitions of war; of the mails; and for other Government and public uses.

The authority above given shall extend to the construction and acquisition in like manner of such adequate docks, wharves, and other terminal facilities as may, in his judgment, be necessary or convenient for the economical and proper use or operation of the railroad so to be constructed and acquired.

If a line of railroad now in existence shall form any part of the main line so to be acquired and operated by the United States, it shall be acquired before any other part of the line is either located or constructed; and if it is not so acquired, the location and construction shall begin at the harbor aforesaid and be carried forward toward the interior so that the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line from the ocean terminus.

In addition to the main line hereinbefore authorized the President of the United States is further authorized to locate, construct, and equip, if, in his judgment, it is necessary to provide an adequate supply of coal for the Army, Navy, and other Government services, another line of railroad to a point not more than 30 miles distant from a safe harbor upon the south shore of Alaska, with its necessary equipment, sidings, switches, spurs, and terminal facilities, and to operate the same until otherwise provided by Congress: Provided, however, That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the proceeds of the issue of bonds hereinafter authorized.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is due to the committee that I shall immediately say that it has adopted, in the amendments which were presented yesterday and to-day to section 1, all or the substance of all that the amendment I now propose presents, save one thing, namely, that the bill as it is now be-Senate not only authorizes, but commands, the President of the United States to locate and construct at least two main lines of railroad from tidewater to the interior of Alaska. The amendment which I have just offered by way of a substitute directs the President of the United States to acquire by construction, purchase, or condemnation—and in that respect it is just the same as the bill now stands before us—one line of railroad from the ocean to the interior, to be located by the President. It further provides for an additional line of not more than 30 miles in length. The significance of that provision lies in this, that if the President should select the route from Resurrection Bay north, the Bering coal fields could not be reached by a branch line. Therefore, in that contingency, he is authorized to locate and construct a line of road from the sea to the Bering coal fields; so that, in any event, the Government will be in touch with the fields of the Matanuska and also the Bering coal fields.

It seems to me, radical as I am-and there is no Senator who is more earnest in his desire that the Government shall build a railroad into Alaska, and there is no Senator who feels less reluctant about entering upon this new enterprise than do I; I think it is eminently fit, and I believe it will be eminently successful; I believe it will result in the welfare of all the people, and therefore I am heartily for it—that when we propose to take a step of this kind-it is the first of its character that we have taken as an independent governmental enterprise-we ought to do it with reasonable safety; we ought to confine ourselves within reasonable limits; we ought not to extend the authority that we are now conferring upon the President beyond the necessities of the situation. If our experience under the construction and operation provided for in my substitute is a happy one and is found to work well for the people of the country, then we can give further authority. Let me now recall to Senators, and especially to the committee, just what is proposed. The commissioners appointed by President Taft went to Alaska. It is plainly evident that they believed that we ought to build two connections—one extending the Copper River and the Northwestern and the other extending the Alaska Northern. The whole distance is computed. and the $35,611,000 originally named in this bill is just the sum which the commission reported these extensions would cost. I have no doubt that the bill grew out of these recommendations. Secretary Fisher was not in favor of these isolated stretches of railroad to be built in the interior of Alaska, as I gather from what he has said and what he has written; but, notwithstanding that, the general idea was that the interior stretches could be connected with the railroads already built. There is nothing morally wrong about that; but it seems to me to be utterly impracticable and unwise for the Government to own these

The Senate will observe that it has amended, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the bill as originally reported so that now we are to have two lines of road from the sea to the interior. They will cost the full $40,000,000 and more, in my opinion; but if we limit the construction to a single road into the interior until we can secure more experience, then we will be able to reduce the amount of the bonds authorized in the bill to $20,000,000 or, at the most, to $25,000,000.

It is 463 miles, as I remember, from Seward to Fairbanks: it is pretty nearly the same distance from Cordova to Fairbanks; and those two lines of road, whether purchased or condemned and extended by construction, will cost all the money that we have here authorized. We ought not to do that just now; we ought to be content with a single line; and I think the cause of Alaska and the ownership and operation of railroads there by the Government will all be furthered if we take this step with reasonable conservatism. There is a widespread dis-inclination to enter upon the enterprise, anyhow, and when we have overcome that obstacle we ought not to part with congressional authority to the extent of saying to the President, "You must build two lines," If there is any doubt about that construction of the bill before us, I should be glad to hear from those who are responsible for its language. The words are—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be located such main lines for railroads from points on tidewater to the interior.

He can not fulfill the command of this statute without locating and constructing or purchasing at least two railroads from the Gulf of Alaska to the interior of the Territory. Why should we command the President to build two lines? We are giving him vast discretion, and we ought, at least, to give him the option to content himself at the present time with the location and construction of one line; preferably we ought to limit him to the location and construction of one line. I therefore very earnestly hope that the friends of this measure, the people who are really interested in it and who believe, as I believe, that it is a wise exercise of governmental authority, will look with favor upon the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator think that, under the language of the bill as now amended, it would not be complied with if the President built one line through the central part, for in-

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. JONES. A line from tidewater to the Bering fields would be a line to the interior, would it not?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. JONES. I think it would be.

Mr. CUMMINS. The interior of Alaska, as spoken of here and as generally understood, is not that little coast that lies between the ocean and the first range of mountains,

Mr. JONES. That is not all of it, of course, but that is a part of the interior of Alaska. I believe that that is the idea which the committee had, but we used that general language that the President would be permitted to build to the Bering coal fields and then to the Tanana and the Yukon or the Kuskokwim, which we specifically name.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course I accept what the Senator says as true, that the committee did not so intend; but there can not be any possible room for difference of opinion about the meaning of the words "interior of Alaska." Every attending circumstance shows what is meant. You are appropriating $40,000,000, and, in my opinion, you can not spend $40,000,000 without building two lines to the interior. If what the Senator has stated is the view of the committee, I hope it will be made much clearer than it is now. I think many Senators, anyhow, expect that the President will build two lines of road into the interior, and I certainly believe that this bill requires him to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the objection offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], first in order, is really only a criticism of the language of the bill. He contends that under the language of the bill the President is compelled to construct more than one line. I do not think the bill, as its language is now, is open to any such construction. The language, "main lines," of course, would embrace one line; but it is obviously desirable to remove even any uncertainty in the language. All that the Senator desires to accomplish in that regard could be arrived at by simply inserting the words "line or," so that the bill will read "such main line or lines."

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, that would give the President discretion either to build one or more lines.

Mr. WALSH. In order to remove any just ground for criticism as to the language of the bill, I shall, when I get through with my remarks, ask that it be amended as indicated, so as to be definite in that respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. Of course the Senator understands that I think the President ought not to have the authority to build more than one line.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. President, touching the matter of substance to which the Senator from Iowa addressed himself, his amendment clearly contemplates the obligation to construct a main line of railroad with its terminus at Resurrection Bay and another line from Controller Bay to the Bering River coal fields. The Senator by his amendment clearly indicates that he desires the first main line to be constructed as the principal main line of railroad, and antagonizes the construction of a main line with its terminus at Cordova, proceeding up the Copper River into the interior, and reaching the inland waterways by that route. In other words, he desires to take away from the President the discretion vested in him by this bill to select the route recommended by the commission which was charged with the inquiry into this very subject, and to substitute another route which the Senator believes from the evidence is prefer-

Mr. President, I have arrived at the same conclusion to which the Senator from Iowa has come, that the more desirable main line is that which has its terminus at Seward, on Resurrection Bay; and if I were required to exercise my judgment with reference to this matter and to make a selection now, I should undoubtedly conform to the view evidently entertained by the Senator from Iowa. I have given this matter some considerable attention; but let me remark, sir, that there has been no inquiry made by any committee of this body, nor has any evidence ever been taken on which we can proceed to a correct judgment as to which of these is the more desirable route to pursue. The committee felt that the scope of its inquiry, under the provisions of this bill, did not require them, indeed did not permit them, to go into an investigation as to which of the two routes was the more desirable. Accordingly, sir, you are asked to determine that important question in this body with-out any evidence at all that ought to guide you in the concluout any evidence at an that ought to guide you in the contri-sion at which you are to arrive, except such as was introduced incidentally to the main question as to whether or not this work should be undertaken at all. Bear in mind that the judgment of the commission is that the Copper River route is the more desirable route by which to reach the interior of Alaska.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WALSH. I yield for a question, of course, but not for discussion, because my time is limited.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only desire to correct a misapprehension. The Senator is quite right with regard to my opinion as to the location of the railroad into the interior, but he is wrong, I think, with regard to the effect of the bill. I think it does give the President the discretion to locate, if he pleases, the line upon the Copper River. All that he will have to do will be to build a branch from the Copper River & Northwestern Road extending over to the Matanuska coal fields, and that branch is shown upon one of the maps reported by the commission to which the Senator refers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is no doubt in the world that under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa the President could choose the Copper River route; but, if he did so, he could build no other line except a line from Controller Bay to the Bering coal fields. He could do nothing to open up the great region of the Susitna Valley, the Kenai Peninsula, or the Kuskokwim Valley.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the Senator said that it would preclude the building of a branch line to the Matanuska coal fields.

Mr. WALSH. It would. Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator is in error there, because there could be a branch line built from the Copper River & Northwestern Road to the Matanuska coal fields just as easily, except that it is a longer line, as from the Alaska & Northern to the Matanuska coal fields.

Mr. WALSH. Of course if you run a line up the Copper River, as a physical possibility you can extend a line anywhere from it in the Territory, but no engineer has ever suggested the idea of reaching the Matanuska coal fields from a main line that runs up the Copper River, nor has anybody contended that it would be possible to develop the Susitna Valley, economically speaking, by means of any such line as that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The latter, of course, is obviously true, but with respect to the former I am sure the Senator is mistaken, because I have a map before me which shows the proposed line.

Mr. WALSH. However that may be, Mr. President, nobody contemplates the development of the Susitna Valley or the Matanuska coal fields through a main line that is run up the Copper River; neither is such a thing at all feasible, so far as my information goes, as a commercial or economical propo-

Let me suggest to you that one of the principal considerations that ought to have weight in the matter of selecting the terminus is military in character. The matter of military defense is exceedingly important in the selection of the terminus. The commission advanced certain reasons why they preferred the Copper River route to the other. They do not convince me, from the evidence that is before me; but let me advert to what they are.

The report tells us that Resurrection Bay, at Seward, is not at all desirable as a terminus for a route into the interior-a subject that has not had the consideration of this body at all. Concerning Resurrection Bay, they say, at page 103, as follows:

Shores and islands are high and steep, affording protection from gales from all directions, except southeast winds, and seas from this direction are broken by the islands at the entrance. These southeast winds and land winds from the north give trouble to shipping at times.

And they continue, speaking of Resurrection Bay:

The mean range of tide is about 8½ feet. The bay is always free of ice. The principal objection to the bay as a harbor results from the excessive depths of water—from 100 to 200 fathoms. The only really satisfactory anchorage is at Sunny Cove, a small bay in Renard Island, about 14 miles from the town of Seward, and only just inside the entrance to the bay. This cove furnishes an anchorage area of about a half square mile.

Then, in their conclusions, they say:

The commission is of opinion that the routes based on Skagway, Haines, Iliamna Bay, and Valdez are eliminated for the lack of high-grade coal, and those based on Katalla and Controller Bay by the present unsuitable harbor facilities, which would be remedied only by difficult and costly construction.

So it is not at all certain that you could construct proper harbor facilities at Controller Bay to make the Bering River coal available.

With these conditions confronting us, it seems to me it would be the height of folly for this body to undertake to give its adherence to one of these routes. I have invited your attention to what was said in criticism of the anchorage facilities at Res-I have invited your attention urrection Bay. No effort was made to controvert that by any testimony presented to the committee; not because it could not be controverted, for I have been informed that the conditions are no different from those at Seattle, for instance, or Tacoma; that the water is no deeper in Resurrection Bay than it is in those harbors; but we did not go into an inquiry on that subject. There is no evidence at all in the record which will in any way controvert the idea here advanced by the commission that Resurrection Bay is not desirable as a point to which this road should run, by reason of the deficiencies as a harbor.

Therefore, although I am disposed personally to believe that the western route is the more desirable, I feel that, while I have given the matter careful study, I am not possessed now of such information as would enable me to exercise a just judgment with reference to the matter.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Iowa whether he believes that he is in the possession of sufficient information, considering the military necessities and the character of the harbors themselves, to decide now that one is to be preferred rather than the other?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume the Senator is asking me that question for an answer? Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I very frankly say that I am not. I have an impression; the testimony I have read gives me an impression, but I would not act upon it; and this bill confides to the President the discretion that has been desired all the while. I do not at all agree with the Senator from Montana that it takes away from him the discretion to choose between these two routes, but he can not choose both.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have been deprived of the privilege of listening to the discussion of this bill for the last two or three days, but I have some impressions with reference to it which I desire to mention briefly.

It has occurred to me that it is generally conceded that this is an experiment. We are first trying to decide whether it is a good thing for the Government to build and operate a railroad. We are going to decide that by this experiment. We are also going to allow the President of the United States the discretion of locating whatever lines we propose to build. It seems to me we have already, by the action of Congress, precluded the possibility of the development of Alaska through any other source than the construction of roads by the Government. Therefore, in this emergency, I am compelled to vote somewhat in the dark; but it occurs to me, in view of the amount of expense to which the Government is to be put, that we ought to go rather slowly.

While I am going to vote for this bill, I should prefer to vote for a bill to give the President permission to build one line. If this is a good thing—and those who advocate it must believe it is a good thing-they would be taking no chances by doing that, because if it develops that it is a good thing it will then be an easy matter to appropriate money for constructing other roads as they are needed. If it is not a good thing, twenty or twenty-five million dollars is about all we ought to put into such an experiment.

I hope some arrangement can be made so that the President can be authorized to construct one road. If he is authorized to construct haif a dozen roads, he probably will build only one at once, and he will not build it before the next year. There will be plenty of time to appropriate money for more road building in Alaska after we have started upon this enterprise.

I am not going to offer any amendment, because I have none prepared. I am just discussing the matter from the broad viewpoint of the way a business man would discuss such a proposition.

If we propose to make this a business enterprise on the part of the Government, we ought to proceed in a businesslike way. Therefore, I hope we may consider it wise to vote to authorize the construction of but one line, knowing, I say, what evidently we all do know, that if it proves good it is a very easy matter to get the rest of the road.

With the program that has been laid out by the Congress, it is worth while for the Senate to stop and consider what it is going to be called upon to appropriate money for. This is not the only thing for which we are going to appropriate millions. If it has come to be an easy thing to vote $40,000,000 on a sort of a shotgun enterprise-maybe it will win, and maybe it will not-without regarding all the other things that we are going to be called upon to meet, then, it seems to me, we have passed beyond the line of good business.

Therefore, I express my own view upon this matter, namely, that I am going to vote for a railroad in Alaska because I believe through our policies we have practically foreclosed the opportunity of developing Alaska through any other means; and I should like to vote in an intelligent way to begin the matter as moderately as the necessities of the case require.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHII/TON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did upon the former vote, as to my pair and its transfer, I will vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. CLapp's name was called).

The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLapp] is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Sherman], and withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when the name of Mr. Smith of South Carolina was called). I again announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Repeating my announcement respecting the disposition of my pair, I will wote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER !.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. Burleigh] and will vote. I vote

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Thomas] is necessarily absent from the Senate to-day. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is detained from the Senate on business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the Senate of my colleague [Mr. Page], and to say that he is paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr.

Swanson]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. BURTON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas], and in his absence withhold my vote.

If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt], but my pair does not extend to amendments to the bill, and I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce a pair between my colleague [Mr. Hughes] and the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. Shively]. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff].

The result was announced-yeas 24, nays 35, as follows:

I offer an amendment intended to cover the very matter we have had under consideration?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a committee amendment. Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment: After the word "main," in line 5, page 8, insert the words "line or"; and after the word "from," on line 6, insert the words "a point or."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 5, after the word "main" and before the word "lines," it is proposed to insert the words "line or"; and on line 6, after the word "from," it is proposed to insert the words "a point or"; so that it will read, if amended:

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 9, and to read as follows:

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 9, and to read as follows:

The President is further empowered, authorized, and directed to cause to be reserved from private appropriation or lease in such tracts and locations as he shall determine one-half of the coal lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, including at least, as near as can be estimated, one-half of the high-grade coal (and no coal lands or coal deposits whatsoever in Alaska shall hereafter be disposed of except by lease, as hereinafter provided, and in any public lands hereafter alienated by the United States in Alaska there shall be reserved to the United States title to all coal deposits therein); and he is further authorized, empowered, and directed to cause coal mines to be opened and equipped on the public lands in Alaska so reserved, and to provide for the transportation, distribution, and sale of the products of the same to the Government railroad or railroads, to the United States Army and Navy, and other Government services, and to consumers of coal in Alaska or in the Pacific Coats States.

Any coal lands not reserved as herein provided may be leased by the President to private parties for coal-mining purposes, all leases being subject to the following conditions which shall also apply to the Government mining service, and any lease being revocable upon breach of any such condition.

The minimum wage paid any class of labor employed in mining operations on lands so leased shall be not less than the average wage paid for that class of labor by other employers under equivalent conditions to be determined by the President; the hours of labor of all persons employed shall not exceed 48 per week, save in emergencies wherein life or property is in imminent danger; no person under the ago of 16 years shall be employed; the President; the hours of labor of all persons employed shall not exceed 48 per week, save in emergencies wherein life or property is in imminent dang any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of or in any way effect an combination or are in an wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the Territory of Alaska, the lease thereof shall be canceled, and said individual, partnership, association, or corporation shall forfeit the right thereafter of obtaining lands under lease under the provisions of this act.

The term "lessee" as used in this act shall refer to any person, firm, or corporation representing a single, independent interest, to whom coal land is leased under the provisions of this act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident, I think, that the enterprise provided for in this bill will soon have to be undertaken by the President; that this bill, in a very short time, will become a law; and that the President, and the agents he may select, will have the responsibility of carrying out an enterprise second only in its magnitude to the Panama Canal.

The first problem with which the administration will be confronted in the execution of this great enterprise will be the transportation to Alaska of vast quantities of material, supmachinery, and employees; so that the first need the administration will have in the execution of the bill about to become a law will be a ship service from some port in the United States, or a number of ports in the United States, to the scene of the construction of this railroad. That matter, however, has been already voted upon by the Senate, and it is unnecessary and useless to discuss it or to submit it further.

Mr. President, it seems to me, looking at this matter from a practical and business standpoint, that the next great need which the Government will have in executing this enterprise will be a supply of fuel, an adequate supply of coal of good quality for the operation of its engines, the running of its steam shovels, and for the operation of its ships if it should, as I believe it will, although it is not incorporated in this bill, establish a line of ships for the operation of its trade. On the very scene of the work there is an ample supply of this coal. A great deal of controversy has occupied the attention of Congress as to its quality. Suffice it to say here that the Geological Survey has reported the quality of the coal to be superior to that of Pocahontas, and that it averages in fixed carbon 78 per cent on 36 analyses of the semibituminous coal of the Bering River field, and that there is an unlimited supply of it.

In order to execute the power conferred by this bill it is perfectly evident that the administration ought to have the authority which will enable it to plan its execution with a view of doing it economically, and in order to enable it to do that there should be passed as a part of the bill itself the clauses which I have submitted here by way of amendment, or other clauses which would give the administration the discretion, at least, of opening these coal mines and using this coal, not only for the execution of its work but for the use of the Navy and the Army of the United States on the Pacific coast, thus enabling the Government to save $500,000 every year now expended out of the Treasury of the United States for coal which is brought from the Atlantic coast or from Australia. But further and more important than that is this great need that has been discussed at so much length, called the "opening" of Alaska, which should be provided for, not at some time hereafter but as a part of the Government's activities in Alaska under this bill.

Something was said here yesterday of a comparison of the proposed work of the Government in Alaska, and the proposed expenditure of public money under this bill with moneys which have been expended in the control of the floods—the protection of lands from destruction by the Mississippi River. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] undertook to draw a distinc-The Senator tion between the expenditure of money for the Mississippi River and the expenditure of money as proposed under this bill. The inquiry would be still more pertinent should the bill be extended to include the opening of coal mines, as, in my judgment, The Senator from Mississippi said that money was expended upon the Mississippi River under the authority of the Government to control a navigable stream. That is true, but it is known to every one that the millions which have been spent upon the levees of the Mississippi, while spent under that jurisdiction, under that authority, for the controlling of a navigable stream, was not spent for the purpose of improving navigation in the Mississippi River. Money has been spent at the mouth of the Mississippi River in the construction of jetties for the improvement of navigation, but there is plenty of water at all times in the lower Mississippi for navigation, and particularly is there plenty of water there when the Mississippi is in flood—for the control and protection from which these millions have been expended. That money was expended because it concerned the protection of a great area of the country, including several States, from the destruction of its land and farming equipment by the flood waters of a navigable stream.

It is not the property of the United States in the greater part, as I hear the Senator from Mississippi say. is subject to the control of the United States, but the property which this money was spent to protect was private property.

There is no question about the authority of the Government to open coal mines upon the Government lands in Alaska.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will yield to me for just one second, since he has referred to me, I will state that the Mississippi River is the property of the United States. Neither a State nor a county nor a town can enter upon it in the slightest degree without a license from the United States Government. The question there is whether the property of the United States shall be permitted to destroy my property or whether the United States Government shall prevent it from depredating dpon my property.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is spent, Mr. President, for the purpose of protecting private property. Control of a public navigable stream is the power, as I said before, under which the Government acts. But the Senator from Mississippi can not escape from the proposition that these millions have been spent for the protection of private property. Everything that is proposed in this bill or in the amendment that I have offered is far more in the interest of the general public and far more of national concern than anything which is accomplished by the levee system on the Mississippi River, great as that is, though I am in favor of a continuation of that work, as we all are.

In the limited time which I have, Mr. President, I wish to add only a few words. I want to say that the assumption which seems to be general that there must needs be spent $40,000,000 under this bill is an unwarranted assumption. So far as the coal question in Alaska is concerned and so far as transportation is concerned, as it affects the coal question, it can be disposed of under the authority contained in the bill and the amendment which I have just offered for a comparatively small sum of money—I think some $5,000,000—for the construction of a railroad into the Bering River coal field, with such terminal facilities as may be required for it, and the taking out coal in suffi-cient quantities to supply the naval needs, at least, in the Pacific Ocean. I believe that a general system of transportation which would connect the great navigable Yukon, with its 2,000 miles of navigable water, with the south coast of Alaska can be completed for less than $20,000,000, one-half of what is authorized by this bill.

I wish to add, Mr. President, that the purposes of the bill are not financial returns for the Government, and that they far transcend in importance to the people any financial losses which the Government might suffer, should it suffer any, through the enterprises proposed by the bill. The opening of the coal mines of that country—not Government monopoly, but Government competition, as a regulator to prevent private monopoly—is a necessary part of the plan to "open up" Alaska in such a way that the entire people and not a single syndicate will get the fruits of opening it up.

The ultimate purpose of this bill, and its greatest purpose, is to free Alaska. It is to make it free. If Alaska should be left to private enterprise, either as to its coal or as to its transportation, it would be developed, but it would not be a free country. It would be as completely tributary to the barons, as they are called, of transportation and of private coal monopoly as any mediæval tenant was ever subject to the rule of his overlord. Industrial and commercial monopoly produces as abject servitude as any military power ever has or ever possibly could produce.

I have seen, under the conditions which have heretofore prevalled in Alaska—and which this bill and this amendment in another aspect of the case are intended to remedy—the functions of Government used to fasten upon the people, not only that sort of industrial and commercial subjection to which I have referred, but political degradation as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, there may be great merit in the amendment which has just been offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], but if it is adopted I shall have to vote against the bill. We have discussed several amendments which, I think, if adopted would compel me to vote against the bill, and I intend to vote for it if it is not loaded When this gun goes off, I want the charge to go out of the muzzle; I do not want it to blow up. There are dangers connected with such incidents.

Mr. President, I had no intention to discuss this measure, but while I am on my feet I will add that, as a member of the committee, I voted in favor of this proposition. I am not particularly infatuated with it, neither am I very much afraid of it.

It appeared to me very early in the hearings, and they continued for some time, that we must do something. We have here a Territory as large as England, Germany, France, and Spain combined, very rich in minerals. In climate and in agri-cultural conditions it is not unlike a full third of Russia and all of Norway and Sweden, and with the coal that is there and an electro-hydraulic power that is possibly unsurpassed in any nation or any country, it seemed to me that in the course of time, in 25 years, perhaps 50 years, Alaska might be as good a spot to live on as almost any other.

We paid $7.200,000 for Alaska. We would not sell it for a thousand times that sum. We could sell it under the hammer for billions of dollars. But it is ours; it must remain ours. We have locked it up; there is no question about that; and we must unlock it sooner or later; it seems to me the sooner the better to the credit of all concerned. This is the only way that we can unlock it that I have heard of, and I have given the matter some attention.

When this road is built, some intelligent scheme for the development of Alaska must result, as it seems to me, and this is the only possible way. If I understand the temper of the people of this country, they will never consent to the purchase and exploitation of Alaska by a few citizens at their own price.

There have been criticisms suggested which certainly have weight. It is paternalism. There is no difference in principle between the Government ownership of a railroad in Alaska and the Government ownership of a post office in New York. But it is not the difference in principle, it is the difference in results; and that is all the difference in the world. Paternalism is the father of economic liberty, and the creator can destroy the creature at any time he wishes. We can use the Government much as we use water. We can use it to sustain life and produce strength or we can drown ourselves in it. When the majority of the people of this country lose their reason and are intent upon suicide, paternalism will be as handy and effective an instrument as can be used under the circumstances.

But I do not feel like taking counsel of my fears in a matter of this kind. It is an experiment. We have precedents for it; many of them, I think. If Uncle Sam burns his finger, the experiment will not be altogether unprofitable. If it is a success, then all is well that ends well.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] did urge one objection, to the effect that we are giving the President too much discretion. He did not consider it to be an Executive function.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that Congress can not be in worse business than laying out and building railroads. seems to me to be purely an Executive function, and I have no doubt the present Executive will enjoy the digression. Of course, he must depend upon the geologist and the engineer.

I would not consent that the bill should be reported out of the committee until there was a limitation put upon the mileage and upon the expenditures, but within those limits it seemed to me much wiser to give to the Executive all the discretion that was necessary to choose the best. He will be governed by no other motive; there is no question about that; and his advantage will be much better than any Congress could have under the circumstances, as it seems to me.

So I have considered the matter conscientiously. As I said, I have some misgiving with regard to it, and yet it seems to me that I can not vote to continue the dog-in-the-manger states-manship that has been applied to Alaska. I do not believe it is

I have no sort of fear that the investment will result in money loss to the United States. We own the whole country. It is worth billions of dollars. This is a mere loan, and it appears to me that it is not very courageous to hesitate now to put into that country the only wedge which will ever open it up. We have delayed it altogether too long, and, Mr. President, I fear I am talking too long, but I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will not be adopted, nor any other of these extreme measures. There may be great merit in it, and I do not say that, as an inde-pendent measure, I might not consider it favorably; but it contains too much. Certainly a measure of that importance ought to be printed, and the Senate ought to have an opportunity to examine and consider it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to say that the amendment has been printed for a long time, both in the Congressional Record and as an amendment, and has been distributed among Senators, not separately, as stated here, but as part of the substitute which I offered.

my attention called to the amendment; but I wish to say with regard to a matter so inclusive, so very important as this, and also the proposed addition of the navigation lines, that it is unwise to press them at the present time. Let us build this railroad; and when that is built, let us hope that we can then intelligently do the rest of the work. I do not believe that we can do so until we have had that experience.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, somehow I can not find it in my mind to justify myself in burning my fingers solely to acquire knowledge of how it feels to burn the fingers. It seems to me that, when I see a fire and know it is a fire I have learned enough already not to put my fingers into it. There is no use doing it. It seems to me when the world has acquired the amount of knowledge that it has acquired about State socialism there is no use burning your fingers with State socialism any more. It is not any new thing; it is quite old. About the first experiment upon the American Continent was down about Jamestown, or "Jeemstown," as they used to call it in those days. It was something of that sort.

I rise now for the purpose of saying that I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I am in favor of it because it is the only thing we have seen here that opens up any part of Alaska. It does open up half of it anyhow. The Senator says that one-half of it shall be opened up, although he seems to be awfully afraid of private enterprise, as if it were some chimera, a dire, dark, and destructive agency of hades fire. I am not at all afraid of it. I have seen Great Britain, Canada, Australia, the United States, Cape Colony, and all the balance of the English-speaking world prosper by private enterprise. We have arrived at a state of affairs in the United States when, either under Republican administration or Democratic administration, we have a comparatively highly civilized, well-informed, well-educated, and prosperous people.

The Senator says that if we open up Alaska to private enterprise it will all be monopolized, and all that. The United States has opened up to private enterprise, and it has not yet been monopolized; Canada has opened up to private enterprise, and it has not yet been monopolized; Cape Colony, with the exception of the diamond fields, perhaps, has not yet been monopolized. The most democratic part of the world is New Zealand, and it has not yet been monopolized. Private enter-prise has done tolerably well. Under the guidance of God, whose main instrumentality for the improvement of the world is the common conscience and the common sense of the common man, it is getting along tolerably well.

But notwithstanding the Senator's political theories, of which I do not approve, I am in favor of his amendment, because his amendment does open up one-half of Alaska at any rate, Moreover, it limits the amount to 2,568 acres, which any coalmining corporation, a person natural or artificial, may acquire. It moreover provides that they shall be worked upon leasings and not in fee simple, and that any reselling of it shall operate as a forfeiture of the grant. It prevents monopolization and at the same time, as I have said, it opens up a fraction of Alaska. It amuses a man now and then to see the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Idaho, and the Senator from Mississippi being scared to death about private enterprise, when we not only sold to individuals out there but gave them a certain amount of land and other things, so that they could go along and build up their fortunes as best they might.

That is not all. I notice that the Senator's amendment, in its present shape, leaves out steamships as a part of the things to be built and operated by the United States Government, though in its original form it included those. Thank God for that much relief from State socialism. I think it may be that we can welcome the amendment on account of its self-modification, you might say, or welcome the Senator because of his selfimprovement, from the day he introduced the amendment down to now; but I really think the amendment is an improvement There is a part of the amendment that goes pretty far. I have not the amendment before me, but as I recall it states that you are to fix the minimum of wages and that you are to fix the number of hours of labor, and all that. If you are going into this sort of thing at all, I say fix the minimum of wages and fix the number of hours of labor and let us be consistent. I think the Senator from Washington, while he was about it, was very wise when he undertook to go "plumb to the limit," as the darkies say in Mississippi. Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi a which I offered.

Mr. McLEAN. I absolve the Senator from Washington, of course, from any laches on that score. I had not, however, had amendment "opens up half of Alaska." I am asking really for information, because I do not understand what the Senator has reference to in his expression "opens up half of Alaska."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment says that one-half shall be reserved, and it is all reserved now; so that opens up the other half. [Laughter.] The amendment reads:

The President is further empowered, authorized, and directed to cause to be reserved from private appropriation or lease, in such tracts and locations as he shall determine, one-half of the coal lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, including at least, as near as can be estimated, one-half of the high-grade coal.

At present it is all reserved; so that opens up one-half, any-We have got something, then, for which we can be thankful-that is, we people who believe somewhat in private enter-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Washington a question before the vote is taken. I do not yet understand what the effect of this statement is, that it opens up one-half of the District of Alaska.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As a matter of fact, it will have the effect of making the entire coal area of Alaska available for development. There is a reservation of one-half the coal land provided for in the amendment, upon which one-half the Government shall open the coal mines. It reserves one-half.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other half of it is open to allotment to the extent of 2,568 acres.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The other half may be acquired under terms, which I consider favorable terms, by private individuals, it being contemplated that private individuals can compete with the Government mines, as I believe they can compete, and as they are competing and have been competing for a number of years in New Zealand. The Government railroad will give the same service to the private operators that it gives to itself. In that respect it will be different from the privately owned railroads in the coal fields of the Atlantic coast, which discriminate between operators and favor their own mines over others.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one more word, if the Senator will pardon me. The amendment provides against monopoly by a Government mine as a competitor, which will be far superior to any prohibition of monopoly which can be framed into lan-The law at present prohibits in the plainest terms a railroad in this country from owning a coal mine, but the coal-carrying railroads do own coal mines and operate them and are yet within the law, so we have the paradoxical situation of the railroads violating the law and yet being within it.

Mr. BORAH. One further question, Mr. President. Does the amendment of the Senator make any provision in regard to leasing the proposed railroad?

POINDEXTER. It does not. There is no reference to the railroad in the amendment which I have offered. It simply deals with the question of coal lands and Government coal

Mr. BORAH. Then it is not the original amendment which the Senator offered?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is only a portion of the original amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I was quite in favor of the original amendment until I heard the argument of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], when I became a little uneasy, knowing how he feels toward this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

VICE PRESIDENT. The "noes" have it; and the amendment to the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is one remaining amendment which I thought I had offered. I now desire to offer it for the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 16, after the word "railroads," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting "not exceeding in the aggregate one thousand miles."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment to follow the amendment offered by the committee this morning, on line 5, page 9, of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 9, line 5, following the amendment agreed to, after the word "work," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That any engineer, other than engineers of the United States Army, employed by authority hereby given, and whose salary shall exceed the sum of $3,000 per annum, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment, I wish to say that the provisions of the bill as they now stand authorize the President to employ any number of engineers in civil life. There is no restriction as to salary and no restriction as to their number. The amendment I offer simply provides that any engineer, other than the engineers of the United States Army, employed under the authority granted by this bill, and whose salary shall exceed the sum of $3,000 per annum, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I believe that the Senator having the bill in charge ought to accept that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not hear the amendment, if the Senator please, my attention being diverted at the time.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment reads:

That any engineer, other than engineers of the United States Army, employed by authority hereby given, and whose salary shall exceed the sum of $3.000 per annum, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think it is well to insert that in the bill. I do not see why we should make a distinction as to one class of engineers to be appointed which does not apply to the others.

Mr. SMOOT. The other class of engineers are engineers of the United States Army. The amendment only applies to engineers in civil life. The bill places no limit whatever upon the power of the President to employ any number; and it does seem to me that, as the bill authorizes the President to employ any number, the least we can do is to provide that the appointments shall be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. President, I am very anxious to get this bill disposed of, and, if it will hasten action upon the bill, I am willing to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I call up the amendment of which I gave notice some days ago, and which has been lying on the table since. The amendment has been printed. I now offer it and ask that it be submitted to the Senate. I shall not speak on it, but I should like to have it put to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment to the committee amendment read?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD; I will not ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment to the committee substitute offered by Mr. POINDEXTER is as follows:

Poindexter is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the President of the United States is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to construct, acquire, establish, and equip such system of transportation in the Territory of Alaska, including rall and water transportation, on such routes and between such points as in his judgment shall best tend to meet the transportation needs of that Territory and to develop its resources; such system of transportation, however, shall include a well-constructed and thoroughly equipped railroad from some available harbor on the south coast of Alaska to some point on the Yukon or Tanana Rivers from which continuous navigation may be had to the month of the same; and he is further empowered, authorized, and directed to establish such lines of freight and passenger boats as he may determine connecting the ocean terminus of said Alaska transportation system and such other Alaska points as may be available, in his discretion, with the city of Seattle and such other Pacific coast ports as he may determine.

"Sec. 2. That the President is further authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be opened and equipped on the public lands in Alaska reserved as hereinafter provided such coal mines as may be necessary to comply with the terms of this act, and to provide for the transportation, distribution, and sale of the proceeds of same as provided in this act.

"Sec. 3. That the President is further empowered, authorized, and dition, distribution, and sale of the proceeds of same as provided in this act.

"Sec. 3. That the President is further empowered, authorized, and directed to operate said transportation system, including railroads and boat lines, and all the accessories thereof, and to operate said coal mines and dispose of the product thereof by means of the agencies of the transportation and mining services herein provided.

"Sec. 4. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint and to remove the same at will such agent or agents as in his discretion may be required in the execution of the powers and duties conferred upon him by this act, to fix their compensation, and to confer on them any powers necessary for execution of his duties as herein provided. In all causes of action or special proceedings in law or equity arising from the work, authority, or enterprises herein provided the President may sue or be sued in the name of the Alaska National Utilities, and service therein may be had on any agent of the President engaged therein.

"Sec. 5. That the President shall cause to be reserved from private appropriation or lease in such tracts and locations as he shall determine one-half of the coal lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, including at least, as near as can be estimated, one-half of the high-grade coal. No coal lands or coal deposits whatsoever in Alaska shall hereafter be disposed of except by lease, as hereinafter provided; and in any public lands hereafter alienated by the United States in Alaska there shall be reserved to the United States title to all coal deposits therein.

"The President is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to reserve from the public domain in Alaska any lands, easements, rights of way, or other property necessary for the purposes of this act, including any water terminals and any waters for navigation, power, or other uses, together with the lands necessary for utilization thereof; to purchase, construct, or acquire such transportation facilities in Alaska, and to establish such coal-distributing stations there, or in the Pacific ports of the United States, and to acquire property, real or personal, as may be necessary for the purposes of this act; to exercise the power of eminent domain in acquiring property for such use, which use is hereby declared to be a public use, by condemnation in the courts of competent jurisdiction (but any property so obtained by purchase or condemnation shall be paid for on the basis of the actual physical value thereof); and to exercise all the powers granted to railroad companies under and by virtue of the act of Congress entitled 'An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved May 14, 1898.

"The term 'transportation facilities' as useed in this act shall include any or all portions of steam or electric railway lines, together with rolling stock and all equipment; telegraph and telephone lines; express service; canals; wharves, docks, bridges, or other terminal facilities; ocean or river vessels suitable for carrying coal or other freight or passengers, and which may be used as colliers or transports in time of war; and all buildings, plant, and equipment necessary for utilizing such facilities.

"The term 'coal-distributing station' as used in this act shall include any bunkers, elevator

"The term 'coal-distributing' station' as used in this act shall include any bunkers, elevators, stores, or other buildings, plant, or equipment eccessary for the storage, sale, or distribution of coal to consumers."

"Any existing railway connecting with any line of railway constructed under this act shall be operated in connection with the new line as a through route, with through fares and rates upon a reasonable apportionment of revenues and expenses, to be determined by the President.

"Sec. 6. That the President or his agents are hereby authorized, for the purposes of this act, to enter into such contracts and to employ such persons as may be necessary, and, consistently with the provisions of sections 10 and 13 of this act, to fix their duties, powers, and compensations: Provided, That the President shall cause to be formulated suitable regulations, consistent with the civil-service law to govern this act, the Geological Survey, or in any other Government department. "Any the Geological Survey, or in any other Government department." "Any the Geological Survey, or in any other Government department. "Any tools, equipment, or other property belonging to the United States used in constructing the Isthmian Canal, or elsewhere, and no longer needed for such purpose, may be transferred to Alaska and used for the purposes of this act.

"The President shall employ a force of inspectors to insure the execution of his orders, rules, and regulations.

"Sec. 7. That the construction of plants, as distinguished from the operation thereof, shall be conducted under the immediate direction of the President or of his agents, and upon the completion of such portions shall be turned over to, and the operation thereof shall thereafter be conducted by, two services to be known, respectively, as the Alaska transportation service and the Alaska mining service; and the term 'services,' to the transportation and mining service; and the form service and the Alaska mining service; and the form service and the Alaska mining servic

"Sec. 10. That the President shall fix, and from time to time readjust, the minimum wages and salaries and the maximum prices to be paid or charged by the services. The minimum hourly wage paid any class of labor shall be not less than the average wage paid that class of labor by other employers under conditions equivalent to those prevailing in the respective services; the maximum price charged for any class of transportation shall be not greater than will pay a reasonable net profit on operation and a reasonable interest on the actual physical valuation of the properties involved, the same to be determined by the President; the maximum price charged for coal shall be not greater than will pay a reasonable profit on operations to be determined by the President, transportation, distribution, and rental value of lands to be included in cost of operation. The President may confer the power of fixing minimum wages and maximum prices upon an agent or agents appointed by him as provided in section 4, but such power shall not be redelegated, and nothing in this act shall be construed as allowing any other person or body to fix said minimum wages or maximum prices.

"If, in either service, in any fiscal year, the total credit account shall exceed the total debit account the difference shall be charged to a dividend fund to be divided between the operatives in and the purchasers of service or products from said service, the share assigned to the operatives to be determined by the President, but not to be less than one-half the dividend fund. The share of the dividend fund assigned to the operatives in any fiscal year shall be distributed among them in such manner that each operative shall receive an amount proportional to the wages or salary previously receivable by him during said year, and the share assigned to the precise of the sums paid by each of them for service or products during said year.

"The operatives in either service for any fiscal year shall comprise all persons who have been employed in said service during any portion of said year, including the chief thereof.

"SEC. 11. That the President may in his discretion require that the mining service shall give preference in the sale of its coal output, so far as practicable, to certain classes of consumers in the following order: First, the transportation service; second, the United States Navy and other Government services; third, schools and other public institutions, including municipalities; fourth, domestic users of coal or ultimate consumers; fifth, bona fide cooperative associations dealing with ultimate consumers; sixth, commercial retailers; seventh, whole-salers; eighth, manufacturers and all other purchasers.

"The term 'cooperative association' as used in this act shall mean any association of ultimate consumers, not organized for commercial pr by the total number of lessees; but this provision shall not be construed to require the abandonment or reduction of any mining operations whatsoever.

"The coal land leased to any one lessee shall constitute a contiguous tract, having an area or coal content estimated to be sufficient to form an efficient working unit, but shall not include more than 2.560 acres; no lease shall run for more than 50 years; no coal land shall be subleased nor in any way whatsoever used for speculative purposes, and if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or corporation shall forfeit the right thereafter of obtaining lands under lease under the provisions of this act.

"The term 'lessee' as used in this act shall refer to any person, firm, or corporation representing a single, independent interest, to whom coal land is leased under the provisions of this act.

"All coal land leased to private parties shall be at such uniform charge per acre per annum as to be sufficient only to render unprofitable the holding of such land without production, said charge to be fixed and from time to time readjusted by the President, and an equivalent charge per acre per annum shall be collected from the mining service, the receipts from all such charges to be paid into the school and road fund of the Territory of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the legislature.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suppose we are nearing the close of the consideration of the bill. Has the committee any further amendments to offer?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the committee has no further amendment, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offered an amendment a few days ago, to which I spoke briefly, with reference to adding to this bill an appropriation for the purpose of completing the reclamation work. Since offering that amendment I have had a number of consultations with the chairman of the committee which has in charge this bill. He and his associates feel very earnestly that if that amendment is put upon the bill it will kill it. In the first place, I do not suppose that the amendment would likely carry with that statement of the chairman before the Senate, and therefore to offer it would be a vain thing.

In the second place, of course I have no desire to destroy the bill. I want, however, in withdrawing the amendment to say that, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, the immediate necessity for this appropriation is quite as great as the necessity for which we are endeavoring to provide in this bill. While I shall not urge the amendment, I want to read a single paragraph from the report of the Secretary of the Interior in order that the committee which has charge of this matter and before which a bill similar in terms to the amendment is pending may understand the great importance of hastening the bill to the Senate floor in order to avoid the necessity of some Senator making a motion to discharge the committee if it does not do so. The Secretary of the Interior, discussing this particular question, says:

this particular question, says:

One reason stands out demanding the promptest possible action in this matter. Reservoir sites are few and becoming fewer each succeeding year. Those that may be had are rising steadily in value. So valuable, indeed, have some sites become since the institution of the Reclamation Service that projected enterprises are not now regarded as feasible, for the dependent lands which it was intended to irrigate can not make a return sufficient to pay the increased cost. And let this not be forgotten, that stored water means more than fields of alfalfa, generous orchards, and the homes of hearty husbandmen; it means power for industries, light and heat for town and farm. These two—irrigation and hydroelectric power—are companions. One does not think of the one without suggesting the other. And the magic worked by each is rivaled by its mate. Electricity is coal and kerosene which need no railroad to transport them. The significance of these irrigation reservoirs from this point of view is but beginning to be appreciated and will grow greater as the country becomes more thickly populated and factories come to supplement the farms.

So, Mr. President, while I shall not embarrass the pending

So, Mr. President, while I shall not embarrass the pending bill, I hope that we may have from the committee a report upon this measure very shortly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 11, line 23, I move to strike out "$40,000,000" and insert "$35,000,000."

I notice that the House bill provides $35,000,000—the amount of my amendment. With one line, 450 miles long, from tide-water to Fairbanks, at $50,000 a mile, which is $6,000 more than the engineers' estimate of the cost of building a mile of road, with equipment, would amount to $22,500,000. Now, grant that a line is built from tidewater to Fairbanks, and then allow 50 per cent more than the amount needed for the line be so built; that would amount to $11,250,000, or a that may total of $33,750,000. Therefore I do not believe it is necessary to provide more than $35,000,000, and I offer that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like very much to see the $40,000,000 stricken out and $25,000,000 put in its place. I think that is ample to build one of these lines.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the most liberal estimate, it would certainly cover one of the lines from tidewater to Fairbanks; and I think it would be a serious mistake for the Government to involve itself in undertaking to build more than one. I think the advocates of the measure make a mistake in asking that more than one be attempted. My own judgment is that we are hardly ready to attempt any of it; but if, as seems probable, we are going to attempt something, we certainly ought to limit it to one and provide funds to build that one.

I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Utah, because I have intended to offer an amendment to strike out the $40,000,000 and reduce it to $25,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator desires to offer his amendment first, I would just as soon withdraw my amendment first, I would just as soon withdraw my amendment first, I would just as soon withdraw my amendment first in the senator desires to offer his amendment first, I would just as soon withdraw my amendment first in the senator for the Senator from ment. Then, if his amendment is carried, all well and good; but if not, I shall offer the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I move to strike out "$40,000,000" and substitute "$25,000,000" on page 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 11, line 23, it is proposed to strike it "$40,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say just one word about this amendment. I wish to appeal to the Senators in charge of the bill to accept the amendment. If we reduce the sum to $25,000,000, we need not make this provision about bonds. I do not like to see the bonds issued. I do not like to add to the bonded indebtedness of the Government for an improvement of this kind. I do not like the provision of a million dollars to print the bonds and to prepare them. I do not think it looks well for the Senate to pass a bill with such a provision.

In view of the speeches that have been made, in view of the discussion which has been presented to the Senate by the advocates of the measure, $25,000,000 is certainly all that they need to build from any point they may select on tidewater to Fairbanks to connect up the coal fields, to connect up the gold mines, to connect up the copper mines, and to connect up the agricultural lands. Let us not turn anybody loose, unrestrained, to experiment without limit in this section, which is still to a considerable extent unknown. Let us try one road and see how it does. Let us work out our experiments on that one. Let us, when we build the second, avoid the errors we make on the first. Let us treat it as business men would treat their own affairs. They certainly would not involve any great company, even with resources of millions of dollars, in the experiment of going almost wildly into unnumbered lines.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator suggests that if we make this amount only $25,000,000 we may be relieved from the necessity of issuing bonds. Do I understand the Senator means that, if this amendment should be agreed to, $25,000,000 should be taken from the current revenues of the Government, as required?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure about that. confident that $15,000,000 could be. That was the first figure I had in mind, and that was embodied in the amendment which I had prepared tentatively and which I did not press because information furnished me by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that $15,000,000 would not build one of the lines. He showed me that I was in error; that the figures I had gathered applied only to a line starting at a point where it was proposed to construct and did not include the unpurchased road below that point to a connection with the bay on the right; so I did not introduce that amendment.

Even if we are obliged to issue bonds for it, I urge that we to stop with one line. Otherwise what may we do? We will build one line, perhaps, for $25,000,000, and we will start one or two more-certainly one more-and we can not build it with the balance of the appropriation; and the problem will be back here in a short time for us to put up $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to build the other line.

We have not perfected our plan of opening these lands. We have not perfected a plan to furnish even one railroad with business to justify its operation. Let us at least go sufficiently slow to stop with one line.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Georgia was here when that matter was fully discussed in the Senate and-the Senate amended the bill so as to leave the matter of line or lines to the President of the United States. The bill has been amended so as to leave it in the discretion of the President to have either one or two lines, as he may see fit, and by quite a large majority the Senate voted down the proposition to have one line.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, is not the maximum still a thousand miles?

still a thousand miles?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That has not been limited.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been limited.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The maximum amount of railroad that could be built under the bill, if it should become a law, would be a thousand miles, would it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And it is figured that it would cost $40,000 a mile. I do not exactly understand how you can applied that the propage and have it very offective. Of course the qualify that language and have it very effective. Of course, the President may not build more than one at a time, but he may complete the whole thousand miles under the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not any idea that the President of the United States will act otherwise than as a prudent, careful business man, a trustee of the $40,000,000 fund for the people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have only a few minutes, and I do not propose

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have not taken much time, and I wanted some information from the Senator. I do not wish to be put in the attitude of doubting either the wisdom or the judgment or the patriotism of the President, but I sometimes question the wisdom of the Senate in lodging such tremendous discretionary power with any single officer of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that I have before me the Panama Canal Act. There never was a measure passed by the Congress of the United States that vested more power in a Government official than that act vested in the President of the United States, and there never has been a suggestion by his bitterest enemies that President Taft at any time did other than his whole duty to the American people. I have the same confidence in the President of the United States now, and I would not be afraid to intrust this task to him with all the powers that are conferred upon him under this bill.

With reference to cutting this appropriation down to $25,000,-000, I say the Senator who suggests that is unfair to the committee that had the bill in charge. I might ask the Senator if he has read all the testimony submitted before the committee? The committee sat from day to day for months at a time and listened to testimony.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator is unjust in suggesting that I am unfair to the committee. I do not see in what way I am unfair. I certainly do not mean to be unfair to the committee. I certainly have no thought of being unfair to Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Possibly the Senator is not unfair to the committee. If he thinks I have done him an injustice, I will withdraw that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am sure I do. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But, Mr. President, I know the Senator from Georgia is not friendly to this bill. He has intimated that more than once in the course of the discussion.

I say the committee had this measure under consideration and listened to witnesses both for and against it, men interested in the development of Alaska and men opposed to the development of Alaska, from the standpoint of the committee. They have considered the testimony from every standpoint and have reported a bill here and have suggested to the Senate that $40,000,000 is the amount that ought to be appropriated.

I say that $40,000,000 is the amount that ought to be appropriated in this bill, and that we ought not to be governed by the amount appropriated by the House. They have appropriated $35,000,000, I understand, and it has been recommended by the Democratic caucus that $35,000,000 be appropriated.

If you want to emasculate this bill, if you want to pass a bill that holds out a hope to those people and yet does not in fact give them the relief they ought to have, and a bill that will not develop Alaska as the people of this country believe it ought to be developed, then, I say, reduce the amount to $25,000,000 or to $15,000,000 or to any other amount to which these gentlemen who are not friendly to the bill want to limit If, on the other hand, you want to do what the bill purports to do-develop Alaska for the benefit of the whole people of this country and the benefit of the people of Alaska as wellthen, I say, the amount that ought to be appropriated is $40,000,000, and I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition to reduce the appropriation.

If the House passes a bill appropriating $25,000,000 and modifies this measure in any particular which restricts or limits the power of the President, it is bound to go into conference, and there the amount can be adjusted by the conferees of the House and the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have refrained from saying one word on this bill, but I wish to say that I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. I think the Record will show that by my vote I am friendly to this particular legislation; but the Senator from Oregon is mistaken when he says it is absolutely necessary to appropriate the full amount of $40,000,000 at one time.

It is not a question whether or not we trust the President. We all have confidence in the President of the United States; but in this bill we direct the President of the United States to issue bonds for the amount of $40,000,000, and as soon as those bonds have been issued there will be an accumulation of interest and an expenditure of money which ultimately the people of the United States must pay. Twenty-five million dollars will build 500 miles of railroad at the rate of $50,000 per mile. That is a greater mileage than is proposed to be built,

As much as I am in favor of amending it, I shall vote for the bill on its final passage. I shall, however, vote to reduce the amount to be appropriated from $40,000,000 to $25,000,000.

While I am on my feet I wish to say that I happened to be a member of the Committee on Public Lands of the House some six years ago; and I wish to say to those who have questioned whether or not there would be any tonnage to be carried over this railroad that the testimony before that committee-and I have the record of it before me now-that there is estimated to be in the two coal fields of Matanuska and Bering River 6,000,000,000 tons of good coal with a fixed carbon content of from 78 to 84 per cent.

In my judgment there is no question but that Alaska contains great coal fields, and they ought to be opened up. This bill will not do it, but I believe ultimately supplementary legisla-tion will be offered and passed that will open up that country.

So far as agricultural resources are concerned. I do not believe it is necessary to open up Alaska for the purpose of going into the industry of agriculture. I do not believe any man who intends to make his living on the farm would go into Alaska to develop a farm there simply for the purpose of raising agricultural products.

This bill has been characterized as a socialistic measure. do not believe I have ever been accused of being a Socialist, because I believe in individual effort. I believe in the competitive system. I am of the opinion, however, that any man who had good standing in the Socialist Party would vote against this bill. We are beginning with Government ownership in a country where there is only a bare possibility of making a success; but we need not fool ourselves with the idea that we are going to teach and discourage the American people, or at least those who believe in Government ownership, who are

Ashurst Borah

Bristow

pressing their claims and their demands for Government ownership, by making this experiment in a country where there is the least possibility of making it a success.

I should have liked to see the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] incorporated in the bill. There are other amendments that I should have liked to see incorporated in it.

So far as concerns the claim that the measure is socialistic, there is nothing in that argument. I do not believe any man fears any of the provisions of this bill. We are not going into competition with private interests to any very great extent, as I understand the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know whether, under the rules, Senators rising to address themselves to the various amendments are absolutely required to speak 15 minutes? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. STONE. That they have to speak 15 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I call for the year and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. and vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the former vote as to my pair and its transfer. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Once more announcing the transfer of my pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. Burleigh], I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). nounce my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. Smively's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again make the same announcement respecting the disposition of my pair that I made on the former vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative) I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was requested to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Sena-tor from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I will let that announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce a pair between my colleague [Mr. Hughes] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Catron]. I do not know how either Senator would vote on this amendment if present and not paired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce a pair between the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. Thomas] necessarily from the Senate, and to state that if he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). am informed that I can transfer my pair. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt], and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 39, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I now renew my motion to strike out "$40,000,000" and insert "$35,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 11, line 23, strike out "$40,000,000" and in lieu insert "$35,000,000."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 13, after the word "necessary," insert the following proviso:

Provided. That the price to be paid in case of purchase shall in no case exceed the actual physical value of the railroad property based on cost of reproduction less depreciation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there are two existing railroads that may be purchased under the terms of the bill, or which may be taken by condemnation. It has seemed to me wise, and other members of the committee with whom I have discussed it have agreed with me, that in case the property is purchased instead of being taken by condemnation, a limit such as I have proposed here should be provided. We understand that both these properties are bankrupt, and if they are purchased under a private arrangement, there should be a limit to the physical valuation of the properties, less any depreciation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to look at the amendment to the amendment before the vote is taken.

Mr. STONE. Let it be read. We all want to hear it. Mr. WALSH. It reads as follows:

Provided. That the price to be paid in case of purchase shall in no case exceed the actual physical value of the railroad property based on cost of reproduction less depreciation.

I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On page 12, line 25, I move to insert the word "lease" before the word "sale." This provision is to the effect that a certain portion of the proceeds of the earnings of the railroad and a certain portion of the proceeds from the sale or disposal of the lands in Alaska shall go into a fund for the redemption of the railway bonds. In voting for this bill it is my purpose that the property of the people shall remain the property of the people and shall not be sold. I purpose, if the bill becomes a law, to introduce, if no one else does, a provision that the public lands in Alaska, particularly the coal lands, shall be leased by the Government to companies or individuals who shall operate them. I therefore want to provide that a part of the proceeds of the leases in such case shall go into this fund.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have consulted a number of the members of the committee, and I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no objection to it, I understand. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 12, line 25, before the word "sale," insert the word "lease" and a comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). was requested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay," but under the circumstances I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. Burton's name was alled). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron] is unavoidably detained from the Senator ate and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas]. If the Senator from Ohio were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and vote "yea."

While I am on my feet I desire to state that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is unavoidably absent, and that he is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMTH]. The Senator from Minnesota asked me further to announce that if he were present he would vote for the bill.

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson]. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "nay," and the senior Senator from Texas would vote "yea.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH],

Mr. KENYON (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Chamber by illness. He had expected to be present to-day, but owing to the inclemency of the weather he could not come. He would vote yea" if present.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. Shively's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff].

Mr. OVERMAN (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I was requested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to state that he is unavoidably absent and that he is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). the same announcement with reference to the disposition of my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] as before and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. Thornton's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. Thorn-Ton on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Chawford]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair present and were permitted to vote, he would vote "nay," and I would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired on the final vote on the bill with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce a pair existing between my colleague [Mr. Hughes] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. GORE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Owen] is necessarily absent from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the announcement has been made, but I think it proper to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN] is absent on account of ckness. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am informed that the Senator from South Carolina would vote for the bill, if present.

SENATOR FROM MARYLAND.

B. 3970. Nettie Jackson.

Mr. BRADLEY. Some days ago I obtained permission of the Senate to file a minority report on the credentials of Hon. "be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution."

BLAIR LEE as a Senator from the State of Maryland. I now file the views of the minority and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD, and also printed as a Senate report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the views of the minority will be received and printed as requested.

The views (S. Rept. No. 160, pt. 3) submitted by Mr. Bradley are as follows:

[Senate Report No. 160, part 3, Sixty-third Congress, second session.] CREDENTIALS OF BLAIR LEE AS SENATOR FROM MARYLAND, CREDENTIALS OF BLAIR LEE AS SENATOR FROM MARYLAND.

Mr. Bradley, from the Committe on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following minority report, to accompany Senate resolution 247:

I am unable to agree with the majority report, but agree with the minority report except in so far as it concedes by implication or otherwise that the election and term, or any part of the term, of a Senator elected or chosen before the seventeenth amendment became valid as part of the Constitution and enforceable by the enactment of the necessary legislation therein required is governed by the amendment.

The intent and meaning of that amendment must be determined from its language and not from supposition. The people expressed their intention through their representatives who ratified that amendment. To say they did not know what they desired, or, if they did, that they did not know how to express it is a reflection upon their intelligence. The Senate, it is true, is the sole judge of the qualification and election of its Members, but in rendering judgment should act strictly within the law and not exercise arbitrary power.

The proposal and adoption of the seventeenth amendment grew out of a desire of a majority of the people to correct what they believed a great evil. In the discussion of the manner in which this evil should be corrected, both oral and written (preceding and following the proposal of the amendment), the rights of senators elected under the old system or the filling of vacancies in their offices was never aliuded to. The people merely intended to inaugurate a new system, to wit, te elect Senators in the future, after the terms of those in office had expired, by popular vote. The amendment was a complete revolution in the system of electing Senators, as well as in supplying vacancies, and clearly and explicitly states its object.

Relow is set forth, in parallel columns, the Constitution as it existed before and since the adoption of the amendment, and the amendment:

ARTICLE I.

ABTICLE I.

SEC. 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year; and if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments (until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It appears, in the first place, and

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. Electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution.

It appears, in the first place, under the amendment, that each State shall be entitled to two Senators, who shall be elected by the people thereof for six years.

It will be noted that these Senators are elected for the full period of six years.

In the next place, it provides that—

"when vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies, etc."

Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies, etc."

Now, we inquire what vacancies are referred to? Evidently vacancies in the representation provided for in the terms of Senators elected by the people. This we must assume, because the vacancies can refer only to Senators so elected and specified in the previous pertion of the amendment. To say that the amendment refers to vacancies in the terms of Senators elected by the legislature, when it has no reference to Senators so elected and does not even mention them up to this point, is an unjustifiable interpretation. In other words, such a construction does violence to the purpose of the amendment. A specific way for filling vacancies in the terms of Senators elected by the people is provided, to wit, the governor may appoint when empowered to do so and shall issue writs of election when the vacancies shall be filled by the vote of the people as directed by the elegislature. The Senator having been chosen by the people, a vacancy in his office is to be filled by the people.

Under the old rule a Senator was elected by the legislature and after temporary appointment by the governor during the recess of the legislature his successor was chosen by the legislature in the same way in which he was elected.

It seems that this is the only construction authorized, without taking into consideration the after provision of the amendment; but in order to make the meaning of the amendment even planer, it is declared that it shall not—

If the intention was to supply vacancies in the offices of previously elected Senators, why insert this saving clause? But we are told that this was done lest it might be supposed that the old Senators were removed. Surely no such contingency could be apprehended, for they had been elected for a fixed term, and the express purpose of the amendment was to elect and not to remove Senators. A construction that all the old Senators were removed by the amendment would have been ridiculous, for its necessary result would be to eliminate the entire Senate. The framers were men of extraordinary intelligence and never for a moment apprehended that such an interpretation would be contended for by any man of sound mind, or if contended for, would be sustained.

We can not for a moment think that the saving clause was inserted to prevent an interpretation so ridiculous; nor, on the other hand, can we assume that the saving clause was mere surplusage, inserted without purpose. It seems perfectly plain that the purpose of that clause was to place beyond all dispute any contention concerning the election or terms of Senators chosen before the amendment became valid and enforceable. In other words, the saving clause means exactly what it says.

When the circumstances existing at the time of the proposal of this amendment are taken into consideration, the intention of the framers of the instrument is made even plainer if possible. They knew that it was not certain that the amendment would be adopted, although it was confidently believed that it would be. They knew that the time when it would be adopted was exceedingly uncertain, as it would require a considerable period for three-fourths of the States to act. They knew that the legislatures convened in some of the States annually, in some biennially, in some triennially, and in some quadrennially. This would necessarily affect not only the time consumed in ratifying the amendment, but also the election of Senators under the same and the necessary time consumed in legislation an proper.

We must assume that these contingencies were taken into consideration, and the further reasonable certainty that vacancies would occur in the offices of some of the Senators during that period; hence the intention was to prevent any conflict between the Constitution and the amendment, and to prevent any hiatus in the representation of the amendment, and to prevent any hiatus in the representation of any State.

The amendment itself was not self-executing, because while the governor is given the right to appoint he can only do so when empowered by act of the legislature; and while he is given the right to issue the writ of election, it follows from the amendment that the election can not be held until provided for by the legislature, and then held as the legislature may direct. It was not intended that the amendment should be retrospective; on the contrary, it was prospective. Indeed, the principle of law is universal that all statutes and constitutions shall be construed prospectively unless an intention to the contrary is so plainly expressed as to render such construction impossible.

The amendment had no application to the past; it was aimed entirely at the future. While intended to confer power on the people to elect their Senators by popular election, as directed by the legislature, the object of the saving clause was to prevent any conflict between the old law and the new, as well as any interregnum in the representation of Senators elected or chosen under the old rule.

A specious attempt to escape this construction is made by the contention that the word "affect," as used, has a limited meaning, referring only to the lengthening or shortening of the term. The lexicographers and synonymists, however, do not give any reason for such an interpretation; on the contrary, they give every reason for such an interpretation; on the contrary, they give every reason for such an interpretation; on the contrary, they give every reason for an entirely different construction. In other words, they give the plain, everyday meaning to the word as it is understood, not only by the people but by the courts.

Webster's Luabridged Dictionary says that the meaning of the word meaning to the word as it is the courts.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary says that the meaning of the word "affect" is "to act upon, to produce an effect or change." He gives as synonyms of the word, "influence, operate or act on, concern, move, as synonyms impair."

as synonyms of the word, "influence, operate or act on, concern, move, overcome, impair."

Soulé, in his work on synonyms, gives the synonyms of the word "affect" as "influence on, act upon, work upon, concern."

In Home Building Loan Association v. Nolan (21 Mont., 205) the meaning of the word was held to be "operate on, act upon, or concern."

In the case of Ryan v. Carter (93 U. S. S. C., 78) the Supreme Court of the United States construed the word "affect" as having been used in the sease of acting injuriously upon persons and things. Such interpretation, 'said the court, "accords with the reason and manifest intention of the proviso, unsettles no confirmed title, and secures to the inhabitants the protection that Congress thought proper to afford."

In Baird v. St. Louis Hospital (116 Mo., 419) the court held that the word "affect" meant that the statute should not be so construed as to "prejudice or injuriously affect such rights."

In Connift v. City (4 E. D. Smith, 430) the New York court held that the meaning of the word "affect" was "to act upon or produce a change."

the meaning of the word "affect" was "to act upon or produce a change."

In Clark v. Riddle (101 Iowa, 270) the court held that the meaning of the word "affect" was "to act upon or change."

In Holland v. Dickerson (41 Iowa) it was held that the use of the word "affect" was to prevent any change of preexisting rights.

At page 1159 of the Encyclopedia of Law and Procedure the general rule is laid down that the word "affect" means "to have effect upon, to influence; but often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things, and sometimes in the sense of vary."

According to these definitions, this amendment means that the election or term of any Senator chosen before the same became valid as a part of the Constitution, shall not be acted upon, affected, concerned, enlarged, changed, prejudiced, or injuriously affected, impaired, worked upon, varied, aimed at, influenced, or operated upon.

The word "term" has a fixed and legal meaning, being purely impersonal. If the object of the seventeenth amendment was to affect the old Senators in any part of their term, the word "tenure" would have been used. We can not for a moment think that the framers of the amendment did not know the difference between the meaning of the two words. When the amendment says that the "election or term" shall not be affected, it speaks of the term as one consecutive period, and it follows that if the term can not be affected, no part of it can be, for the word "term" embraces all its parts, and is not susceptible of partition. Not only so, the amendment after declaring that "it shall not be construed so as to affect the election or term of any Senator," adds the significant word "chosen." This word refers equally to an election and an appointment, and was used to cover the case of an appointed Senator, for he remains in office until his successor is elected by the legislature meeting after the appointment.

It may be that under the amendment an election for the regular term may be provided by the Congress, as the amendment does not specifically say that it can not be done, though in my judgment the implication is by no meanstitution, as it stood prior to the amendment specifically say that it can not be done, though in my judgment the implication is by no meanstitution, as it stood prior to the amendment specifically say that it can not be done, though in my judgment the implication is by no meanstitution, as it stood prior to the amendment, but it is perfectly plain that the Congress can not provide for a special election to ill a vacancy in the office of a Senator elected by the people. The people having changed the method of selecting a Senator, may not object to legislation by Congress affecting a general election. But they evidently determined to prevent Congress from legislating as to the manner of supplying vacancies; hence the amendment specifically provides that in case of vacancy (alluding to terms of Senators elected by the people) the legislature of any State may empower the governor to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancy by election as the legislature may direct. The legislature alone may direct the time, place, and manner of the election, and Congress has no power to direct it. A special agents which present sits legislation for the regular election of congress to provid of the legislature and that body, after it convenes, can elect for the remainder of the term.

Evidently the governors of the various States so construed the amendment, or they would have called special sessions of the legislatures to enforce its provisions.

The fact that under this view the fallure of any State to adopt proper regulations would leave the amendment ineffective is attributable entirely to the fallure of the framers to make it specific and self-executing. This is unfortunate, but nevertheless true, and we are confronted by a condition, not a theory.

That vacancies may be filled in different ways and at different times during the same period results from the election of Senators every two years, and hence vacancies may occur at different times, some in places of Senators elected under the old and some under the new rules, until the terms of all Senators under the old rule have expired.

If it be true that Congress can legislate, then such legislation should be adopted; but if the States alone can act, they must legislate to put the amendment in force. Meanwhile, the old rule will apply, for it can not be supposed for a moment that until proper legislation is enacted the wheels of government shall be clogged or remain motionless.

(See Cooley's Const., 7 ed., pp. 98–100, 119; 8 Cyc., pp. 752 (and footnote), 753, 759, 760 (and footnote 10), 761 (and footnote 16), 762–763 (and note 33), and the many authorities cited at each page; Ex Parte State of Alabama, 52 Ala., 231; Brown v. 124; State v. Gardner, 3 S. Dak., 553; Black v. Ada County (Idaho), 44 Pac. R., 734.)

The rule laid down generally in the foregoing authorities, that if a State fails to provide legislation to make enforceable a constitutional provision not self-executing there is no remedy, may not apply in this instance should it appear that the State had purposely failed and refused to do its duty, because the Semate in such case might refuse admission to a Senator elected or chosen under the old rule for a regular term accruing after the amendment became valid or the filling of a vacancy in such term.

The State of Maryland can not be punished by depriving it of its equal suffrage in the Senate because Congress failed to make the proposed amendment self-executing.

It was argued before the committee that the governor might call a special election when there was no law authorizing it, and the person chosen at such election would be recognized. To sustain this contention the case of Hoge, who was elected Representative in Congress under such circumstances from Pennsylvania and was admitted, and later cases in which similar action was had, were cited, as also McCrary on Elections. In each of the cases mentioned a Member of the lower House of Congress was elected, but at the time there was a State statute providing for the general election of Representatives in Congress, and in Pennsylvania the special election was held at the time fixed therein. It must be borne in mind that this case is distinguished from them in that there is not a State statute, specific or otherwise, authorizing the election of a United States Senator in Maryland. The theory upon which the decisions cited was reached was that, there being a statute authorizing and fixing the manner of bolding regular elections, which could be held under the terms of the general law.

Those cases have no bearing on the question in issue here. Especially is this true not only because there is no statute authorizing or regulating the election of a Senator, but because the amendment points out plainly how the elections for Senator are to be provided for, and no law has been passed conforming thereto. To hold that such a procedure could be pursued in the election of a United States Senator as was pursued in the election of a Representative in the lower House in the cases mentioned would be an open and flagrant disregard of the fundamental law, and would enable the governor, who is only an executive officer, to legislate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The views (S. Rept. No. 164, pt. 2) submitted by Mr. Bradley are as follows:

[Senate Report No. 164, part 2, Sixty-third Congress, second session.] CREDENTIALS OF HON. FRANK P. GLASS.

CREDENTIALS OF HON. FRANK P. GLASS.

Mr. Bradley (for himself and Mr. Clapp), from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following minority report, to accompany Senate resolution 249:

I can not agree with the majority of the committee.

No one of the majority has a more sincere desire to comply with the will of the people than I; but we disagree as to what the will of the people is. This must be determined from the language contained in the seventeenth amendment, adopted by their constituted agents, and not from supposition of what the people desire. To say that the people did not know what they desired or, if they did, that they did not know how to express it, is a reflection upon their intelligence.

The Senate is the judge of the qualification and election of its Members. However, in determining their qualification and election it does not exercise arbitrary power, but acts strictly within the law.

The proposal and adoption of the seventeenth amendment grew out of a desire of a majority of the people to correct what they believed a great evil. In the discussion of the manner in which this evil should be corrected, both oral and written (preceding and following the proposal of the amendment), the rights of Senators elected under the old system or the filling of vacancies in their offices was never alluded to. They knew that the what it says.

When the circumstances existing at the time of the proposal of this amendment are taken into consideration, the intention of the framers of the instrument is made even plainer, if possi that it could not be deprived of its right for any length of time by constitutional amendment, and that such an amendment would itself be unconstitutional. Hence the saving clause was eminently wise and proper.

We must assume that these contingencies were taken into consideration, and the further reasonable certainty that vacancies would occur in the offices of some of the Senators during that period; hence their intention was to prevent any conflict between the Constitution and the amendment, and to avoid any hiatus in the representation of any State. The amendment itself was not self-executing, because while the governor is given the right to appoint, he can only do so when empowered by act of the legislature; and while he is given the right to issue a writ of election, it follows from the amendment that the election can not be held until provided for by the legislature, and held as the legislature may direct. It was not intended that the amendment should be retrospective; on the contrary, it was prospective. Indeed, the principle of law is universal that all statutes and constitutions shall be construed prospectively unless an intention to the contrary is so plainly expressed as to render such construction impossible.

The amendment had no application to the past; it dealt alone with the future. While intended to confer power on the people to elect their Senators by popular vote, as directed by the legislature, the object of the saving clause was to prevent any conflict between the old law and the new, as well as any interregnum in the representation of Senators elected or chosen under the old rule.

A specious attempt to escape this construction is made by the contention that the word "affect," as used, has a limited meaning, referring only to the lengthening or shortening of the term. This can not be correct, because both the Constitution and the amendment fix the term at six years. The lexicographers and synonymists, however, do not give any reason for such an interpretation; on the contrary, they were s

In Baird v. St. Louis Hospital (116 Mo., 419) the court held that the word "affect" meant that the statute should not be so construed as to "prejudice or injuriously affect such rights."

In Connift v. City (4 E. D. Smith, 430) the New York court held that the meaning of the word "affect" was "to act upon or produce a change."

In Clark v. Riddle (101 Iowa, 270) the court held that the meaning of the word "affect" was "to act upon or change."

In Holland v. Dickerson (41 Iowa) it was held that the use of the word "affect" was to prevent any change of preexisting rights.

At page 1159 of the Encyclopedia of Law and Procedure the general rule is laid down that the word "affect" means "to have effect upon, to influence; but often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things, and sometimes in the sense of 'vary."

According to these definitions, this amendment means that the election or term of any Senator chosen before the same becomes valid as a part of the Constitution shall not be acted upon, affected, concerned, enlarged, changed, prejudiced or injuriously affected, impaired, worked upon, varied, aimed at, influenced, or operated upon.

The word "term" has a fixed legal meaning, being purely impersonal. If the object of the seventeenth amendment was to affect the old Senators in any part of their term, the word "term" would have been used. We can not for a moment suppose that the framers of the amendment did not know the difference between the meaning of the two words. When the amendment says that the "election or term" shall not be affected, it speaks of the term as one consecutive period, and it follows that if the term can not be affected, no part of it can be affected, for he word "term" embraces all its parts. It is not susceptible of partition.

It is argued that an election of a Senator by the people is already provided for by statute in Alabama, and hence the governor may issue a writ of election thereunder. Even if this were true, no power exists to order an election by the people in case of vacancy in the term of any Senator elected or chosen before the amendment became valid as a part of the Constitution, because such terms are governed entirely by the old constitutional rule and are expressly excepted from the operation of the amendment.

But in point of fact, the statement that an election to fill a vacancy in the term of any Senator, under the old rule or the amendment, is authorized by the statute of Alabama is incorrect. It is true that section 322, volume 1, Alabama Code, after naming the various State officers who are to be elected at the general election, provides for "such officers who are to be elected by the people." That is the first section in the article regulating elections, and the title of the section applies to all officers who are observed the proper of the section is as much a part of that statute does not justify an appointment for the residue of the term, it would make it effectual until the legislature fills the vacancy by election as authorized by the Constitution before the amendment went into effect.

As already shown, section 332 specifically applies to general elections and section 333 fixes the time of holding the same. Special elections are provided for in section 439, which covers the offices named in the other sections, and in the last subdivision provides "and in such other cases as are or may be provided by the law of Alabama having reference to the class of offices named and not to a Senator unless he is to be classed as a State officer. However, it is argued that as the amendment requires the governor to issue a writ of election and authorizes an election by the people to fill a vacancy in the office of a Senator as directed by the legislature, that such an election can be held under the subdivisions of the section named because the amendment authorizes it.

Unfortunately for this contention, in 1909—many years after the section contained in the Alabama Code was adopted, which was in 1875, and several years before the amendment was ratified, and before any law had been enacted increasing the scope of the special election law in Alabama, which has never been done up to this time in Alabama—a law was passed in Alabama requiring the governor to fill all vacancies by appointment when no way was provided by law for filling them. At that time there was no way provided by law for filling a vacancy in the office of a United States Senator, by the amendment or otherwise; and hence the act of 1909 repealed the subdivision of section 439, and here is no law now in force in Alabama allowing special elections "in cases which may be provided by law," it being both the right and duty of the governor to fill vacancies not provided for, if a Senator is estimated to the subdivision of section 439, and there is no law now in force in Alabama allowing special elections with the amendment as the in case of vacancy under the amendment; and yet it has as much power to do that as to provide for special elections.

The State legislature alone can authorize the governor to appoint, and it alone can direct the time, place, and manner of holding the election to supply vacancies. It would be useless for the governor to appoint a Senator temporarily, for this he could not legally do until authorized by the legislature. It would be equally useless for him to issue a writ of election until the legislature had directed the time, place, and manner of holding such election. In both instances the legislature alone can put the amendment in force.

The obvious purport of the amendment is that the States shall be given time to provide necessary legislation to make it effective. This plainly appears in the third paragraph, and no other interpretation can be given without destroying the meaning of the words employed and doing violence to the plain principles of justice.

The construction that the provisions of the Constitution existing before the amendment became valid as a part of the Constitution, and capable of enforcement by legislation, should govern the terms of Senators (and vacancies therein) elected under it prevents all friction and uncertainty as well as any histus in representation, because under its provisions the governor can appoint during a recess of the legislature and that body, after it convenes, can elect for the remainder of the term.

Evidently the governors of the various States so construed the Senators (and vacancies therein) elected under it prevents all friction and uncertainty as well as any biatus in representation, because under its provisions the governor can appoint during a recess of the feature of the term.

Evidently the governors of the various States so construed the amendment, or they would have called special sessions of the legislature to enforce its provisions.

The fact that under this view the failure of any State to adopt proper regulations would leave the amendment ineffective is attributable entirely to the failure of the framers to make it specific and self-executing. This is unfortunate, but nevertheless true, and we are confronted by a condition, not a theory.

That vacancies may be filled in different ways and at different times during the same period results from the election of Senators every two years and hence vacancies may occur at different times, some in gleeted under the new side, until the terms of all Senators under the old rule have expired.

If it be true that Congress can legislate to any extent, such legislation should be adopted; but if the States alone can act, either in whole or part, as Congress can not, they must legislate to put the amendment in force. Meanwhile the old rule will apply, for it can not be supposed for a moment that until proper legislation is enacted that wheels of government shall be clogged or remain motionless. A bill (S. 4160) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the interstate trade commission, which shall be composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said interstate trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

Sec. 2. That on the taking effect of this act the Bureau of Corporations shall cease to exist, and is hereby transferred to and merged in and becomes a part of the commission; and all officers and employees of the Bureau of Corporations shall hereafter be the officers and employees of the commission, and with the transfer there shall pass to the possession of the commission shall hereafter exercise all the powers and perform all the duties heretofore conferred or imposed upon the said bureau.

All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau shall stand as appropriations to be expended by the commission in the exercise of the power and in the performance of the duties which the law, prior to the passage of this act, conferred or imposed upon said bureau. And the person who at that time shall be the Commissioner of Corporations shall become a member of the commission and the chairman thereof for the term of seven years. The other four commissioners, and a fifth commissioner upon the retirement or expiration of the seven-year term of the former Commissioner of the commissioner of the Senate. The term of the commissioner shall be seven years; Provided, That the term of the commissioner of this act and be as follows: One for a term of the commissioner of Corporations, shall be appointed for a term of seven years. Upon the retirement from the commission, from whatsoever cause, of the person who at th

SEC. 3. That all corporations engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting common carriers, whether required by general rules and regulations for regular information or information specially asked in special instances, shall, from time to time, furnish to the commission such information, statements, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, management, and relation to other companies, at such time, to such degree and extent, and in such form, as may be prescribed by the commission. The commission, at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporations subject to this act to comply with the terms of this section within such time after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance as shall be fixed by the commission shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

SEC. 4. That the information so obtained shall be public records, and the commission shall, from time to time, make public such information in such form and to such extent as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 5. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with any order of the commission of the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or other order enforcing such order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof as in other cases of contempt of court.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of this act the commission shall have the power to require by subpæna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, documents, or other things of every kind and nature whatsoever relating to any mat claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying.

Witnesses whose testimony is taken under the provisions of this act shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like service in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, or other things before the commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the commission, whether such subpena be signed or issued by one or more of the commissioners, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify under oath or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it in a proceeding instituted other than upon his own initiative: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The purpose of this provision is to give immunity only to natural persons who, under oath, testify in response to a subpena of the commission in an inquiry instituted by the commission.

Sec. 7. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Sec. 8. That the commission is hereby given authority, upon comparticular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 8. That the commission is hereby given authority, upon complaint made to it in such manner as it may by general or specific regulations provide, or on its own initiative, to institute and conduct an investigation to determine whether or not any corporation subject to the provisions of this act was organized or has established such relations with other individuals or corporations or is conducting its business in whole or in part in violation of the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," or any existing or future amendments thereof, or any of said provisions. If the commission shall find any such violation, the matter shall be submitted by it to the Attorney General, to the end that the said violation be proceeded against, prosecuted, and terminated in accordance with the provisions of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof or supplemental thereto as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That the commission shall, at any time, upon the request of the Attorney General or any corporation affected, investigate any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, with all the powers of investigation heretofore bestowed on the commission, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been in the conduct of said corporation or is in the organization of such corporation or its relations to other corporations or individuals a violation of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and in case the commission shall find such violation it shall make a finding, fully stating the same and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said act and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding as aforesaid to the Attorney General, as the litigation, at its discretion, refer to the commission any aspect of the litigation or any proposed decree, whereupon the commission shall investigate the question or questions referred to it with all the powers of investigation hereinbefore bestowed on the commission and shall report its findings to the court, with a copy of the evidence upon which said findings or recommendations are based. Said evidence, findings, and recommendations shall be public records, as provided in section 4 hereof.

Sec. 11. That the said commission shall, on or before the 1st day of January of each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations with reference to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

Sec. 12. That, with the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners, and such special agents as may be employed from time to time, all employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission shall also have the power to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work, paying therefor such rent as may be provided for by appropriation.

Sec. 13. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing, according to the provisions thereof, the said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, nor to amend or modify otherwise the provisions of said act and the amendments thereof.

THE CLAYTON-NEWLANDS BILLS.

Representative CLAYTON this afternoon gave to the press the full text of the tentative bill as agreed upon by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (Messrs. Clayton, CARLIN, and FLOYD of Arkansas) and the majority members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and said:

"The bill will be introduced at the same time by Representa-tive Clayton and Senator Newlands. The bill is modeled after the lines of what is commonly known as the Newlands bill, which was introduced in the Senate some months ago by Senator Newlands, and involves the fundamental idea that a trade commission shall be created, consisting of five members, with full inquisitorial powers into the operation and organization of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, other than common carriers. It provides for a commission of five members, makes the Commissioner of Corporations chairman of the board, and transfers all the existing powers of that bureau to the commission. Its relation to the Attorney General's office and to the courts is advisory. Its principal and most important duty, besides conducting investigations, will be to aid the courts, when requested, in the formation of decrees of dissolution, and with this end in view it empowers the courts to refer any part of pending litigation to the commission, including the proposed decree, for information and advice."

Senator Newlands, being interviewed, said:

"The trade-commission bill and several other bills limiting the debatable ground of the Sherman Act have been the subject of laborious consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (consisting of Mr. Clayron, chairman, and Messrs, Carlin and Floyp of Arkansas) during the helidays and before. The majority members of the Interthe holidays and before. The majority members of the Inter-state Commerce Committee of the Senate have been brought into consultation with them of late.

"The trade-commission bill preserves the essential features of the bill which I have been urging for some time, but contains amendments and additions of value and is, in my judgment, an improvement upon the bill as it was considered and improved by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate during the last Congress. As a whole, I should say that the trade-commission bill ought to be satisfactory to members of all parties, for it is distinctively progressive, and we have en-deavored to frame it in harmony with the President's views, presented in an admirable message, which has received the approval of the entire country, regardless of party. While these bills represent at present the best thought of the participants in the shaping of this legislation, they are presented simply as tentative measures, upon which the judgment of the proper committees of the House and Senate and of the country is invoked."

ANNA DIGGS.

Mr. STONE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 253), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Anna Diggs, widow of the late John H. Diggs, a mail carrier in the Senate post office, out of the miscellaneous-items fund of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. LEA. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Con-

The resolution (S. Res. 254) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

whereas under Senate resolution 153 the Interstate Commerce Commission was instructed and directed to investigate and report certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Rallroad, and the ownership of certain subsidiary railroad companies by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; and Whereas the investigation instituted by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to said resolution has in some of its phases been suspended on account of the refusal of H. L. Stone, general counsel of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, to permit the examiners acting under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to have access to certain files and records, as has been communicated to the Senate by Hon. E. E. Clark, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission: Therefore be it

The statement referred to is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, Washington, January 21, 1914.

Hon. Luke Lea, United States Senate, Washington.

Hon. Luke Lea.

United States Senate, Washington.

Dear Sir: Referring to the telegraphic correspondence between the commission and Mr. Stone, of the Louisville & Nashville Rallroad relative to his refusal to accord our examiners access to certain files of the Louisville & Nashville and to our conversation of to-day on that subject, I think it proper to say—

We think that in this matter Mr. Stone is acting as a recognized authority for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. In transmitting this correspondence to the Senate we had in mind that the only means open to us to secure access to these files when same is so positively refused by the custodian thereof, who is also the representative of the carrier, was through the courts, and probably by mandamus proceedings. No one could foretell how long such court proceedings would continue, and if the conclusion of the investigation directed by the Senate had to await determination of such litigation it might and probably would be unreasonably delayed. We thought that the Senate doubtless had power through independent action of a Senate committee or through cooperation of such committee with the commission to secure access to these records by a more direct route if such action were deemed advisable by the Senate.

We deem it proper also to say that in a previous instance other officers of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad refused our examiners access to certain of the records, and our examiners were referred to Mr. Stone as the one who would determine the attitude and policy of the company. After some little time had been consumed in controversy and correspondence Mr. Stone advised us that the records in question might then be examined by our representatives.

It seemed and now seems to us that the fact that Mr. Stone was acting with authority on behalf of the Louisville & Nashville was evidenced by the text of his telegram, copy of which was transmitted to the Senate, in which he requested that if we brought the matter to the Senate, in which he requested that if w

E. E. CLARK, Chairman,

Interstate Commerce Commission,

Washington, January 22, 1914.

Dear Mr. Chairman: The attached letter of June 29 from Examiner
Brown to Mr. Lutz, chief examiner of accounts, was written in connection with an investigation that we were then making of the pass records of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. It there appears that Examiner Brown was refused access to certain records of the company because "of the attitude of Col. Stone," then and now its general counsel. Moreover, verbal reports made to me by the examiner shortly afterwards indicated that he was referred to Col. Stone by the chief clerk to Mr. W. L. Mapother, after repeated requests for certain files had been refused. Upon being advised of this situation, I at once took the matter up by wire with Col. Stone, asserting the right of the commission, without limitation, to examine all the records of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. The summer intervened, and the matter was not brought again to my attention until October. I wrote Col. Stone on October 21, and his reply of December 9 is hereto attached. There is no real basis for the supposition that in the meantime the files in question had been stripped, beyond the belief by the examiners then in the office of the Louisville & Nashville that this process was going on while they were there. In the meantime the files in question had been stripped, beyond the belief by the examiners then in the office of the Louisville & Nashville that this

DIVISION OF CARRIERS' ACCOUNTS,

Washington, D. C., July 6, 1912.

Mr. Charles A. Lutz,

Chief Examiner of Accounts,

Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I inclose herewith copy of letter received from Mr. W. L.

Mapother, first vice president Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the contents of which is self-explanatory.

The question of files has remained in abeyance owing to the subject being a matter of communication between the commission and the legal department of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Request was made of chief clerk of the law department for access to trip passes, stubs, and correspondence relating thereto, and that gentleman advised me of the attitude of Col. Stone in the matter; that is, that we should be furnished with such correspondence and passes as relate to interstate journeys. He also advises that the stub books would be placed in our possession, containing both intra and inter state records of passes issued. I informed the gentleman, in view of the fact that the matter was a subject of correspondence between the commission and the legal department of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, that no request at this time would be made for any intrastate correspondence. This action is taken in order that our requests may not embarrass the commission in its present communications with the officials of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

It was suggested to you while here that when the work was drawing to a close it might be advisable to attempt to browse in the files of the traffic department, and as this plan had your approval it was my purpose to assign one of our representatives to this task after personally taking the matter up with the traffic officials, but in view of the attitude of the officials of this company in respect to the files it is not my purpose at the present writing to carry this proposed plan into effect until our position is definitely determined through the correspondence which it is understood is now going on between the commission and the

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO., FIRST VICE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE, Louisville, Ky., June 26, 1912.

Mr. D. E. Brown, Examiner, Interstate Commerce Commission, Hotel Hermitage, City.

Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your favor of the 25th instant relative to certain correspondence files relating to the issuance of annual and term passes by this office.

The files in question relate exclusively to the issuance of intrastate passes. By my direction your examiners were politely advised that we did not consider the examination of the correspondence within the scope of your examiners' authority, and delivery of the files was, therefore, declined. I respectfully adhere to such decision.

I think you must admit that we have promptly and cheerfully surrendered to your examiners every office record within the scope of their authority, and it will be our purpose to so continue.

Yours, truly, .

W. L. Mapother.

W. L. MAPOTHER, First Vice President.

Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., Louisville, Ky., December 3, 1912.

My Dean Mr. Harlan: Please refer again to your letter of October 21 last and to my letter of November 9 relating to the subject of our telegraphic correspondence during last summer concerning the inspection by the examiners of the commission of certain files of this company.

I have very carefully considered your suggestions to the effect that under the broad general powers claimed by the commission, wholly independent of the powers covered by section 20 of the act, an inquiry set on foot by the commission would render available for information to it all the files of the company touching the subject of the inquiry. The particular files with which our correspondence dealt were those which pertained exclusively and separately to the issuance of free intrastate transportation.

I regret very much that I can not agree with your view of the state of the law in regard to the powers of the Government, and I feel constrained to adhere to my own views expressed rather fully last summer.

summer.

Nevertheless, on purely practical grounds—to use your own words—and without waiving any rights of the company, we are now willing that the examiners of the commission shall have full and free access to the files in question, the investigations to be limited to those beginning the 1st day of January, 1908, as you have heretofore suggested, and extending down to the present time, and instructions will be given to our officials in accordance with the foregoing conclusion.

I trust that this outcome of the matter will be satisfactory to you. Yours, very truly,

H. L. Stone, General Counsel.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our hearts go out in gratitude to Thee, our Father in heaven, for the wonderful transitions which have been going on and are to-day affecting the minds and hearts of men under the benign influence of humanitarianism, born of the Christ spirit. Imperialism is giving way to the broader views of democracy in the social and economical fields of endeavor, and we most fervently pray that the toilers, the so-called laboring classes, may be lifted to their rightful place in the hearts of men, that they may share equally with capital in the productions of their toil. Hasten the day when capital and labor shall be united in the bonds of brotherhood, each for all and all for each. To this end deliver us from the alarmist, the agitator, the demagogue, that the broad-minded, warm-hearted humanitarian may do his work and bring about the nobler, grander conditions when strife shall cease and harmony prevail, that brother may live with brother in love and peace.

To-day, our Father in heaven, marks an event in the history of this House. A man known for his uprightness, his integrity, his Christian character, has been taken away after serving this House for 58 years, always at his post, always strong to do his work, and now passed on to a glor ous reward. Bless those who knew and loved Capt. John T. Chancey. Be with his family and comfort them, and help us so to live that when the time comes we shall pass on to a more glorious existence under the benign influences of the Christian thought and religion, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ALASKA.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave to extend my remarks by printing in the Record a letter addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on the Territories by Rev. S. H. Young, a Presbyterian minister, who has had charge of missions in Alaska for many years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hous-TON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed to him as chairman of the Committee on the Territories. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Following is the letter referred to:

DECEMBER 22, 1913.

Hon. W. C. Houston,

Chairman Committee on Territories, Washington, D. C.

Six: In accordance with your request I hereby forward you a statement concerning the climate, products, farming lands, resources, population, etc., of Alaska, the results of my observation during my more than 35 years of residence in and correspondence with the Territory.

I went to Alaska in the spring of 1878, remained continuously in southeastern Alaska until 1888, during which time, as a missionary and explorer, I visited all parts of the Alexandrian Archipelago, traveling by canoe among those islands upward of 15,000 miles.

After an interval of nine years spent in the States, I returned to Alaska in 1897, at the time of the first great stampede into the Klondike region. For the past 16 years I have been following all the movements of the miners and prospectors into all parts of interior and southern Alaska. I have wintered at Dawson, Fairbanks, Nome, Teller, Council, Cordova, and Skagway during those 16 years, and have traveled extensively by boat and on foot in the summer and with my dog sled and on snowshoes during the winter. In each place where I have lived I have considered the climate and soll in a practical way by raising various crops in my gardens and fields and by visiting the farms and gardens in each place.

First, as regards the climate of interior Alaska. I spent three years at Fairbanks, on the Tanana. I do not recall any other years of my life in which I enjoyed the climate and surrounding conditions as much as those years spent in the Tanana. During that time the coldest weather I experienced at Fairbanks was 63° below zero, in the winter of 1905-6. The other two winters the extreme cold was 55° and 53° below zero, respectively. This extreme cold weather lasted in each case but a very short time, and during that time the air was so still, pure, and light that very little discomfort was experienced. My wife and I were out calling on our parisiners during the coldest weather of each year and did not suffer from cold. The children in each case but a very short time, and during that time the air was so still, pure, and light that very little discomfort was experienced. My wife and I were out calling on our parisiners during the coldest weather of each year and did not suffer from cold. The children in the schools at Fairbanks lost no time from their lessons on "The summer no sweeter was ever, The sunshiny woods all athrill."

"The summer no sweeter was ever,
The sunshiny woods all athrill."

The snow disappears before a warm flood of sunshine early in the latter part of April, and ordinarily there are four and a half to five months without frost. During this time there is almost unbroken sunshine. All vegetation, and especially planted crops, come on with a surprising rapidity. The fact that from the middle of May to the middle of August we have unbroken daylight and almost unbroken sunshine, with a temperature ranging as high as 92 to 93 degrees, explains the abundance and perfection of the crops of the Tanana Valley. I have successfully raised and ripened in my own garden and fields there wheat, oats, barley, potatoes, turnips, rutabagas, tomatoes, peas, radishes, lettuce, carrots, and other vegetables also. I have gathered in abundance, growing wild, red and black currants, cranberries, both low and high bush; red raspberries, strawberries, blueberries of many varieties, salmon berries, moss berries, etc. Most varieties of flowers can be grown successfully in the gardens of Fairbanks; a profusion of wild flowers of infinite variety and great beauty is found in all parts of the great Territory.

Chickens, cattle, horses, and sheep are successfully raised and bred in that region. The farmers about Fairbanks have been uniformly successfull raising the crops I have mentioned, and also timothy and blue grass. A good quality of redtop grass grows wild and is often harvested and fed to the cattle and horses. Clover has been successfully raised, but has not the endurance of other grasses.

The time at Fairbanks was too short to test the matter of apples and other fruit trees, but I have eaten good apples grown by the experiment station near Fairbanks. Strawberries, tame currants, and gooseberries have been grown with great success in that region.

The climate of the Tanana Valley, allowing the warm breezes from the Japan current to sweep up the Kuskoquim and across the Tanana Valley and the lower Yukon. Although Fairbanks is a little far there is from four to ave houris every year without frost, allowing the time for crops to mature and ripen.

The climate of the Kuskokwim Valley is more moist than that of the Tanana, especially down in that region foward Bering Sea. The upper valley of the Kuskokwim is, however, a beautiful region, with low, rolling hills, black soil, abundant vegetation—a great game region. The climate here is much drier and warmer in the summer than the lower Kuskokwim.

Kuskokwim.

The Susitna Valley, while not so large in extent as either the Tanana or the Kuskokwim, is perhaps the best climate of all. The warm breezes from the main branch of the Japan Current sweep up the valley, and its mean climate is not so cold by from 20° to 30° as that of the Tanana Valley. Many farms have been located in the country around the head of Cooks inlet. Stock can winter there comfortably without much shelter, and all the crops grown in the Northern States can be matured there.

As to the minerals of interior Aleske, the ground is not not follow.

matured there.

As to the minerals of interior Alaska, the ground is not yet fully prospected for placer mines, and new strikes of gold are being made every year, while the quartz mining done, although yet in its infancy, has demonstrated the great value of the gold-quartz leads in many places. The coal regions of the Tanana, the Matanuska, and Bering River are of great extent and very rich, while copper abounds in many places, as well as tin, antimony, quicksliver, lead, silver, and iron.

The population (white) of interior Alaska will compare well in intelligence, morals, physical strength, and character with any other population elsewhere. The people are contented and love the land of their adoption, and it has become a proverb in central Alaska that if any one of the people who have lived there for some years goes "outside," he must come back. For my part, I know of no land under the san where I would rather live, work, and die than interior Alaska.

S. HALL YOUNG,
Superintendent Presbyterian Mission in Alaska.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the Record a letter I have received from one of the rural carriers in my district, showing the cost of carrying the mails over that route.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hum-PHREY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in the Congressional Record a letter from a letter carrier, stating the cost of the service. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I apprehend that every Member on the floor of this House has similar letters on his desk this morning. I have several of them. I apprehend that that is a matter of such general infor-mation to Members of Congress, because we have been duly advised, that I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects. When the House adjourned last evening the previous question had been ordered on the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11338), and ordered on the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11338), and likewise the yeas and nays had been ordered on the Reilly amendment. The Clerk will call the roll on the Reilly amendment. Those in favor of it will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 323, nays 17, answered "present" 2, not voting 91, as follows:

Mr. Townsend with Mr. Slemp. Mr. Donohoe with Mr. Vare.

Mr. Wilson of New York with Mr. Walters.
Mr. Lieb with Mr. Lewis of Pennsylvania.
Mr. SCULLY. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. Browning, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. SCULLY. I have a general pair with the gentleman.

I voted "aye," but I wish to withdraw my vote and to be recorded "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Moon, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On this bill?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COST OF PRINTING THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARN-HART] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I want to take about five minutes of the time of the House this morning to present very briefly for your own consideration the question of the constantly growing abuse of miscellaneous printing in the Cox-GRESSIONAL RECORD. I have taken some pains to ascertain a few figures that will very much interest every Member of this House who is interested in sensible and consistent economy.

I have here a statement showing the cost of one copy of the entire issue of the daily Congressional Record and Index for various sessions of Congress, including the Sixtieth, Sixty-first, Sixty-second, and the special session of the Sixty-third. A good many of you will be amazed when I tell you that the total cost of printing the Congressional Record for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress was $271,966.14, or $10,000 for each copy of the RECORD which was allotted to you as Members and for each of the others that were issued to the Senators and to the several departments of the Government besides. In the last special session of Cougress the average cost to each Member per copy of the Congressional Record which you received was $7,082. The average cost of each copy of the Congressional Record by sessions in the Sixtieth, Sixty-first, Sixty-second, and the first or special session of the Sixty-third was $8,437 for each copy. Each gentleman has had 60 copies allotted to him, which makes a total of $50,622 that it has cost the people of the United States to furnish each Member with his allotted copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Now, I want to appeal to you, gentlemen; I firmly believe every Member of this House will agree with me that we are really running mad in this matter of filling the Congressional Record, at the expense of the public, with all sorts of communications that are sent to us to be printed to the advantage of a very few. I do not like to object to requests of Members to print, and can not be here and the other members of the Printing Committee can not be here all the time

Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. HARDY. I understood the gentleman to say that the total cost of printing the Congressional Record for the Sixtleth Congress was two hundred and some thousand dollars.

Mr. BARNHART. The cost of printing the Congressional Record for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress was

Mr. HARDY. And then I understood the gentleman to say that the cost to each Member was something over $50,000.

Mr. BARNHART. I say that the average cost for each copy that was issued was $10,000.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDY. For each daily issue?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; and you each had 60 copies. Mr. HARDY. I understood the gentleman to say that the average cost incurred for each Member was something near $60,000.

Mr. BARNHART. The average cost to each Member for each copy for that session was $10,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better revise his figures.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me that the gentleman's figures are sadly mixed in some way.

Mr. BARNHART. I will give you these figures for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, and if you want to write them down you can figure them out.

Mr. HARDY. What I want is to have you repeat that sentence where you said it cost about $60,000 for each Member.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I will. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman to say that the total cost of printing the RECORD for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress was $275,000.

Mr. BARNHART. I said that the total cost of printing the Record for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress was

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is the total cost of all the RECORDS printed in that session?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes,

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. How can the gentleman figure out, then, that the RECORD furnished each Member cost $60,000?

Mr. BARNHART. I did not say that; I said each copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD COST $10,000.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the total cost was $271, 000 and we had 393 Members in the House alone, $10,000 a copy for each Member would make the cost of the RECORD run up into the millions, whereas the gentleman says it is only $271,000. As I figure it, the total cost for each Member is about $10.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman, In that session where the total cost was $272,000, how many days was the Rec-ORD printed; how many numbers were issued?

Mr. BARNHART. There were 27,172 copies issued.

Mr. MANN. How many days was the Record printed? Mr. BARNHART. I do not have the number of days

Mr. MANN. Evidently the gentleman has confused the number of days with the number of copies.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I readily see that in the punctuation of these figures the compiler has made an error. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker——
Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. SIMS. The price that is charged by the Government Printing Office per copy is supposed to cover all the cost of printing the Record, does it not?
Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will calculate the cost by the price charged per copy, he will see that it is impossible to reach the figures presented by himself.

Mr. BARNHART. I admit that; it was a clerical mistake in punctuation by a very competent official.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly. Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman will divide the sum he has mentioned by the number of days in the session, his answer will be practically correct—$10,000 an issue.

answer will be practically correct—$10,000 an issue.

Mr. BARNHART. I will say, as I have already said, that the punctuation by the compiler is misleading. Nevertheless, the average cost of each session serial copy is $8.43.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is aiming at a real reform, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to conclude his remarks...

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to a reasonable time, but under that request he might take up the whole afternoon.

Mr. BARNHART. Say 5 minutes, Mr. MANN. Make it 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BARNHART. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better extend his remarks in the Record and get it right. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. The subscription price for the Record is $8 for a long session and $3 for a short session. The Government furnishes the RECORD to the public at cost. Is not that

Mr. BARNHART. That is the fixed price, but it is not really the cost, because, as I set forth, the cost for all of this time is $271,000 for the session. I want further to say that anyone who examines the figures, whatever the price per copy, will see that it totals nearly $300,000 for a session; and that this is an enormous sum we must all admit. Now, a large part of this cost is due, as I said in the beginning, to Members asking unanimous consent to insert all sorts of lengthy communications, newspaper clippings, and so forth, in the Congressional RECORD, which very few people take time to read.
Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARNHART. With pleasure.

Mr. FINLEY. I want to ask my friend, chairman of the Committee on Printing, if it is not a fact that the average cost of each copy, of a single copy of the RECORD, is about 5½ cents?

Mr. BARNHART. No; it is about 8½ cents.

Mr. FINLEY. Does that include sending it through the mails from the Government Printing Office?

Mr. BARNHART. That is the price given me by an attaché of the Government Printing Office, and I of course presume that it is correct.

Mr. FINLEY. Then the cost of the RECORD would be the number of single copies received by each Member of Congress in a session, multiplied by 8½ cents?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not understand.

Mr. FINLEY. If we have the number of single copies at Si cents

Mr. BARNHART. If you multiply that by 60, you would have the price per day per Member.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I am yielding to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Then the total number of copies received in a day, during the session or term of Congress, multiplied by S₂ cents, would be the cost for the Congressional Record going to each Member of Congress. There is no doubt about that. I want to ask this further question: That does not include all of the cost to the Government for the printing and distribution of this Congressional Record. The Record goes through the mail?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes; it is franked through.

Mr. FINLEY. And whatever the cost per pound for sending the RECORD through the mail must be added to this sum?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly. I was just coming to that. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand all the gentleman has said, owing to the confusion on the floor. Is he objecting to the insertion of extraneous matter in the RECORD?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes and no-depending on what may be considered extraneous matter. I believe that any articles and statements that directly pertain to the public welfare or the subject under consideration should be admitted to the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

Mr. LANGLEY. As I remember it, in the Sixty-second Congress, with the gentleman's consent, I asked and obtained unanimous consent that his eulogy on a dog be inserted in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; I remember that.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman regard that as extraneous matter?

Mr. BARNHART. I do; but inasmuch as I was new on my job then and it was my dog, and he was dead, I did not have the heart to object.

eart to object. [Laughter.]
Mr. LANGLEY. I had forgotten whether it was the gentleman's dog or somebody else's dog, or whether the dog was dead or living [laughter], but I regarded it as a splendid piece of English and as embodying a noble sentiment, and I thought it would improve the RECORD. That was why I made the request.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I ask for information. Is not the subscription price for the RECORD $8 for the long session and $4 for the short session

Mr. BARNHART. That is the fixed, running price.

Mr. SIMS. That is, $12 for the two sessions?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.
Mr. SIMS. Each Member having 60 copies, 12 times 60 would be $720, if the Member got them all, but the fact is that we get only one copy each, and the rest are sent to our constituents at their urgent request. It used to be, as far as my experience has gone, when I first came to Congress, and the Republicans were in power, that nobody seemed to want the Record, but since the Democrats came in and we are preaching civic righteousness, everybody wants it. I send out my whole quota on pressing requests, and to say that each Member gets this number is liable to mislead the public.

Mr. BARNHART. My experience was, before I was a Member of this body, that when the Congressional Record came to my newspaper office for years and years—and it was the experience of other newspaper offices, as I very well know—before the days when we had steam heat and electric lights, and so forth, we used the Congressional Record without opening them for kindling fires and window props.

Mr. MANN. That is the case with newspapers generally, is it not?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Could the gentleman furnish the House a statement in an extension of his remarks with regard to the amount and cost of the extraneous matter that is printed in the RECORD? I think that would be very valuable, and we ought to really know what the House is doing with regard to it. I agree with the gentleman that we ought not to continue this, if it is entailing any considerable expense.

Mr. BARNHART. I will make an effort to secure that information, and put it in in connection with my remarks, but I am not sure it can be estimated.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the libraries of schools throughout the country are sending for these Congres-SIONAL RECORDS. I think I said that it cost $12 per annum, or left that inference, on subscription. Twelve dollars would be the cost for two years, or $310 a year for the whole 60 copies that each Member has the right to send out.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, hardly. It averages per serial copy each $8.43 per session, which, multiplied by 60 copies which we are allotted makes about $505.80 cost per each Member of the House per session.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no; I am talking about the session.

Mr. SIMS. I said $8 for the long session and $4 for the short session. There is only one long and one short session in any one Congress, and I used the word per annum when I meant Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman figuring on what the RECORD sells for does not show all the expense, because, as I have set forth here, the average has been 81 cents per copy.

Mr. SIMS. It is the selling price, and we pay what it costs. The Public Printer sells the RECORD for that price.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken in saying the selling price is what it costs.

Mr. SIMS. No; I did not say that; I do not know what it costs, but that is the selling price, and I take it for granted it is not sold for less than it costs.

Mr. BARNHART. I think I am prepared to show by these figures we are doing that very thing-we are selling at the average price of 6 cents and the average cost has been 8.43

Mr. SIMS. Well, I do not see why we should sell the RECORD to individuals for less than it cost.

Mr. BARNHART. Because the custom has been fixed, and that is why I am saying the abuse is growing all the time. That price was doubtless fixed at a time when the Congres-SIONAL RECORD was not filled with all sorts of unnecessary matter, but it has grown in volume and in weight and the expense of franking it and the expense of printing and the expense of paper has increased until we have advanced from 6 cents per copy per day to S¹/₂ cents per copy.

Mr. SIMS. I have no doubt of it, but I did not want it to go out that each man sent out $60,000 worth of Records each

Mr. BARNHART. I will correct that error in punctuation.
Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to ask the gentleman two simple questions. Can the gentleman tell me what it cost to print the Congressional Record the first session of the Sixtythird Congress?

Mr. BARNHART. I can.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Please give it.

Mr. BARNHART. That is the special session?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

BARNHART. Two hundred and eight thousand nine hundred and fifty-three dollars and eighty-two cents.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Now, please tell me how many copies were printed?

Mr. BARNHART. Twenty-nine thousand five hundred and ASHBROOK. I will figure out the balance myself. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman in colloquy with the gentleman from Tennessee to give the cost where persons desired to subscribe for the RECORD. I notice an advertisement in the RECORD under date of January 13, this month, and there are similar advertisements in recent Records, providing that the daily Record for the first session of the Sixty-third Congress will be furnished by mail to subscribers free of postage for $1.50 a month, payable in advance. Does not the gentleman think that is a rather belated advertisement to be appearing in the Record now; not an advertisement of what the Record will cost now, but what it will cost in advance for a session which has long since expired? Should not they bring the cost up to date?

Mr. BARNHART. I think so; and if I were the editor of the Congressional Record I should see to it-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is.

Mr. BARNHART. No; I am not editor of the Congressional RECORD.

Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. MOORE. Assuming that the Congressional Record would cost $10 per issue daily per annum-

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Does not the gentleman think it would be well

Mr. BARNHART. Well, I doubt it in its present form, because it is so voluminous very few people can take time to read it sufficiently to gather from it what they really ought to know.

Mr. MOORE. Would it not actually be a good thing for the country if it were distributed free to the average young American, so he could obtain accurate information as to the proceedings of the Congress?

Mr. BARNHART. I will say in reply to that yes and no. If the Congressional Record carried the actual proceedings of the Congress, yes. If it carried all sorts of publications, including miscellaneous observations, newspaper clippings, magazine articles, and personal opinion and personal glory communications covering as much as 59 pages, as it has in the past, I would say no, because the public would not, for it could not, read it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to announce the program for a few days. There has been a squabble going on here between the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Rules as to which should have the right of way. The Chair is going to settle it in this way: As soon as this pension matter is out of the way, he is going to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill. Then, before he recognizes anybody else to make that motion as to any other appropriation bill, he is going to recognize the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the following Members:

Mr. McClellan, for five days, on account of death of a

Mr. TALCOTT of New York, for three days, on account of imortant business

Mr. BRUCKNER, for three or four days, on account of important

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Greene of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Darius E. White, H. R. 22398, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE LATE JOHN T. CHANCEY.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report,

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 388.

Resolved. That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of John T. Chancey, an employee of the House for nearly 58

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the Speaker appoint a committee of seven Members to attend the funeral services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the committee

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement the Speaker has just made, that the immigration bill, reported under special rule from the Committee on Rules, will probably be before the House early next week, immediately following the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say, for the informa-tion of the House, whether Monday next will likely be devoted to District business?

Mr. SHEPLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I understand from the chairman of the District Committee that he has several bills that will probably take most of that day, and that he will insist on the day being set apart for District matters

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say that the immigration bill will be reached late on Tuesday or early Thursday morning. I wanted the Members to know that, so that they may be here to vote. It will be up about the middle of next week under a special rule.

Mr. MOORE. It will not come up to-day?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not until about the middle of next week. The SPEAKER. The pension bill comes first, and, as stated by the Chair, the fortifications bill comes next, of course excepting on Monday, Wednesday, or Friday.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] when he expects to call up the resolution, or when he expects the resolution will be called up, making an investigation of the strike situation in Colorado and Michigan?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the gentleman, so far as my information goes, that I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] will report that resolution from the committee, so as to get it in about the same time that this other resolution I referred to is considered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It will not be called up until some time about the middle of next week?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is my estimate. Mr. BURNETT. I want to ask if this fortifications bill should be gotten through some time Tuesday

Mr. HARDWICK. Then we could get up this matter that PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 11269, on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. You have to go into Committee of the Whole

Mr. RUSSELL. I was going to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. It is a bad practice, and I think it will take longer than by having it first considered in Committee of the

Mr. RUSSELL. Let us try it that way. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rus-SELL] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to discuss this bill for about 30 minutes. I do not want to object to its consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole if I can reach some sort of an agreement whereby I can secure the 30 minutes I desire.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentle-man from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] also desires a short time in which to speak. I would ask him how much time he desires?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that 30 minutes be allowed in debate to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and 25 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missonri [Mr. Rus-SELL | asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and he couples with that the request that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] shall have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] 25 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri box many pendented by dispose of dispose of the contract to dispose of the contract of the sion bills are on the calendar that he expects to dispose of to-day?

Mr. RUSSELL. There are two House bills and three Senate bills.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman realizes, I think, that he would make greater progress by going into Committee of the Whole on this bill. I think the gentleman will save time by considering the bill in Committee of the Whole rather than by consid-

mr. RUSSELL. I am led to believe that this method will involve less debate. On the other bills, I think, there will be no objection and no requests for general debate. That being true, I think this would expedite the matter.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, that the gentleman shall restrict the time to closing debate in Committee of the Whole, but I do not think it is good practice to pass these bills without first considering them in committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. But we can only consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent. I think that if anybody else wants to be heard he will be able to speak under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object as to this bill, but I doubt the propriety of considering it in that way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Russell]? [After a pause.] -The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the bill by title, to begin with. It has not been reported.

The Clerk read the bill by title, as follows.

A bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sallors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rus-SELL] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] now ready to take his 30 minutes of time?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, it is my idea that I will not take up anything like 30 minutes of your time. I think I can say what I have to say in less than 30 minutes.

I want to preface my remarks by saying this, that this short speech that I am going to make is not so much addressed to the question of pensions as it is to the question of the manner in which pensions of this kind afford relief to the old soldiers of the Union. The question as to whether you will pension the soldiers is settled and past and gone, and it is the opinion of all parts of the country and all classes of men that a just and equitable pension system for the old soldiers should be constantly upon the statute books,

But I want to talk to you about what you have been talking about to some of the balance of us in the last few days. I want to talk to you about the spoils system. Do I make myself clear? The spoils system, as applied to assistant postmasters and fourth-class postmasters, is that you do not give a job according to the merit of the applicant, but according to the amount of political influence the applicant can bring to bear. Do I make myself clear? That is the spoils system, as applied to giving jobs to those who want to work for the Government of the United States.

You say you do not wish to apply the spoils system to a fourth-class postmaster, to an assistant postmaster, or to other employees of the Government. I ask you, do you think it is fair to apply this spoils system to the old soldiers who fought so nobly to preserve the Union? If my information is correct, we have several hundred thousand names on the pension roll-810,000, I am told. I believe there are 184 who are provided for in this bill. Then there are some 809,800 who are not embraced in the provisions of this bill. The objection I have, and always have had, to private pension bills is that it is a species of favoritism. Out of more than 800,000 pensioners you take 180 or 130, or whatever number are included in the private bill, and you give them an increase. Now, let us see. You not only discriminate against the 809,000 whom you leave out of this bill, but you practice discrimination against persons within this bill.

Let us see. If you will turn to the report, on page 24, you will find the report on H. R. 4951, William A. Yantis, as follows:

H. R. 4951. William A. Yantis, aged 78 years, served as a musician in band, First Regiment Kentucky Infantry, from October 8, 1861, to March 5, 1862 (4 months and 28 days); post office Paragould, Green County, Ark. He is now a pensioner under the act of May 11, 1912, at $21 per month for age and length of service; was formerly pensioned under the act of February 6, 1907, at $20 per month, and under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month, for total inability to earn a support by manual labor. His claim under the general law was rejected September 9, 1897, on the ground he was unable to show by satisfactory testimony that alleged disease of kidneys and rheumatism were contracted in service. His claim for total disability under act of May 11, 1912, was rejected April 12, 1913, on the ground of his inability to demonstrate that his present physical condition was due to his military service. Medical testimony filed in this action shows the applicant in a helpless condition by reason of old age and loss of vision; that his income consists of rent of store room at $20 per month, which is supplemented by the sworn statement of the telaimant, that he has lost his eyesight, and that he owns a small cotage and one brick storeroom, 15 feet wide by 40 feet long, of the value of $1,500, and his annual income from all sources is $140.

From the fact this man is well advanced in years and is blind, it is believed his pension should be increased to $50 per month, and such action is recommended.

Will the gentleman permit an interrup-Mr. ANSBERRY.

Mr. DIES. Not for the present. I am going to yield liberally in a few moments, but I want to compare this case with another one

Mr. ANSBERRY. I want to ask you if the case you refer to is that of William A. Yantis, H. R. 4951.?

Mr. DIES. Yes. The next case, on page 26, is H. R. 5029, James W. Barnes. He is 78 years old, the same age as the other one, and he served 4 months and 15 days. The other man served 4 months and 28 days. Barnes is now getting a pension of $21 per month.

Dr. U. S. Ammerman testifies that claimant is entirely helpless with general paralysis.

Other testimony goes to show that claimant has no property and no income but his pension.

An increase to $30 per month is recommended.

Now, here are two paralytics. One of them served 4 months and 28 days, and the other served 4 months and 15 days. They are both hopeless invalids from paralysis. So far as the record shows, one was a musician and served in the Army as such, and the other was a private soldier and did service in the Army as such. One of them gets an increase to $50, and the other gets an increase to $30 in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the one who gets $50 has some income, and the one who gets $30 does not appear to have any.

Mr. DIES. The one who gets the increase to $50 has a cottage and a store from which he get an income of $240 a year. Now, if there is such discrimination between two of the favorites among the 184 in this bill who are selected out of 810,000, what must be the discrimination as against the 809,000 who are left out entirely?

My contention has been to make a general law and apply it to all the old soldiers alike. Why do you pick out William Yantis, who served 4 months and 28 days, and give him $50 a month because he is a hopeless invalid, when you leave thousands upon thousands of other hopeless invalids, who are in a worse condition physically and financially than William Yantis, who are drawing $20 and $21 per month? Take the case at

H. R. 6271. Hiram Lyons, aged 69 years, served as a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, from March 9, 1862, to July 21, 1865 (3 years, 4 months. and 13 days), and is now a pensioner under the act of May 11, 1912, at $19 per month.

month.

He was formerly pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month, for rheumatism, disease of eyes, and general debility.

He was formerly pensioned under the act of July 14, 1862, at $2 per month for gunshot wound of neck. Address, Letart, W. Va.

Board of surgeons, August 17, 1904, found disease of eyes, rheumatism, lumbago, and injury to right hand. Dr. W. A. Adams testifies that the applicant has asthma, chronic gastritis, gunshot wound of neck, is almost blind, in a helpless condition, and requires some one to nurse him all the time.

The claimant is poor and his income is his pension.

An increase to $36 per month is recommended.

Read in connection with that the case at page 35 of Peter Dowdle:

H.R. 6504. Peter Dowdle, aged 64 years, served as a private in Company F, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Infantry, from August 23, 1864, to June 29, 1865 (10 months and 7 days). Post-office address, Syracuse, N. Y.

Peter Dowdle is increased to $40 per month.

You will see that one is increased to $40 a month and the other to $36 a month. One is 69 years old and the other is 64 years old, and the 64-year-old man gets the biggest pension. One served 3 years and 4 months, the other served 10 months and 7 days, and the greatest increase is given to the man who served the shortest length of time.

Turn to pages 49 and 50 and you will find a man 72 years old who served 2 years and 9 months and his pension is increased to $40. On the same page William Thornburg, 74 years old, has his pension increased to $50 per month. He served 4 months and 8 days. In other words, the man who served 2 years and 9 months gets $40 a month, and the man who served 4 months and 8 days gets $50. In the case of the man who only gets $40, the testimony in this case shows that he is blind and compelled to feel his way along the streets. He is blind, he served nearly 3 years in the war, he has no income but his pension, and you give him $40 a month; and to the man who served only a few months and a few days you give $50 a month.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], when the Sherwood pension bill was under consideration, suggested that if you wanted to remove the evils of the pension system and relieve certain distressing cases, you ought to enact into law the rules of the Pension Committee and let the Pension Commissioner take the money and relieve these indigent old men whose cases appeal to our sense of humanity. Suppose you did; suppose you took the case of every man who served a certain length of time, was of a certain age, and had lost the God-given power of vision, and gave him $50 a month. But, instead of that, you leave thousands and countless thousands of old Federal soldiers. as tried and true as William Yantis was, as dependent as William Yantis, who served longer in defense of the country than William Yantis did—countless thousands who are not in this bill, and what must they say of you who picked out William Yantis and left that great number in the same condition that he was, and entitled to receive relief from the Gov-

Of course I understand my brethren are unconscious of the effect that this discrimination is likely to have upon the minds of the old soldiers who are left out. I believe, my brethren, if you knew how the old soldiers felt about it you would hasten to make a general law rather than to hold these old heroes up who are looking for justice at the hands of the Government. I am afraid the fact is that when you single out 184 and give them an increase, the other 809,000 are more or less calculated to be your political friends in the hope that they may draw a lucky prize in the next lottery.

Another thing I want to say is that what I am saying is in a spirit of friendliness to my colleagues in Congress. A moment ago we voted to give the city carriers accident and life insurance at the expense of the people. We voted to give the rural carriers accident and life insurance at the expense of the taxpayers of this Nation. Why should not you give the old soldier life insurance and accident insurance as well as the politicians and job holders in the country?

Here is an old man who is getting $20 a month, who faced the leaden hail at Gettysburg and Chancellorsville, who served and saved the Republic. He is helpless and dependent. Why do you tax his pitiful $20 a month to provide life and accident insurance for the city mail clerk who gets $1,200 a year, or the rural carrier who gets $1,100 a year?

The rural carrier, and I speak of him because he is a political influence in my district that is potential and I am his friend upon all fair measures, but when my conscience tells me it is not right to tax the patrons to whom he delivers the mail in order to give him a gratuity out of the Treasury of this Government, I hope I am ready to quit Congress when I vote to tax the man who pays his salary in order to give him accident and life insurance.

Think of it! I know why you vote to give this gratuity to these carriers. It is because the carriers have got their eyes on you, and the old farmer who pays the tax for the salary of the carrier is not looking at you. I wish some man would challenge me before an intelligent audience anywhere in this land on the question of insuring the lives of the carriers and the clerks at the peoples' expense. I would like to ask the old farmer or the old laborer who is auxious to have just that kind of a job that the carriers have got, who is auxious to have his son secure that kind of employment because it pays from two to four times as much as the farmer can make—I would like to ask him if he wants his taxes increased, if he wants the added burden put upon him in order that we may give these mail clerks life and accident insurance at the public expense.

You know this thing of voting appropriations to make fair weather with those whose lips inclose the public teat could be carried far enough, that the man upon whose back the saddle is pinching would rise and smite his oppressor. Why give a pension to an officeholder, a man who gets a salary twice as large as he could get, probably, in private employment? Take the rural carriers; they want the jobs, and they are the best-paid men in their communities. They make twice and five times as much as the farmer to whom they deliver mail. tell me that this farmer ought to be taxed to pay his insurance. Who pays the farmer's insurance? If he starts to town on a load of hay and falls off and kills himself, are you willing to tax the Government to pay his helpless children and wife? he is sowing wheat in the spring and he falls off and the disk disembowles him and kills him and leaves his family and children in want, are you willing to tax the Government, are you willing to tax the rural carriers and the other taxpayers of the country to pay a pension to his helpless ones? If not. then I ask you to stop taxing the farmer to pay a pension or a gratuity of any kind to the fortunate brother who succeeded in getting the job.
Mr. CALLAWAY.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman not think if the farmer was as well organized as the rural carrier is that this Congress would pay him just the same as they pay the rural carrier?

Mr. DIES. If the farmer was as well organized as the rural carriers are and had his eye on this Congress, like the rural carrier, by the eternal gods we would move out and turn this Hall into a farmers' union meeting place in 15 minutes. We would give him the clock and the flags over the Speaker's chair and the picture of George Washington and a pension to the fourth generation. But we are taxing them to-day to give a gratuity to carriers, because the carriers have their eyes on us, and the old farmer plowing with his mule in the field is depending on you to be true to your trust and to protect his interests. The only remedy I know is that he will have to quit trusting you.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the genleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman not think that when this road bill gets through the farmer is liable to wake up, because he is getting his hand in?

Mr. DIES. If the old farmer ever does succeed in getting a little piece of Government road through his district, you will have to have a road plank in your platform as long as the Appian Way to beat the fellow who promises most in the shape of appropriations.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIES. How much more time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McGillicuppy). Seven

I yield only for a moment.

Mr. TAGGART. I suppose his occasional 2-cent stamp is what you have reference to as the heavy tax that is placed

Oh, the farmer's 2-cent stamp! Yes; he probably pays as much as the gentleman does on the hats and shoes and coats and clothes that he wears.

Mr. TAGGART. He does not now.

There is no tax on the clothes, eh? Then he pays out on his tobacco and his snuff and his food and clothing the same as the gentleman does; and you want to tax it out of him to give it to his more fortunate brother who has succeeded in getting a job, but when we sought to lift this burden from this old farmer, when we asked you to spare him this new load of taxation for the benefit of the office-holding class, the favored one, we got 17 votes! Where were the friends of the old farmer then? When you get back home you will bleed and die for him; you will tell him how much you have struggled and how your heart has beat with undying affection for the poor, bent form of the farmer, who works a whole year and makes a hundred dollars. You will not tell him that you taxed his hundred dollars to fatten the $1,200 clerk that got the job to be paid out of his taxes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES.

Mr. QUIN. Did the gentleman know that they have two or three bills before the Committee on Military Affairs to put all these old Federal officers, 15,000 of them, on a pension roll-to do away with the pension they get and give them the salaries they drew at the close of the war?

Mr. DIES. Why not? Why not? The people who pay the taxes are not looking. They are farming; they are in the bowels of the earth digging coal; they are attending to their daily occupations. Why not give it to the old officeholders and the old soldiers and the young carriers and the young clerks?

Give it to anybody who is looking at you and take it from everybody who is attending to their own business and not looking at you. We got a lonesome 17

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIES. I can not yield for the moment, but I will pres-I do not know how long I will stay here as a Member of Congress. I do not know whether after I get away from here any of my kin will ever sit in this Chamber, but if they should in the distant years to come, when every laborer in this country, like every laborer in Europe, has got a soldier or pensioner on his back and is fleeing to some other land to get away from militarism and pension paying, I hope, in turning over from militarism and pension paying, I nope, in turning over the musty pages of the Congressional Record, he will find the names of Borchers, Buchanan of Texas, Claypool, Cline, Dies, Elder, Garner, Garrett of Texas, Gillett, Helm, Morri-son, Page of North Carolina, Quin, Smith of Texas, Steven. of Minnesota, Vaughan, and Witherspoon. It is a lonesome and ragged remnant, and when the old farmer and his friends hereafter in times to come shall totter along with a pensioner on his back and a soldier astride his neck, I want him to read the roll of the ragged remnant of his friends who voted not to take from his scanty earnings to give to the more plentifully paid officeholders. Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I took it from the first part of the gentleman's speech that he was complaining because there were not more pensions in this bill. [Laughter.] I take it from the latter part of his speech that he does not want any. Which horn of the dilemma really does the gentleman take

Mr. DIES. If my friend had been as astute as he is assiduous in voting pensions he would have known that my objection to these 184 is that they are no more worthy of favor than the other 809,000 who fought with equal valor to preserve the Union, but they have only succeeded in getting in this list of 184 because some Congressman favors their "il.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then the gentleman favors putting the others in. Do I understand so? Mr. DIES. No.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course not.

Mr. DIES. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman just takes these

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman assumes the farmer pays these pensions by a tax imposed upon the farmer.

Mr. DIES. They pay their part. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Would not the gentleman be good enough to say some kind words about the mill workers and the mine workers, who stand in the same position?

Mr. DIES. Not having found the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in these seventeen, I did not suppose the gentleman cared what happened to the mill and mine workers. [Laughter and applause.] If the gentleman will join me in protesting against taxing the farmers of my district to pay the pensions to officeholders in this country, I will join the gentleman in protesting against taxing the men in the gentleman's district who are working in the mills and digging coal out of the bowels of the earth at a low wage, while the gentleman is here voting to increase their burdens by giving life and accident insurance to certain employees of the Government.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman join in protecting the mill workers!

Mr. DIES. Well, myself and 16 brethren are hardly large enough army to protect anybody at this juncture of the

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Thank the Lord.

Mr. DIES. Yes; praise the Lord; and I am sorry the 90,000 whom you placed upon the pension roll yesterday will be reaching their hands to 410.000 other civil-service employees and saying: "Come over on the sunny side of life; we know there is plenty of room for everybody; get a pension and be happy. Just write a few letters to your Congressman. Scare him up a little and he will vote you a pension."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, under the order made by unanimous consent, 25 minutes was granted to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tribble].

Mr. Tribble. Mr. Speaker, in part the Committee on Pensions has kept faith with the Members in their agreement after the passage of the Sherwood bill. But this bill indicates that the committee is not going to keep faith with its agreement. Of course, they are not bound by the statements they made, but we expect them to keep faith.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to take up a few of the first cases that appear in this bill. I am not going to undertake to go through the bill, but will take up just a few of the first. I would like to ask the chairman a few questions.

Mr. RUSSELL. If I can answer the gentleman, I will do so.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to know how many special pensions there were in the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. There were 9.649. Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, in the Sixty-second Congress, after the fight on special pensions, in which I took a part, how many special pension bills got through?

Mr. RUSSELL. There were 6,350.

Mr. TRIBBLE. In the Sixty-second Congress? Mr. RUSSELL. In the Sixty-second Congress

Mr. TRIBBLE. What is the prospect as to the Sixty-third

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, the chairman of the committee has said to me that he did not believe the committee would ask the Congress to pass over 2,500 cases. Of course, I can not say that. Gen. Sherwood made the statement to me that there was a reduction all the time. Since the Sherwood bill has passed there is no such demand for them or no such necessity for them.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The committee stated it would not bring bills in this House increasing pensions unless the pensioner needed a nurse; unless the pensioner was in such a condition that the attention of a nurse was demanded they would not increase these pensions.

Now, let us take up the first case here. It shows that they have increased the pension to $40 a month, when there is not one scintilla of evidence showing where this party needed a

We will take up the third case. They have increased this pension, and I desire to call your especial attention to it. Here is an increase where a party has property worth $1,200. She is not a war widow. This party came before this Congress in 1890 and before the Pension Bureau and asked for a pension for eight children. To show the unreasonableness of the demands of these pensioners, I mention this. And yet this committee, in the face of the demand, in face of the fact that she is not a war widow and that she is not entitled to recover under the laws of the United States, not entitled under the Sherwood bill or any other law or precedent, increases her pension.

I will take up the case H. R. 1080. You pension the child of a soldier who is 32 years of age. This child was born to this soldier when the soldier was 54 years of age. I have frequently stated in this House that the United States Government certainly discharges its full duty when it pensions the soldiers and the widows of soldiers. Are we to be burdened now and eternally with the children and the grandchildren of the soldiers? I admit that this child, as he is called in this report, who is 32 years of age, is in a needy condition, as shown by the record; but, Mr. Chairman, the Government is not an eleemosynary institution in which to support these children of soldiers who are dependent and poor and can not support them-selves by giving them pensions. If the Government is to support them let us provide institutions in which to place them and all other dependent and helpless citizens, and not burden all the people of the United States to pension them because they are poor or in a helpless condition. It is the duty of the States and of the communities in which they live to take care of them.

Mr. Chairman, I turn over to the case H. R. 1457. Here is another case where the party is not a war widow, where the party is simply pensioned because she is in a needy condition. I could go on through this report and expose all these cases, but I call attention to the first ones appearing, in order that I may show this House that the committee has not kept faith

I turn to page 61 and find that this committe has increased the pension of a negro soldier from $20 to $40 a month. There is no evidence here that that man needs a nurse. Where are the war widows in this bill who are receiving $12 a month? What will they say when they see this negro soldier is to receive $40 a month, when they, the widows who went through the horrors of the Civil War, stayed at home and fought the battle at home when their husbands were gone, are getting only $12 a month?

I simply call attention to these things, Mr. Chairman, in order to show the drift of this committee and in order that it may

Mr. Chairman, the pension burden is not the only burden the eople of the United States have to bear-not by any means. There is another burden that is growing, and growing rapidly; and if anything could be more unjust than some pension burdens are it is the Army and Navy burdens. Over 70 per cent of the taxes of the United States go to war, embracing the Navy and the Army and pensions. I desire to call the attention of this House to the way some of it is going.

Recently Capt. Potts was taken out of the naval service by the plucking board. Capt. Potts was aid to the Secretary—a very responsible position. In every step of his career his record is perfect. He was in line of promotion to rear admiral. The Secretary decided that he needed more sea service. The plucking board, in order to get rid of him and promote hundreds of others in line, took him out of the service and retired him to private life on a salary of $4,125, which the Government must pay him all his life, he giving nothing in return for this great salary.

Now, is there a man on the floor of this House who will rise in his place and tell me that Capt. Potts is not capable of filling some useful position in the Navy? Will anybody tell me that Capt. Potts would not have been a useful officer if he had been allowed to go up as he should have been allowed to go on in the service? Instead of keeping him in the service, he now renders no service to the people who pay his salary to do nothing for the remainder of his life.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that, from my knowledge of the work of Capt. Potts, he is an excellent officer, and there are many places that he could fill to great advantage. I know it in connection with his construction work in the navy yard. He is a very able officer.

Mr. TRIBBLE. He was in line for promotion to rear admiral. The Secretary decided to require a new more months of experience on sea before giving him this rank. He passed his examination and lacked only sea service. The plucking board retired him—took him out of the service into private life. The Government now pays him a salary of $4,125 per annum. The position he held is now filled by another officer drawing a salary of over $5,000. Granting for the sake of argument that Capt. Potts should not have been promoted, then why not retain him where he was giving such eminent satisfaction or give him some other position he could fill?

Are not the rights of the taxpayers to be considered? Does the Navy Department think taxes grow on trees? Any commercial business house doing business in this manner would promptly become bankrupt.

Let me call your attention to this fact, that the same plucking board that retired Capt. Potts also retired Capt. Chambers on a salary of $4,125. Listen: He is 45 years old, and one of the very best aviators. He had charge of the aviation station of the Government, and the Government is not only entitled to his expert knowledge, but needs him very badly for this position. Still he is plucked to satisfy the demands of the plucking board. He is retired and another officer is promoted and takes the salary of $5,000.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, are the people not to be considered by the department? I am not through with this plucking board yet. will never get through with it on the floor of this House until it is abolished. I call attention to another man that the plucking board recently plucked—Commander Norton. Norton was relieved on a salary of $4,000 per annum. He was relieved, gentlemen, because he was of small stature-too small to be a commander. Therefore he is plucked by the retirement board, and the people of the country are burdened with another salary during his natural life, and a new officer is appointed to fill his place in the torpedo station at a salary of $5,000. Why not leave him at that torpedo station? He was the best man in the United States for it. I challenge the department to produce another man in the United States who would fill that position as well as Capt. Norton.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes. Mr. SLOAN. Is there any particular significance in the selection for plucking of those two particularly named officers that the gentleman complains about?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I can not answer that question. I am simply stating facts.

Now I will take up the fourth man whom they plucked cently. I want to be fair with this House, and I want to be fair with the Navy, and, above all, I want to be fair with the taxpayers of the country and with the people of my district. The next man is Capt. Stone. He was retired at a salary of $3,000. The voice of calumny never touched his honorable and efficient record from the beginning of it until the present time. His record at the Navy Department is flawless; and yet he is retired to private life in the middle of his career, to make place for the promotion of some one else. I challenge the Navy Department to show that he is not eminently qualified to remain in charge of the Naval Militia or in some other position in the Navy. Indeed, I challenge the Navy Department to produce Navy. Indeed, I charleage the Navy Department to produce another man who is more capable of taking charge of the Naval Militia than Commander Stone, retired.

Mr. HENSLEY. Is the gentleman from Georgia in a position to state how much money is being paid by the Federal Government to retired naval officers residing here in Washington?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I wish the gentleman would state it if he can.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Three million dollars.

Mr. HENSLEY. And we are paying something over $1,000,000 to retired rear admirals here in Washington. Does the gentleman realize that?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman from Mississippi, Judge Witherspoon, says over $3,000,000 is being paid to retired officers residing in and near Washington. He is correct, because he is well informed on the Navy and one man in this House who always votes right. May his tribe increase.

These officers are capable and competent men. taken from the service to make places for others, and no man can come upon the floor of this House and defend the plucking board's action in retiring them. Then, why let this condition continue? I have introduced here year after year a bill to abolish the plucking board. I have never had a hearing before the Naval Committee, much less a favorable report. Last year

I called attention to the fact-and I renew the statement here to-day-that the plucking board retired a man by the name of Lieut. Walker, who was 29 years of age. If he lives his three score years and ten he will be on the pay roll of the United States Government 40 years at a salary of $3,000 per annum. I challenged the Navy Department then, and I challenge them again, to come on the floor of this House through their mouthpiece and tell this House what was the matter with Lieut.

I submit to all fair-minded men if this is just treatment to the man who toils for his bread to have to contribute to this Forty years rendering no service, yet drawing officer's Words are not strong enough to properly denounce such

Mr. HOWARD. What about Lieut. Commander Burt, of Georgia, who was plucked?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will yield to the gentleman to state.
Mr. HOWARD. A more outrageous case is not on the record. Lieut. Commander Charles P. Burt, of Georgia, was wrongfully charged by certain parties with owing some debts that he had not paid. After he was dismissed for the nonpayment of debts that were presumed to be due and President Taft had signed the order dismissing him from the service, he found out that he had signed this order upon misrepresentation of the facts; that Lieut. Commander Burt did not owe any debts, and he rescinded his order and reinstated Mr. Burt in the service. But the swivel-chair admiralty was after Burt, so when the pluck-ing board met less than five months after the President of the United States had put Mr. Burt back into the service, the plucking board plucked him for no other reason under the sun than that he had appealed to the President of the United States to right a wrong that had been done him. There was not a more competent officer in the Navy in his rank than Mr. Burt. There was no blemish on his record, and a finer physical specimen is hardly to be found in the American Navy, or a more competent and capable naval officer than Lieut. Commander Burt. He is to-day 34 years old, and this Government in the course of probably 30 years will pay him in the neighborhood of $90,000 or $100,000. There is one of the outrages of your plucking board.

Mr. HENSLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he can state about what expense the Government is put to to educate a young man and start him off in

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; I can answer that. It costs the United States Government $18,000 to educate an officer at the Naval

Mr. HENSLEY. Something beyond that. Mr. TRIBBLE. I contend that after a man is educated by the Government the Government is entitled to his services. This is an enormous amount to invest in a young man and then discharge him, and that has been done in the case of hundreds of officers, some of them young men under 30 years of age, men of intelligence and ability, anxious to serve their Government, retired from the service by the plucking board for no other purpose than to promote other officers.

In further answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] I say that this system of paying $18,000 to educate a man to come into the service, thus securing the very best education the world affords, and then giving him a salary of $3,000 or $4,000 a year, and then taking him out of the service without cause and continuing his pay for life, is not only preposterous but it is outrageous on the taxpayers of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that the people who pay the taxes should receive the benefits from the Government as well as the men who serve in the Army and the Navy. Let us spend some of the money for the farmer. We have reached the stage in this country, and every man on the floor of the House knows it, when we must do something for the farmer. One of the things we should do for him is to give him better roads. I hold in my hand a bill I recently introduced, which carries the same amount we passed at the last session, $20,000,000 a year, for rural post roads. That sounds like a large amount of money, but, gentlemen, how does it sound by the side of $185,000,000 for pensions 50 years after the war, $145,000,000 appropriated for the Navy, and $100,-000,000 for the Army? Yet we are doing nothing for the roads of the farmer and complaining that $20,000,000 a year for the construction of roads for all of the United States is too much.

I provide in this bill that the pro rata part of each State shall be turned over to the governor of the State, and the governor in turn shall deliver the pro rata part to the counties or subdivisions of the State, with the direction that it shall be spent on the public roads, on the rural post roads, the States having complete control of the fund, thus preventing the Federal authorities from entering the States to construct roads.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. In making your figures I think it would be perhaps fairer to say that out of the appropriations last year there were $355,000,000, in round numbers, appropriated for the military arm of the Government.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I thank the gentleman.
Mr. HAMLIN. And that does not include pensions.
Mr. TRIBBLE. My bill removes the objection to Federal supervision of roads and maintains the State rights principles. Each county will receive the fund, and the officials of such county will see that the money is properly applied on the rural post roads. I insert part of the bill:

That such payments shall be made to the governors of the respective States by the Treasurer of United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Secretary of Agriculture. The governor of the respective State shall pay to the respective counties or subdivisions of the State the amount which each county or subdivision is entitled to receive, as shown by the governor's report approved by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That all funds received by the States under the provisions of this act shall be applied to the construction and improvement of rural post roads.

Mr. SIAVDENN L. Treasure like to call the governors if he

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has introduced any bill or taken any practical steps toward curing the evils in the Navy Department that he has spoken of?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; each Congress I have introduced a bill trying to abolish the plucking board. That is one of the evils, and I have, in my service on the Naval Committee, contested every appropriation that has been brought on the floor of this House that I thought was unjust and unfair.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If a limit was put upon the amount of money appropriated to pay the salaries of retired officers, does not the gentleman think that that would interfere with the activities of the plucking board?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; I think it would put an end to the plucking board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the gentleman will pardon me. will he not allow us to begin the reading of the bill and make his speech under the five-minute rule?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not want to make two five-minute speeches.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not going to object to the request of the gentleman, but I thought we might expedite the passage of the bill by proceeding in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of discussing these pension bills now before the House, but am prompted to make a few observations by the apparently hostile attitude of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tribble]. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that it is the settled policy of this Government that we should take care of the soldiers of the Republic, their widows, and their orphans. No other policy would be worthy of the char-acter of the American people. And we should not do this grudgingly, but from the heart, out of an abundance with which we have been blessed as has no other country in all the history

Acting in harmony with this settled policy, a policy that has been approved by the wisdom and patriotism of all sections of the country, a committee of the House has looked into these cases, found them worthy and deserving, and recommended relief. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] oppose this action not so much in words as in spirit, and in doing so, Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded that they are speaking out of the tomb of a day and a generation that has passed. It seems to me that at a time when even those who contended in battle are meeting in friendly reunion on historic fields, we of the new generation should likewise catch the step in the triumphant march toward a perfect understanding among the several States of the Union. In this connection I could wish for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tribble] no greater fortune than that he may somehow catch the spirit of a famous son of his own home city, Henry W. Grady, orator, scholar, patriot, and seer, a new apostle of "liberty and union." As far back as 28 or 30 years ago this brilliant son of Georgia made a speech in the metropolis of the Nation which electrified the country and touched the heart of the North. With a courage and directness which carried no possibility of misunderstanding and with eloquence unsurpassed since the days of Webster and Calhoun, he brought a message to his countrymen, as I took it then and believe it now, straight from the heart of the South. His eloquent words spoken at that time are to this day memorized by the school children in my section as the highest form of patriotic expression.

I remember, among other things, he first paid this affectionate tribute to the memory of his soldier father:

In my native town of Athens is a monument that crowns its central hill—a plain white shaft. Deep cut into its shining side is a name dear to me above the names of men—that of a brave and simple man who died in brave and simple faith. Not for all the glories of New England, from Plymouth Rock all the way, would I exchange the heritage he left me in his soldier's death.

Then came this eloquent message to the whole country:

But, sir, speaking from the shadow of that memory which I honor as I do nothing else on earth, I say that the cause in which he suffered and for which he gave his life was adjudged by a higher and a fuller wisdom than his or mine, and I am glad that the Omniscient God held the balance of battle in his Almighty hand, and that human slavery was swept forever from American soil and the American Union saved from the wreck of war.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I commend this sentiment uttered by a great man born in his home city of Athens, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies]. It does seem to me that the time has now come when all of us ought to catch the spirit of those magic words to the end that the States of this Union may go forward together throughout the centuries that are to come, hand in hand, under one glorious flag, toward one common destiny. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11269. Granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of William S. Nash, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. We are now considering another raid on the Treasury of this No longer ago than this morning this House voted to country. put 100,000 of the civil-service employees of this Government under gratuities, under the list of pap suckers of this Government, and we have now before us a private pension bill that is increasing the list of pensioners of this Government. You have them from every corner. We have before the Military Affairs Committee at this time three bills, one of which asks for about $7,000.000 a year, another about $15,000,000, and another about $21,000,000, taking all of the officers of the Federal Army and giving them the amount of salaries they were drawing when the war closed, about 15,000 of them in all. That is just one list. What are we coming to? I want to say that it is time for this House to wake up. The people of this country want to know what we are doing with their money. You already have about one-tenth of the men of the United States drawing pensions from this Government. You have more than 1,000,000 people to-day with their hands in the pockets of the other 90,000,000 of people. I want to say that the citizenship of this country when pay day comes want to know where our Congressmen have been and what they have been doing with the people's money. Do you know that some-body must pay these bills? Do you know, my friends, that $385,000,000 a year is already given out of the pockets of the people into the pockets of the pensioners, and still you come here and you say, "Let us take more of the people's money and give it to somebody else to live on," simply because he is an em-ployee of the Government, simply because he has a good job that nobody can take away from him. I believe, my friends, in paying every man what his services are worth, but I can not vote away the people's money in raising pensions and in pensioning civil-service employees of the Government.

Take the very first man on the list of pensions here. He has the diarrhea. Where is there any evidence that he got the diarrhea in the Army? Perhaps he got scared in 1865 when these old rebels were shooting at him, and he has never gotten well yet. Are you going to give every man because he has the diarrhea $40 a month the remainder of his life? I want to say this pension business was never intended to give a gratuity. was intended to protect the man who was wounded and disabled in actual service of his country, but the way it is now every man who served in the War of 1861 to 1865 is a pensioner on the list of this Government, and here is Congress that will sit down and vote, and only 17 men had the courage to vote for the man who makes the wealth of this country.

man in the mine, for the man in the workshop, the man that helps defray all the expenses we are heaping upon them through these gratuities.

Thank God I am one of the 17 that voted to protect the people who work for a living. I voted for the good of the people who toil in the sun. I voted for the men who have to pay the taxes of this Government. I will vote to give the rural carriers increased pay to defray the horse and team expenses, but I will never vote to give him accident and life insurance and a pension out of the pockets of the hard-working farmers of this country. My mail carriers are all fine citizens, and would never ask me to vote them a special privilege over the people to whom they deliver the mail. The rural carriers are my friends, and not one of them ever suggested such a thing to me. They do not want us to cast a wrong vote in their favor.

I want to say we have in this Republic 400,000 men who are now knocking at the door, men who are able-bodied, men and women who are earning good salaries from this Government, and who are asking at your hands that you retire them on pensions. What will the country come to, what will the American people think if this Democratic Party—

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. QUIN. I will.
Mr. CLINE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is opposed to granting pensions by special act?

Mr. QUIN. I am; I do not believe any man ought to come in the back door when he can not get in the front door.

Mr. CLINE. Is the gentleman opposed to granting pensions under any conditions whatever?

Mr. QUIN. No, sir. You have a general act that gives every man who was disabled in the war a pension, and under that

The SPEAKER pro tempere. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I do. Mr. THOMAS.

A day or two ago I received a letter from Gen. Shelnutt, adjutant general of the United Confederate Veterans, in which he stated that they wanted a pension for Confederate soldiers. I will vote for such a bill. Will the gentle man from Mississippi vote for a bill to pension Confederate soldiers?

Mr. QUIN. I do not believe that a true Confederate soldier of this country would ever expect the Federal Government to pension him. [Applause.] I am in favor of the States of this Nation where these Confederates live paying them a pension.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman believes the adjutant general of the United Confederate Veterans is a true Confederate soldier?

Mr. QUIN. I do think he was one. Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Will he vote for such a bill?

Mr. QUIN. For the Federal Government pensioning Confederate soldiers?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; that is what I said.
Mr. QUIN. Certainly I would not. I would not trample under foot the Constitution of this Republic and the oath I took. I believe in being honest. I would resign my seat in Congress before I would be false to the Constitution and my oath of office. [Applause.]

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. CLINE. I desire to ask the gentleman if he does not know in his own State of Mississippi there is a Confederate organization now circulating literature asking Congress to pension Confederate soldiers?

Mr. QUIN. I do not know anything about that; but I do not care if every soldier in my State signed a petition, I could not vote for it. I do not believe that we ought to be false to the ideals of this great Government. I do not believe, sir, that the people of this country are going to stand for this raid upon the Treasury. I do not believe they will stand for the graft, that the manhood of this country shall be burdened and hump-backed by these pensions that are being granted daily.

Will the gentleman yield for a question. Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. QUIN. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is stated in the letter referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Thomas] that 95 per cent of Mr. CAMPBELL. Only 17 men on this floor voted for the old farmer, for the the Confederate veterans are in favor of the bill introduced by

Mr. Edwards, of Georgia, providing for a pension of $30 a month for Confederate veterans. Would the gentleman vote against 95 per cent of the men, 95 per cent of the Confederate veterans in his State?

Mr. QUIN. I will vote against 100 per cent on that proposition [applause], because I am against this system, and especially am I against the fair name of the Confederate soldier being tarnished by the corruption of Federal pensions. upon the pensions granted in this measure as the worst barnacle the people of this country have to bear. Let every State where it has its soldiers pension them-and I believe every Southern State is pensioning its soldiers. I want to say that my own father and his brothers were in that war. went and fought for their country. I want to say to you that in the very county in which I was reared two regiments were raised that went to fight for their country. But when everybody else puts his hand into the Treasury and takes it out by the bushel I am not surprised that some are petitioning Congress to give a pension to the Confederate soldiers. I am not at all surprised at that. I am not at all surprised that these 400,000 servants of the Government drawing good salaries should ask Congress to pension them: I am not at all surprised at that fact, and I want to say to the gentleman that all of the people in America, these 8,000,000 men who are farmers, men who know how to put gears on the backs of mules and horses, men who know how to tie hamestrings, men who know how to take hold of plow handles and go and plow all the day long, plow as long as they can see before they quit, men who then go to the house, feed their stock, go to bed early and get up before daylight in the morning. These are the men to whom Congress will be responsible. These hard-working men who constitute the backbone of this country are the men I think about when I vote in this House. They are the men who pay these pensions. not expect to be kept in office by a lot of people who have their hands down in the pockets of all of the other people. never vote for the Government to grant any special privileges to any citizen or class of citizens over the rest of the people. propose to vote here just as I would for my own private busi-I know what a dollar is worth.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. QUIN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if it is not a fact that the State of Mississippi pensions Confederate soldiers?

Mr. QUIN. It does; and I am proud of it. We give them a moderate monthly pension where they were good soldiers, and where they make the proper showing. Mississippi even built a home for her Confederate soldiers who are helpless, and now maintains it in respectable style for the poor, deserving old

Mr. THOMAS. Then what is the difference in principle between the State pensioning them and the Federal Government pensioning them!

Mr. QUIN. My friend, there is a big lot of difference. I love the Confederate soldier as dearly as I love the memory of my own father. I can never get my consent to be a demagogue. My conception of the Confederacy is that those gentlemen who went out and fought in that war for their homes, fought for the principles they believed right, were declared to be in insur-rection against the Government. The United States Govern-ment was fighting to maintain this Union. The soldiers who fought to overthrow this Union and to establish the Confederacy were not fighting for the Federal Government. And I will say, my friend, that the man in Congress who would vote to pension them by the Government of the United States to-day does not have a proper conception of the Constitution and his official [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words, and I ask permission to be heard for about 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have not often intruded on the House on pension day. I do not propose to discuss this I enjoyed very much the speech of my friend from Michigan [Mr. Kelley], and his quotation from the great speech of Henry W. Grady, whom I knew well and with whom I was associated at college, when he was a senio, and I was a sopho-And I reecho the sentiment contained in that most magnificent speech from my former college mate and friend.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am the son of a Confederate officer who devoted four years of his life to the defense of the Confederacy and its cause, one year of which was spent in the hardships and rigors of prison life. I have been here by the vote of my constituents 19 years consecutively, and will have served, on the 4th of March next year, 20 consecutive years. I have seen this pension roll grow and growand grow. I have seen these special bills increase and multiply. I have not voted for these increases. I have always, when the contest came, voted for meritorious pension bills; but I did not feel it to be my duty when these pension bills were up seeking to give to the Federal soldiers what the Government was disposed to give as a compensation to raise my voice against them or to engage in any concerted action against their passage. I did resist and did vote against the Sherwood bill and the other bills which proposed to give the service pensions because I believed that pension should be given to those who received injury and suffered disability by reason of the service. But my opinion could not prevail. I do not believe it to be my duty to stand here and to resist by any sort of way that may delay the passage of these measures which these gentlemen represent, and which both Democratic and Republican constituencies in the North and the East feel it their duty to present and have passed and which will pass whether I oppose them

I am not ashamed, Mr. Speaker, that I have on some of these occasions endeavored to defeat these pension bills. I am satisfied with the calm and dignified and conscientious discharge of my duty in this particular by the votes I have cast.

But I did not rise, Mr. Speaker, to say anything particularly in reference to pensions, nor would I have said anything at all but for the speech made by my friend from Texas [Mr. DIES] and by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. Quin] who has just taken his seat. I voted for the Reilly amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, and I am not ashamed that I voted for it, and thereby provided that the people employed in the service of the Government as railway postal clerks, as rural free-delivery carriers, and mail clerks should, if they were injured in that service, be paid by giving them a certain part of their salary while they were unable to work; and if they were killed in the service, the Government should give a year's compensation to those dependent upon them, as I now recollect. We have taken advanced steps, both in the way of compensating those employed in transportation, manufacturing, and other business and those employed by the Government. We pay those who are employed in building the Panama Canal when injured and provide, in some measure, for those dependent upon them. Besides, the Democratic Party, at its convention at Baltimore, in its platform adopted there, declared-

We also recommend the extension to all classes of civil-service employees the benefits of the employers' liability law.

And in casting this vote I but carried out the demands of my party and the platform upon which I was elected.

We pay those engaged in the Life-Saving Service who are injured, and, for one, I am not afraid to go to my districtmainly an agricultural district—and look my farmer friend in the face and tell him how I voted; and I have too much respect for him to call him, on this floor or elsewhere, an "Old Reuben."
The farmer in my district has got beyond the stage, if he ever occupied it at all, where anybody can refer to him as "Old Reuben"—the ignorant, unlearned farmer. [Applause.] My farmer friends in my district in Georgia resent the idea of any-one calling them unlettered, ignorant "Old Reubens." They are educated; they are intelligent citizens, and they can not be fooled by any such cheap claptrap demagoguery as we have had exhibited to-day on the floor of this House. [Applause and laughter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman

from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett] asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will look my farmer friends in the face and say, "Yes; I voted to pay compensation to a railroad clerk when he is injured in the performance of his duty.' nine cases out of ten he is the son of a farmer. I know that most of the postal clerks in the service in Georgia came from Those who are engaged in that service in my district won their places by civil-service examinations and faithful service. I will look my farmer friends in the face and say l did vote that the father or mother or wife and dependent children of the boy who by his energy and his education and ability secured a position under this Government in our Railway Mail Service, and who served it faithfully, and goes down to death or is injured shall be relieved by a generous Government. His parents shall not be left penniless and his helpless children shall not be left fatherless, but the Government will see to it that for at least 12 months his people are taken care of, just as it takes care of men who built the Panama Canal and just as it takes care of those who serve it in the Life-Saving Service, and just as it takes care, in a measure, of the people who fight the battles of the country. I can go to the farmers of my district and say: "If your boy, who is a rural free delivery carrier now, carrying the mail in the heat of summer or in the storms of winter, shall contract disease or be injured on the road, there is something before him, so that his wife and little ones, if he has any family, or his old mother or his old father, whose idol he was, shall not be left penniless, but the Government shall see to it that those dependent upon him shall be cared for, unless other provision is made." The farmers of the sixth district of Georgia can not be deceived by any such cheap claptrap demagogy, I am sure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman

from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary in-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. DONOVAN. If this bill is not finished to-day, will it continue to be the unfinished business to-morrow, or does it expire with to-day's session?

Mr. THOMAS. To-morrow is Sunday.

Mr. DONOVAN. Or the next day? The point I make is that all this talk takes away so much time from the consideration of the bill, so that the bill may not pass to-day. Does the time set apart for the consideration of this bill expire with to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it will expire to-day

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; it goes over until the next pension day, two weeks from now.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, ever since I have been a Member of this body I have tried to do what I could to advance the interests of the soldiers of the country and to get them a rate of pension sufficient to keep them from want, and I believe that the best way to do that to-day is to expedite the passage of these bills as much as possible. I only wish many more cases were included than are. At some future time I hope to be able to get the attention of the House for a brief time while I shall undertake to answer some of the utterances that I have heard here to-day and at previous sessions; but not now, for our old soldiers are dying while we talk and these bills wait for action. Let us pass them and talk afterwards. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any time now. We of the committee are anxious to get this bill through to-day, and so are all friends of the soldier. [Applause and cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the House while I say a word in reference to my vote on the Reilly amendment.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. I rise to the point of order that the gentleman is not going to speak on the measure that is before us, but on the Reilly amendment, and therefore he is out of order. I do that because I want to proceed with the particular matter that is before us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not tell what the gentleman is going to say.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] is out of order according to his opening statement.

Mr. TAGGART. I have not proceeded very far with my state-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was unable to hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. LANGLEY. Speaking to the point of order of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Donovan], Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] stated that his purpose in asking recognition was to explain his vote on the Reilly amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If that is true, the Chair thinks the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. TAGGART. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] is out of order. He did not rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Donovan] is sustained if the Chair is correctly informed as to what the gentleman from Kansas stated.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not this general debate?

Mr. TAGGART. I beg leave to say here and now that I have been recognized by the Speaker, and in my part of the country people are sometimes capable of changing their minds. [Laughter and applause.] If I proceed with this discussion and talk about anything else except pensions I shall be perfectly willing to be ruled out of order.

These trifling pension bills are in the nature of farewell offerings, not to politicians, not to those who are whole and well, but to the halt, the lame, the blind, the aged, the dependent. In many cases proof must be brought before the committee that an attendant is necessary. Proof must be brought that these people are not only destitute but that they are unable to help themselves.

I would not say a word about this pension matter if I had not received a very touching letter from the magnificent and newly built city of Atlanta, on behalf of the United Confederate Veterans. Some people love these veterans for the pensioners that they have made, but we in the western country love them because they represent the remnant of as gallant a band of men as ever carried arms in the history of the world. [Applause.] In Kansas, the home of the Union soldier, our hats are off to the men who fought gallantly in the field, and we have no bitterness or resentment to express. We have nothing but pain to give expression to when we hear harsh words from young men who were not born when those men faced each other 50 years ago. Our hats should be off to the dead and the dying. Taps are sounded every day for the gallant men of both those armies, and I do not think it behooves us here to quibble about trifles that are offered to the aged and the helpless. I can not vote for a bill to pension Confederate veterans.

If I sat in the Legislature of the good State of Texas, great as it is, an empire in itself, the wealth of it beyond all calcula-tion, I would do what the gallant adjutant of the North Georgia Brigade has asked me to do here. I would vote a pension of $30 a month out of the treasury of Texas for every man that wore the gray under the colors of Texas in the War of the Rebellion. We should not quibble about these things. We should not take up the time of the House with these things. I have seen a pension bill here carrying a few names that cost more money to pass it than it gave to the helpless people who were the beneficiaries of it. It took two whole legislative days of the Congress of the United States to debate it. Will some statistician tell me, for I have not time to figure it up, how much one of our days costs the people of this country? I begin to despair of the mathematicians of the House, after certain observations that were made on the floor of this House to-day. [Laughter.] I suppose no one will aid me in this important matter; but I have seen these bills take up more time than the appropriation was worth, and every one of the bills was finally passed by an overwhelming majority. Now, I voted for the Reilly amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, for the reason that I believe a man who stands in a mail car is rendering just as brave and just as important a service to this Government as a man who charges a battery. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes

Mr. DONOVAN. I am going to object.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not object; but I want to ask my friend question.

Mr. DONOVAN. I have objected.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know my friend is friendly to these bills. We have five bills on this calendar. If we consume this afternoon in debate, it means that these bills will be defeated.

Mr. MANN Let us pass the bills.

Mr. TAGGART. In answer to the gentleman's suggestion, let me make one observation, and then I am through.

Mr. RUSSELL. Some one has objected. I have not objected. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas, if he talked for a week, could not stop at a better place. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Celestia Watkins, former widow of William Keifer, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, to come in after the word "month," in line 16, page 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 3, to follow line 16, insert the following:

The name of William H. Franks, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this old gentleman enlisted in 1855 in a Cavalry regiment in the United States Army. He served five years on the frontier. His serv-ice carried him through the Territories of Wyoming and Utah and all that section of the country. He was engaged in keeping down Indian insurrections.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. RUSSELL. Was he a soldier? Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He was in the Army of the United States five years.

Mr. RUSSELL. He was not a soldier in the Civil War?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

Mr. RUSSELL. Allow me to suggest to my friend that the committee that has reported this bill has no jurisdiction of a pension claim of that sort.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand that; but this House has.

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly; but the gentleman ought not to take a bill, an omnibus bill, reported by one committee that has no jurisdiction of the item that he presents. This matter would be in order on the omnibus bill that may be presented by the other pension committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is in order here, there is no doubt about that,

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from South Carolina is too good a parliamentarian not to know that this is not in order on

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, gentlemen, I was proceeding to tell this man's story. I understand that the bill will not go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that re-ported this particular bill, but the House of Representatives has a right to put this man's name on the pension roll. As I stated, in 1855 he offered his services to his country, and for five years he risked his life on the frontier in the Rocky Mountain States. Now, he is more than fourscore years of age; he is going down into the valley of the shadow of death, and only yesterday I had a letter from a good man, who is not related to him by blood or by marriage, asking me to secure his pension, and if I did not do it in a short time it would not be necessary to do it at all. I can not go before the Committee on Pensions and prove that his service, rendered more than 50 years ago, is the cause of his present feeble condition and of his poverty, but you know and I know that that service is in a measure responsible, for every draft drawn on nature must some day be paid, and paid with interest. Now, gentlemen, you can take advantage of a technicality if you like. You vote $185,000,000 a year for pensions. You have not official proof as to these facts that I have stated, but down in your hearts you know that the statement I have made is I ask that this old man, in consideration of a long and faithful service, shall be placed on the pension roll at $12 a month. He will not live long to enjoy the $12, but we ought at least to build a monument to him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the question I asked the gentleman from South Carolina, I want to state that this item which he offers as an amendment to this bill I have no doubt is meritorious, but it has never been submitted to this committee, and if it had been the committee would have had no jurisdiction of it. Now, I hope the House will not put an item of that sort upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Johnson of South Carolina) there were 23 ayes and 45 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Russell, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 832, an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of James N. Culton, late of Company D, Third Regiment, and first lleutenant Company D, Seventh Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram Lay, late of Company B, National Guards East Tennessee, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L, Brown, late of Company A, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emanuel Sandusky, late of Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harvey Key, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F, Niederriter, late of Company A, Ninetyeighth Regiment Fenneylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary J, Swift, widow of Thomas W, Swift, jr., late acting ensign, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The following committee amendments were read:

The following committee amendments were read:

On page 2, line 10, strike out the figures "40" and insert the figures "30," so that it will read "$30 per month."

In page 2, strike out libes 12 to 15, which read as follows:

"The name of Harvey Key, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Russell, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF THE LATE JOHN T. CHANCEY.

The SPEAKER appointed as members to attend the funeral of the late John T. Chancey Mr. Austin, Mr. Talbott of Maryland, Mr. PAYNE, Mr. JONES, Mr. BARTHOLDT, Mr. LLOYD, and Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill S. 833, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

During the reading of the bill the following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 7 to 10, inclusive, being the name of Charles Hatfield.

Page 2, strike out lines 19 to 22, inclusive, being the name of George W. Crosley.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Otis Crawford, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last ord. These amendments which we have been agreeing to are mostly to strike out provisions which, I suppose, grant a pension to soldiers who have died.

I have noticed that when the vote was taken on the amendments viva vocé in the House certain distinguished gentlemen from Texas who object to paying pensions to live soldiers have voted against striking out the provisions in the bill which, if left as they are, would provide for the payment of pensions to dead soldiers. For myself I prefer to pay the pension to the man while he is living, rather than to vote, as my friends from Texas have, to pay pensions to men who have died, who can not receive the benefit of it, while voting against the payment of pensions to live soldiers.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. He has referred to certain gentlemen from Texas. Texas covers a considerable territory and a great many Members, and it is not very clear to whom the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, Texas not only covers considerable territory, but the Members from Texas are considerable and cover a great deal of territory also.

I also notice, Mr. Speaker, that this is a Senate bill, which passed the Senate about six months ago, on July 11, 1913. There are 118 items in the bill for different soldiers or widows. As showing the rapidity with which these pensioners pass away, I think it is proper to call attention to the fact that 21 of these beneficiaries, as I understand it, have died since the bill passed the Senate six months ago, which is at quite a rapid rate, and would make more than one-third in the course of a year's time. People who complain about these bills ought to remember that in the main the beneficiaries are very old and decrepit persons and the pension which they are granted does not last very long.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COX.

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. COX. In reading the report of the Commissioner of Pensions the other day I observed that upward of 39,000 died last year.

Mr. MANN. But a very much larger proportion die that are carried in these special pension bills than on the general pension rolls, because it is only those who, as a rule, are very far gone with disease or decrepitude who receive the benefit of these special pensions.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to my friend from Illinois that the beneficiaries in two private bills of mine favorably passed by the committee this session have died before the bills could be reached by the House. I have been trying to hunt out the most urgent cases in my district and give preference to them. As a rule, all these cases are those in which speedy action is required if relief comes to them in time. I wish we could get through more of such bills.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker, I am not complaining of those gentlemen who express some little harshness about my attitude on these private pension bills, and if they should conclude their criticism of my attitude in time and have any spare time left over I would be glad if they would turn to page 49 and tell me why Lafayette Piatt, age 72, who served 2 years and 9 months in the war, and whom the medical evidence shows to be blind, and who is compelled to feel his way along the street, should only receive $40 a month, while on the same page William Thornburg, age 74, who served only 4 months and 8 days, should receive $50 a month? Here is a man who served 2 years and 9 months, and who gets $40 a month, and the other man served 4 months and 8 days, and he gets $50 a month. When I was addressing the House a moment ago I did not know why that was. Some gentleman suggests to me that it probably is due to the fact that this old soldier served so long for his country that he wore himself out and now he can not go around for campaign purposes, whereas the one who only served four months is much more active in that direction.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

I will.

Mr. ADAIR. I do not remember these exact cases, but I imagine that if the gentleman got the papers in the case he would find that in one instance it is shown that the soldier who gets $50 requires the attendance and care of another person all the time and has no property or income with which to hire a nurse, while the man who is totally blind and is allowed $40 does not require the attention and care of a nurse, or is not totally blind, but is able to get about.

Mr. DIES. Unfortunately, the man who only gets $40 is said by the committee to require an attendant with him all the time. As I said to you this afternoon, you are making fish of one and fowl of another, and I object to that. Now, I am awfully sorry anybody falls out with me because I take up a little time of the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIES. In a moment. Gentlemen complained a moment ago that I took up time, valuable time, of the House when we were here anxious and ready to pass these appropriation bills. Well, are not you doing it fast enough, and have not you done it fast enough? You have a general appropriation law, paying pensions at the rate of $180,000,000 a year-

Mr. RUSSELL. Less than that this year.

Mr. DIES. You are passing these private bills every two weeks, a long list, and because I wanted 30 minutes to show that you give a man who only served four months $50 and a man who served nearly three years $40, you tell me I ought not to take up the time of the House. Let us pass them and get through with it quickly; let us give everybody a pension right away, you say, and when I stand up and call attention to discrepancies and inequalities you can not say enough mean things about me. I almost feel ashamed of myself to get in the way of this legislation, to stop the mill from grinding out pensions so rapidly. No; you say let us pass them on through the mill; let us grind them out; we want to appropriate the money; we want to increase the pension roll, it is not big enough. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to say to the gentleman there are a number of things that affect the amount of the pension that is recommended by the committee. One of them is the length of service, but length of service does not always indicate which is entitled to the most pension. Oftentimes the testimony shows that one man is entitled to higher pay by reason of injuries received in the service, and he is given greater consideration, and sometimes it is true that a man introduces a bill and asks for only $40 a month, and it is written up by the examiner who is sent there by the Pension Bureau, and he sends it to the committee with a recommendation for $40 asked for by the claimant. Of course, the committee does not, as a rule, go through the papers to find some reason to increase his pension beyond what he asks for.

Mr. LANGLEY. You do not give the soldier, in other words, more than his Member of Congress asks for.

Mr. DIES. I would like to ask the chairman how this would be: Instead of giving to William Thornberg, 74 years old, who served four months and eight days, $50, why do you not give to everybody who served four months and eight days $50? Do you not know that there are tens of thousands who are over 70 years of age who served more than four months and eight days and who are getting less?

Mr. RUSSELL. One reason we do not give more to some soldiers in this country is because they are well to do and do not need it.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words. While the gentleman was talking I read the report on these two bills. The man having the long service, according to the testimony filed in this case, "knows no one except by sound of their voice, results of cataracts of both eyes, whereas in the other case the medical testimony establishes beyond a question that the man is totally blind.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ans-BERRY] yield to the gentleman from Texas? Mr. ANSBERRY. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman read:

The claimant is compelled to find his way along the street with cane, and knows no one except by the sound of their voice, results of cataracts of both eves.

But fails to read further:

Lay testimony filed in the case shows that the claimant is blind.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I intended to read the balance. The testimony of the layman was that this man was blind and ought to have an attendant, whereas in the other case the medical testimony establishes beyond peradventure not only that the man was totally blind but that he had always had an attendant; merely a suggestion on the one side that he should have an attendant, and that of a man who had to feel his way along the street with a cane, and could not recognize anybody, except by the sound of the voice. The gentleman fails to distinguish between the lay testimony in a case of this kind, which only goes to show, not that the man is totally blind but that the man can not distinguish another on the street, except by the sound of his voice, and medical testimony that a man was totally blind and actually had to have the attendance of another per-That is the difference in those two cases.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. ANSBERRY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman catch the point of view of the gentleman from Texas? He is not complaining that $50 pension for the one is too great, but that the $40 pension of the other is too little. The gentleman from Texas a while ago even voted against striking out a pension for a dead soldier.

Mr. ANSBERRY. In order to prove what the gentleman from Illinois says is true, if the gentleman from Texas will offer a motion to equalize these pensions by raising the one from $40 to $50, and if the $40 man is the one he sympathizes with, I shall be glad to vote and speak in behalf of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Sarah Ann Kelly, widow of William Kelly, late of Com-ny I, Ninety-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now

Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DIES To move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DONOVAN. I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, from what section he is striking out the last word?

Mr. DIES. I will refer my friend to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman is running.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with my friend from Ohio, who thinks it takes a doctor to tell whether a fellow is blind or not. I never knew before that a layman could not tell a blind man about as well as a doctor could. The testimony in this case shows a man has to have an attendant and feel his way along the street, and the lay testimony says he is blind.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I want to read the testimony filed in the case with the committee. It says:

Lay testimony filed in this case shows that the claimant is blind, and that he should have an attendant with him-

Not that he has an attendant, but that he should have an attendant with him.

Mr. DIES. That is just it. An ordinary Congressman or an ordinary being could not tell a blind man if he met him in the road, but it takes a doctor, in my friend's estimation, to tell whether a man is blind or not.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] complains of my attitude. I do not know just what he does want me to do, but I think he wants me to make a motion to raise them all to $50 a month

In lieu of that, I suggest to my friend from Illinois that, instead of taking 184 who are favored in this bill and giving them $40 or $50 a month and leaving some 800,000 or 900,000 at $20 and $21 per month, he take them all up and treat them all alike.

If a man who is getting $50 is getting what is right, then the man who is getting only $20 is not getting what is right; and if a man who is getting more than $20 is getting more than he ought to have, then bring him down to what he ought to get. On the other hand, if a man who is getting $20 a month is getting too little, you should bring up the amount to what will meet the needs of justice. These gentlemen know what it is. They know that they are making fish of one man in these pension bills and flesh of another. They are singling out certain men and say, "Because that man is blind we will give certain men and say, "Because that man is blind we will give him $50 a month." Why not say that every old soldier in this Republic who is blind shall have $50 a month?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an interruption? Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is mistaken in what he says, Decause the Congress have already said by enactment that every old soldier who is blind and who incurred his blindness in his service in the Army shall get $100 a month.

Mr. DIES. If that is so, why do you have a bill here to give them only $50? All that I contend for is equal treatment to all of them. Let there be a standard fixed under the general law, and if you give a man $50 a month because he is blind, then let the question be a question of blindness.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another interruption.

Mr. DIES.

ANSBERRY. I desire to say that anyone who is familiar with the rules of this committee and with the pension laws of the land knows that those who get $50 a month by special law do so not because they received their blindness as the result of injuries due to service origin, but because they served in the war and became blind afterwards and are in straitened circumstances, and because it is the policy of the Government of the United States—and a very proper policy, in my judgment—that no man who ever fought for the flag should be permitted to go hungry or be sent to the poorhouse or be without a roof over his head. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Very well. Why would it not be easy to say that man who is blind should have $50 a month? You pick out a blind man now receiving $12 a month and give him $50 a month, and to another blind soldier you give only $20 a month.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, so often has the charge been made in this House that the granting of pensions to soldiers who have fought for their country's honor and preservation is an unjustifiable extravagance and is a species of graft which should be suppressed that I feel it is proper on this occasion for me to present to this House the reason; why we believe that such aspersions are wicked and unjust, and that, in truth and in fact, the pension system of this country is builded upon sound economic principles, gratitude, and justice.

I know full well that perhaps in no other public position is a public officer so tempted to act for political effect as in the House of Representatives of the United States. A Member of that House is subjected to a strenuous campaign every two years, and he realizes that offtimes his constituents may not have the time to deliberate upon his votes and actions in the House until he is again thrown into the maelstrom of a campaign. And so it is that the temptation is constantly before him to do that which he thinks for the moment will be pleasing to his constituents.

But those who have held public positions acceptably have long since resolved that the only safe and the only right rule upon which to act is that of one's deliberate judgment and sense of right regardless of consequences, and I can truthfully say that since I have been a Member of this House I have been pleased to find that, speaking generally, that rule has been adopted by the Members of this House, and that while sometimes the clash of party spirit and the desire for party advantage may cause some of its Members to forget for the moment these lofty ideals of duty, yet, with few exceptions, if any, the Members of this House conscientiously devote themselves to the public weal, and while in many cases their judgment is wrong and their views are partisan, neither taint of corruption nor cowardice of spirit dominates their actions.

And so it is, Mr. Speaker, that when the gentleman from Texas, who is a worthy representative of the Democratic Party, and other gentlemen on that side, not only scoff at the soundness and justice of our pension system, but also question the motives of those who differ from them, I am sure they are misled by the passing passion of the hour, rather than influenced by deliberate, nonpartisan judgment. Be it said to their credit, and also to the credit of many others of their party, that their opposition to pensions has been consistent and continuous, and that upon the records of this House can be found ample evidence of the fact that they and other prominent members of their party have not only talked but have also voted against rewarding the old soldiers of this Republic for its salvation.

And in support of this it may not be amiss to point out the fact that, although during the last presidential campaign it was heralded abroad that the Democratic Party had suddenly changed its coat, abandoned the policy of opposition to pensions, which it had pursued for 40 years before, and had suddenly espoused the cause of the old soldier, yet, there in plain letters, on pages Nos. 284 and 285 of the Congressional Record of December 12, 1911, the uncontradicted and uncontradictable evidence stands forth in living light to show that of the 93 votes cast against the original Sherwood bill in the House, all but 6 of those objecting votes were cast by Democrats, and the large majority of those present and not voting on the measure were members of the same political party.

And the RECORD also shows, on page 6242, May 10, 1912, that even on the conference bill, which materially reduced the pensions provided in the Sherwood bill, and which finally became the law, every single vote of the 57 cast against that bill was cast by a Democrat, and that the large majority of those present and not voting belonged to that same Democratic Party, while every Republican voting in the House supported that measure, which is now the law of the land. It is only fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are some Democrats who differ from their objecting brethren-

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I do.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Does the gentleman from West Virginia know that the Republican Party had a majority in this House and had centrol of every branch of the Federal Government for 16 years prior to the passage of the Sherwood bill, and during all that time refused to pass such legislation?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Yes; the Republican Party had control of the Government and took good care of the old soldiers during all that time. [Applause on the Republican

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not say that.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. But the gentleman from Texas Mr. DIES] did. Is he not a Democrat?

[Mr. Dies] did.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not know what he is, and I do not care, but in the main he votes with the Democrats. But on the matter of pension legislation the gentleman from West Virginia knows that the gentleman from Texas does not speak for the Democratic Party. But for the Democratic Party we would not have had this legislation placed on the statute books.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. The gentleman from Texas claims to be a Democrat, and I am only accepting his claim.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Yes; but I must ask for a little time if the gentleman interrupts me.

I hope the gentleman will get it. Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman know that the Sherwood bill is Democratic legislation? If he does not know and his constituents who read this bill do not know that this is Democratic legislation, then I think they ought to be put on the pension roll for mental paralysis. [Laughter and applause.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West

Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. I want to reserve the right to object, Mr.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Connecticut ob-

Mr. DONOVAN. I have reserved the right to object. The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] demands the regular order.
Mr. DONOVAN. That is an objection of itself, is it not?

Is there objection? The SPEAKER.

I reserve the right to object. Mr. DONOVAN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not reserve the right to object when the regular order is demanded.

The demand for the regular order is an Mr. DONOVAN. objection when he insists upon it.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then, I do not have anything to say about it. The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Those men conscientiously be-lieve that it is right to give to these old men in their declining years some slight compensation for the sacrifice which they made and the hardships which they endured for the sake of their country, and to bestow upon the widows and orphans of those who have crossed to the other shore some slight remuneration for the loss of the shelter and support afforded by the husband and father. And upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on which I have the honor to serve, there are some valiant champions of the cause of the veterans whom it is a pleasure to know and to respect,

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. No; I do not.

Mr. DONOVAN. Your minute has expired.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I demand order, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, in pointing out the fact that the Republican Party has consistently for 50 years been the real friend of the old soldier, by deed as well as by words, and that the Democratic Party for almost the entire period has just as consistently, speaking of it as a whole, been opposed to those measures which afforded relief to the old soldier, I do not wish to be understood as desiring to inject partisanship into this question. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.] I would not have mentioned this subject at all did I not believe it to be right to put upon the record of this House the correct statement of facts in regard to the claim so frequently and freely | preservation has been accomplished.

made during the last campaign-that the old soldiers of this country should support the Democratic Party because of its professed friendship for them. My Democratic friend from Texas [Mr. Dies] some weeks ago and again to-day, in this House, proclaimed in emphatic tones, in effect, that everybody knew that it was only a question of bidding for political support, and that the fact was that in the last campaign the Democratic Party simply outbid the Republican Party.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this a reflection which should not go unchallenged against the manhood of the old soldiers of this country. Let me say to him that if he believes that these old men, who are now watching the setting of the sun, have so far lost their sense of honor, their idea of patriotism, and their grasp of governmental problems that they offer themselves and their votes to the highest bidder, then the gentleman has a most perverted idea of their sterling character and their lofty patri-And, proceeding on his theory, the gentleman will be sadly disappointed to find that when these old soldiers realize the reason, so frankly stated by the gentleman, for the partial support of pension measures in the last Congress by a portion of the Democratic Party, they will register by their votes in the coming campaigns a strong and solemn protest against this serious reflection upon their citizenship, which may perhaps cause the more reticent and conservative of our Democratic friends, who have not spoken what they felt, to regret that their more verbose and enthusiastic brethren have given vent to their

Mr. ANSBERRY. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

In line 22, page 19, strike out $24 and insert $20.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, before I leave my friend from Texas in the background, I wish to repudiate the idea advanced by him that the American soldier enlists for the money there is in it. I am willing to concede that there may be some venturesome spirits scattered throughout the Nation who are willing to sell their lives for a mere pittance, and who enlist in the United States Army and Navy for the compensation which they will receive thereby. This class is a decided exception, and I firmly assert that the great body of brave men who, from the foundation of this Government to this present time, especially in time of war, have enlisted in the service of this country have been prompted by the highest motives of patriotism and the highest ideals of manhood.

Referring particularly to the soldiers of the Civil War, on both sides of that great conflict, it seems to me apparent to any reasonable mind that those men who enlisted on one side or the other could have had no mercenary motive in sacrificing their business, leaving their families, enduring untold hardships, and risking their lives. On the contrary, they were willing to fight for the principles which they thought were right, and even though some of them might have been possessed of mercenary inclinations, surely the small compensation which they would receive could not have tempted even those of that class. No, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the gentlemen on the other side who hold these views to strive to rise to a higher appreciation of the services of these intrepid soldiers of the past, of the hardships which they endured, of the sacrifices which they made, and the lofty motives which inspired their service to this Nation.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I decline to yield.

Mr. Speaker, I stated in the beginning of my remarks that the pension system of this country was founded on sound economic principles. Just as with an individual, so with a nation, it does not pay to be niggardly nor unjust nor ungrateful in awarding compensation for services rendered. In the world of business this has been proven many times, and the captain of industry of the present day, whatever he may have been in the past, is the man who considers, appreciates, and rewards the faithful service of his employees. Industrial statistics clearly show that the employer who gives the most consideration to the welfare and fair remuneration of his employees obtains from them the best and the most work. And this same principle holds good in every line of life, that where the service is voluntarily and cheerfully rendered it is most satisfactory. And so we contend that it is real economy for this great Government to establish as one of its cardinal principles the proposition that the man who helps to preserve it will not be ignored after that

Mr. Speaker, war is a cruel and inhuman monster, and I hope to God we will see the day when it will be crushed and destroyed, and in its place we will have an international court of justice to adjudicate the rights and equities of nations, according to the enlightened views of civilization, and will not have to resort to the barbarous practice of war, where even victory, in most cases, does not prove the righteousness of the cause. But, to be practical, we must face the fact that in this day of vast armaments and continued preparation, with questions pending which involve constant danger of resort to arms, it is folly for any nation to be unprepared for an emergency, and I submit that to be prepared it must have at its beck and call not only the Regular Army and Navy, but also that great body of citizenship which constitutes the bone and sinew of any nation, and which, with the proper conception of a beneficent Government, will voluntarily offer itself for its country's welfare. It is not a mercenary question, though it can not be denied that the receipt of a Government pension is often practically needed, and the money, therefore, itself actually appre-clated. But before and above this consideration is the appreciative conception of the attitude of a great Government which remembers in a substantial way the inestimable services of its citizens. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I ask five minutes more, and

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I object. Let the gentleman print his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary E. Dow, widow of Western W. Dow, late of Company I., Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Walter W. Dow, helpless and dependent child of said Western W. Dow, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary E. Dow, the name of the said Walter W. Dow shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Mary E. Dow.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I realize the fact that much of the criticism against me from the Republican side of the House that I am not acting with the Democratic Party in this pension matter is well taken. I realize, as does my friend from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] that the Democratic Party has gone further in this matter than it ought to have gone. I realize, as may be inferred from what he says, that the Democratic Party passed the Sherwood pension bill; that, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the leader on the Republican side, said, went too far on this line. I realize the force of that criticism. I know that my party is responsible for the Sherwood bill and for this tremendous load of pension legislation that has been fixed upon the taxpayers of the country. We can not escape responsibility, because, when the Sherwood pension bill passed, if every Republican when the Sherwood pension bill passed, it every kepublican in the House had kept silent and not voted, the Democrats would have passed the bill. The gentleman's deductions are correct. I am not in sympathy with my party upon this pension legislation. I do believe, with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Payne], the leader on the Republican side, that we have gone too far, and I believe, as Mr. Dalzell, then chairman of the great Rules Committee, another leader of the Republican Party, said, that we were going too far in the Sherwood bill. Party, said, that we were going too far in the Sherwood Dill.

I do not agree with my friend from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] that it ought to be a partisan matter, and I know, as he in his secret heart knows, that it is not a partisan matter; because, when you get a pension bill before this House, it is just a question between Democrats and Republicans as to who can vote the loudest for it and give them the most.

My friend from West Virginia ought to know, speaking the truth about it, that the one pension bill that caused the greatest leap in the pension expenditures, that gave the old soldiers more than they asked for, that gave them what the gentleman from New York said was a prodigality, was passed by Demo-cratic votes, and that if every Republican had walked out into the cloakroom or into the corridors of the House it would still have passed by Democratic votes. Oh, what a pity it is that men want to make the old soldier vote a political asset. am a better friend of the old soldier than the man who wants to drag the roll of honor into the politics of his district. I honor the brave old men who faced Lee, Jackson, and Johnson, and I honor them too much to make the matter of pensions a partisan matter in this Congress.

My friend ought to know, and gentlemen all about me ought to know, that there is some limit beyond which we ought not to go. Mr. PAYNE, the leader of the Republican Party, said that that limit was the Sherwood bill. All I ask you now is to stop. The Sherwood bill has brought the total up to $180,000,000. Quit making politics out of it, and let us reverence the old battle-scarred heroes who served the country and stop telling them that the Democratic Party, or either party, has not given them liberal pensions. I am a friend of the old soldier. I do not agree with my party, but I agree with the leaders of the gentleman's party when they say we have gone far enough already, and too far, in this pension business.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I would not object to the gentleman from Texas opposing pensions, because he has always opposed pensions, but I do object to his opposing pensions and then getting up in the House and claiming that he is a friend of the

Mr. Speaker, I stated in the beginning that this pension system was based on sound economic principles.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman permit an interrup-

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. No: I can not do it, for I have not the time. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated upon this floor that a pension is a mere gift or charity. Perhaps this view is responsible for the inability of some gentlemen on the other side of this House to properly appreciate our obligation to the soldier.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, 'I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment to strike out the last two words. He is delaying action on the bill; in other words, filibustering,

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I presume that if the gentleman from Texas was accorded that privilege The SPEAKER. It is not a question of who was accorded a privilege. No objection was made in the time of the gentleman from Texas. Under the five-minute rule the gentleman must confine himself to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I hope the gentlemen who have had a good deal of time on that side of the House will accord us the same amount of time on this.

Mr. ANSBERRY. But the gentleman from West Virginia is filibustering against the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is all nonsense. He has not had as much time as has the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from West Virginia be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I object. Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia had the floor.

Mr. ANSBERRY. But he was not proceeding in order. The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that under the five-minute debate, unless permission was otherwise granted, the gentleman must stick to the text.

Mr. LANGLEY. But his time had not expired. The Chair merely directed him to proceed in order, and he has not said a word since to show whether he is sticking to the subject or not; but the Clerk was proceeding to read, as if the gentleman from West Virginia had lost the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entitled in the House, where we are proceeding in the House as in Committee of the Whole, to some courtesy from the House; and if that side of the House does not wish to grant that courtesy, we will take our rights. The gentleman from Ohio has used more time than the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has not expired; he has two minutes more; and he will proceed to talk about the subject before the House.

Mr. MANN. The subject before the House, Mr. Speaker, is striking out the last two words.

Mr. LANGLEY. How can he obey the direction of the Chair

"stick to his text," when he has a text like that?
The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going into a school of Mr. MANN. The gentleman from West Virginia will get all the time he wants.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am going to conform to the ruling of the Chair and sit down, but I will get up again.

The SPEAKER. Both pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: strike out the following:
"The name of Jacob H. Gabbard, late of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, it has been stated upon this floor that a pension is a mere gift or charity

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It is evident that the gentleman is not speaking to the pro forma amendment; he is reading from a prepared speech.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. How is it evident?

Mr. LANGLEY. The prepared speech may be material. Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, upon the point of order, if the Chair will permit, I think it is everywhere understood that when a motion is made to strike out the last word, and the merits of the bill are discussed, the gentleman discussing it is within the rules, and certainly that is what the gentleman from West Virginia means, else there would be no rights whatever. I take it the rule does not mean that a gentleman shall confine himself to a discussion of the very motion of striking out the last word. No one has ever spoken to that proposition in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The Chair has seen Members who have taken the floor confined to speaking to that amendment. The Chair never thought there was very much wisdom in that arrangement, but surely the gentleman has to speak about the bill if anybody raises the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. My suggestion to the Speaker is that the gentleman is discussing the bill and the merits of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But he was not when he was talking the last time. He was discussing philosophical politics.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I admit that I do not always please everybody in the House, but certainly I am discussing this bill.

The SPEAKER. Let the gentleman proceed with the next sentence and we will see.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated upon this floor that a pension is a mere gift or charity. Perhaps this view is responsible for the inability of some gentlemen on the other side of the House to properly appreciate our obligation to the soldier.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. That certainly comes within the rule, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that as long as points of order are being made the Speaker will, under the rules of the House, protect the gentleman against interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is endeavoring to protect the gentleman under the rules, and he will state that no gentleman has the right to sit in his seat and raise the point of order or inject any remarks into the speech of some one else. Of course Members forget that, for they understand it as well as the Chair does. The gentleman will proceed,

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I admit that some of my remarks will not be liked upon the other side.

The SPEAKER. That is not discussing the bill.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. No; but I just said that as a preface to my discussion of the bill. To repeat, Mr. Speaker, it has been stated upon this for that a pension is a mere gift or charity. Perhaps this view is responsible for the inability of some gentlemen on the other side of this House to properly appreciate our obligation to the soldier. I repudiate this definition of "pension." The men who fought to preserve this Union ask no charity from any source. They only ask that, as they sacrificed all for their country, in turn their country shall devote a reasonable portion of its vast revenues to save them or their widows and orphans from the pangs of poverty,

Mr. Speaker, ingratitude is among the worst of human sins. We can forgive the man who steals our property, conscious as we are of the frailty of human nature when avarice grasps it in its hand of iron.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to make the point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The Chair will hear the gentleman. The SPEAKER.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I submit that when I am making an argument upon this bill it is perfectly proper to call attention to the fact that there are various kinds of sins, and that ingratitude is one of them, and that for this Government not to grant liberal pensions to the old soldiers would be one of the worst forms of ingratitude. I submit that is an argument on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is proper and overrules the point of order. The gentleman will continue.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. We can understand, and in a measure forgive him who in the heat of passion strikes down his fellow man and robs him of his life. But, to my mind, it is very hard to forgive him who in cold blood and after mature reflection will strike the hand that feeds him or will deliberately fail to bestow upon his benefactor a favor which is easily within his power. And this applies to nations as well as to individuals, and that nation which violates its obligations to its citizens and fails to show its appreciation of their efforts in its behalf is doomed sooner or later to fall from its high estate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, one might believe, from the protests that are made by some gentlemen in this House against the granting of pensions, that this is the only nation on the face of the globe which pays pensions to its sol-The fact is, as anyone who has investigated the subject will attest, that every civilized nation on the globe in some manner bestows upon its soldiers who have rendered faithful service upon the field of battle and have been injured or who have served in the army or navy of their country for a certain number of years some token of its appreciation. It is true that our own country has been more liberal than most of the other nations of the world in the matter of pensions, but what else should we expect? Do we not claim and do we not feel that in this Nation of ours is embodied all that is best of freedom, of justice, and of prosperity? Do we not claim and feel that here the individual citizen, however humble he may be, is accorded his full measure of these benefits? And therefore does it not necessarily follow that more is expected of this great Government in the matter of pensions than would be expected of a Government not possessed of these fruitful blessings?

Mr. Speaker, I want these men to have what is their just due, and no more. If there be fraud in any of their claims, then let that fraud be ferreted out and the man who resorts to it be denied what he asks, and in addition be punished for violation of the law. The fact that there may be occasional frauds perpetrated upon the Government by unworthy persons seeking pensions is no reason why there should be created a prejudice against the great body of old soldiers in this country who are honestly entitled to pensions and who are merely asking that to which they are entitled. Criticism has been made upon the floor of this House upon special-bill legislation. I admit that it must be guarded with a watchful eye, and that it could easily be carried to extremes, but there are undoubtedly many instances where the applicant can not technically conform to the requirements of the general pension law, although he may be as justly entitled to a pension as some other man who can comply with those regulations. It is that class of men that this House should relieve, and I feel that I voice the sentiment of our committee when I say that no unworthy applicant will receive a favorable recommendation from that committee.

Mr. Speaker, not only the war, but the pangs of war, have passed away. When in recent years the cry of suffering Cuba was at last heard by this great Government and the bugle call was sounded to summon our patriots on behalf of human rights, out upon the field of battle there marched the grandest army that ever trod the soil, for it was an army not from the North alone, but from the South, from the East, and from the West, an army of united Americans, and side by side and shoulder to shoulder the boys from the South and the boys from the North stood ready to defend their Nation's flag and honor. And if after that war there remained aught of bitterness or hate between the two great sections of this country, then it was indeed effaced when in recent months at Gettysburg the field of greatest carnage was transformed into a bower of brotherhood and sectional unity.

Mr. Speaker, as we look back through the vista of years in the light of this new era we can all truthfully acclaim that those brave and valiant warriors on both sides of the conflict fought for the principles which they believed to be right and that that great conflict terminated in the way that was best for us all. It was indeed an awful war-a war of brother against brother, a war of father against son, a war which drank deep of the best blood of America—and yet out of the bloodshed and horror, out of the devastation and desolation, there came heroism, magnanimity, and brotherly love unsurpassed in the annals of history.

I appeal to those on the other side to drive from their hearts all of bitterness and prejudice on this question and unite with the true friends of the old soldier, who preserved this great, majestic Nation, of which we are all so proud, in paying to him in his declining years not a bounty, not a charity, but a just debt of a grateful nation.

SENATE.

Monday, January 26, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy favor and blessing upon us, enabling us to do faithfully and well the work that has been committed to our hands this new legislative day. We pray Thee to help us to make room for the larger plans of God and for the divine purposes in all the progress of this great Nation. We pray not for oneness of opinion, but that we may keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace and have our blessed fellowship in our larger perceptions of patriotism and in our love for our great land.

Help us this day to discharge these duties faithfully and For Christ's sake. Amen.

Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Indiana Corn Growers' Association favors passage of Lever agricultural-extension bill. Agricultural conditions in Indiana call for wider and more complete dissemination of information from agricultural colleges and United States Department of Agriculture. Hope you will give this your best consideration.

JAMES KLINE, President.

Mr. KERN. I present a telegram from the president of the Indiana Live Stock Breeders' Association, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

LA FAYETTE, IND., January 17, 1914.

Senator John W. Kern,

Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Lever agricultural-extension bill considered in annual meeting of the Indiana Live Stock Breeders' Association. Passage of this bill is urged. Indiana agriculture needs support and assistance from both the agricultural experiment station and National Department of Agriculture. Your most favorable consideration is asked for this bill.

Manuel Department of Agriculture. MAURICE DOUGLAS, President.

Mr. KERN. I present a communication from the strike defense committee of the Western Federation of Miners, accompanied by numerous affidavits relative to the conditions in the upper peninsula of Michigan, the copper-mining region, which I desire to have referred, as other communications on the subject have been referred, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

Mr. KERN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jeffer-sonville, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation granting relief to persons who served in the United States military telegraph corps during the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WEEKS presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Onset, Mass., favoring an appropriation for the improvement of navigation in Buzzards Bay and the vicinity thereof, in the State of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hamilton County, Ohio, praying for the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. OLIVER presented memorials of Patrick Henry Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa.; of the County Cork Men's Patriotic and Beneficial Association, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and of the Thomas F. Burke Club, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against an appropriation by Congress for the celebration of the so-called 100 years of peace among English-speaking peoples, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Federation of Catholic Societies of Blair County, Pa., and a memorial of the Volks Verein of St. Mary's Congregation, of Altoona, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed literacy-test clause in the immigration bill, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing the employment of additional consulting architects sufficient to relieve the present congested condition of the Supervising Architect's Office, Treasury Department, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Phila-delphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further prohibit unfair competition and monopolies, as provided in the bills to create an interstate trade commission, to prohibit and prevent unfair competition, and to protect commerce against monopolies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of the Socialist Local of Jarvis, N. Dak., and a petition of the Socialist Local of Center, N. Dak., praying for an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining districts of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JONES presented resolutions adopted by the Snoqualmie Valley Commercial Club, of North Bend, Wash., favoring the enactment of legislation for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad, which were referred to the Committee on Pub-

He also presented resolutions adopted by the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Bellingham, Wash., favoring the ratification of arbitration treaties with England and other countries, and also the suspension for one year of the naval programs of the nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Alfred Young and 24 other citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of two new battleships, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Mount Zion Lodge, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Boston, Mass., and a memorial of Worcester Lodge, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Worcester, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the petition of W. D. Stark and 22 other citizens, of Worcester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Central Labor Union, of Meriden, Conn., praying for an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining districts of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Sharon, Clay Center, and Tonganoxie, all in the State of Kansas, praying for an investigation into conditions existing in the mining districts of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing a readjustment of the salaries of the employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bunker Hill, Kans., praying for the establishment of a permanent arbitra-tion court, to be held in Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Columbus, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts sup-plementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 175) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 178) thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 179) thereon.

Mr. CIMMONS. I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 2883, a bill to authorize and more specifically define the laws authorizing and granting permission to use and occupy Government lands, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I think it is clearly an erroneous reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 789) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 180) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 790) to authorize the improvement of Santa Barbara Light Station, Cal., including a fog signal and a keeper's dwelling (Rept. No. 181); and

A bill (S. 791) to provide for improvements at the Santa Cruz Light Station, Cal. (Rept. No. 182).

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River, in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, reported it with amendment and submitted a report (No. 183) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3583) to authorize the changing of the names of the steamships Buckman and Watson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 176) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail two Engineer officers to cooperate with engineers of the Interior Department or the States of Oregon and Washington in investigating The Dalles (Oreg.) power project, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 177) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1801) providing for an increase of salary of the United States collector of customs for the district of Maine and New Hampshire, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (8. 3085) to amend section 20 of chapter 1 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and as heretofore amended, by fixing the limitation within which actions may be brought on bills of lading, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which was agreed to.

BRIDGES IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4145) to authorize the Government of Porto Rico to construct bridges across the Arecibo River near the city of Arecibo, P. R., and I ask for its immediate consideration. The passage of the bill has been requested by the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the bill reported unanimously from the committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is reported unanimously. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read. The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Government of Porto Rico be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two bridges and approaches thereto across the Arceibo River near the city of Arecibo, P. R. in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a brief letter from the Secretary of War asking for the passage of the bill. The letter is addressed to Senator Clarke of Arkansas, chairman of the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 19, 1914.

Hon. James P. Clarke, Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I transmit herewith draft of a bill authorizing the Government of Porto Rico to construct two bridges across the Arecibo River, in that island. These bridges are essential to the proper development of the public highways under construction in the Island, and I would appreciate it if you would take such action in connection therewith as would insure the bill being enacted into law at the present session of Congress.

With best wishes, I remain,

Very truly,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,

Recretary of War.

LINDLEY M. GARRISON, Secretary of War.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back and ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2831) to establish a drainage fund and to provide for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands in the United States and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

Mr. BURTON. On what theory is the bill to be referred to that committee'

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Committee on Commerce decided that, in their opinion, this action should be taken on the ground that there is a drainage bureau in the Department of Agriculture and on the further ground that the Department of Agriculture is giving considerable attention to the subject of drainage.

Mr. BURTON. Is the bill in any way connected with navigation or other public work?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not believe that it relates to navigation, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BURTON. Was there action taken by the Committee on Commerce in regard to it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Action was taken by the committee, as stated by me, and the committee authorized me to make this I have not made a careful study of the bill as yet.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to state that the whole matter of drainage irrigation, as well as navigation-indeed the whole subject of the control and utilization of waters-ought to be considered as one great problem, and I do not like to see one phase of it referred to one committee and another phase to another. Just what does the bill propose? Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not thoroughly familiar with every phase of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I ask, before the change of reference is made, that the request may go over for a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the proposition be deferred for a day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill be referred back to the Committee on Commerce for further consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas may withdraw the request

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the request for a change of reference

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the Committee on Commerce considered the question whether the bill should not go to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state that the bill was considered very briefly in the committee, and for that reason I withdraw the request for a change of reference.

Mr. JONES. I hope the question of a reference to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources will be considered in connection with the further consideration of the bill by the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withdraws the bill for the present.

THOMAS R. FAHERTY.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced a bill (S. 235) for the relief of the widow of Thomas R. Faherty, which was referred to the Committee on Interocennic Canals. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], suggests that the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. I think that course is probably correct, and if it is the proper procedure I ask that the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the committee will be discharged and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

GOODS MADE BY CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to lodge a motion-I will not ask action upon it, because the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], who is interested, is not present-to discharge the Committee on Manufactures from the further consideration of Senate bill 4161. a bill to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor, and I wish also to enter a motion that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance. will not ask for action upon the motion until the Senator from Missouri is in his seat, in so far as he introduced the bill.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask that the title of the bill be stated at the desk?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] suggests that the Senator from Missouri will be absent for some weeks, and, in view of that. I will ask for action on the motion at once, because probably the bill ought to be considered before his return.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to be held entirely responsible for that course. I simply know that the Senator from Missouri informed me that he intended on account of his health to go South, and I presume that he has already gone; I do not know.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will withdraw the motion and make some inquiry before renewing it. It may be that the Senator from Missouri will return soon.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask that the title of the bill be read?

The Secretary. A bill (S. 4161) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor.

THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate resolution No. 248, authorizing the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, to employ a stenographer, send for books and papers, administer oaths, and so forth, submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-LANDS] on the 20th instant, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. I will state, Mr. President, that the resolution is in the usual form of resolutions which have been passed by the Senate authorizing other committees to make similar investigations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was agreed to, as follows:

the resolution, which was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same is hereby, authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ, if necessary, a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee, or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that such committee or subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate or during the vacation of the Senate at any place in the United States.

HATTIE A. KRUEGER AND LIZZIE KRUEGER.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate resolution No. 237, to pay Hattie A. and Lizzie Krueger, sisters of Paul A. Krueger, a sum equal six months' salary, submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] December 22, 1913. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment of the Committee on Contingent Expenses was, in line 4, before the word "sisters," insert "jointly," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Hattie A. Krueger and Lizzie Krueger, jointly, sisters of I'aul A. Krueger, late a cierk to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, the said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the State of Florida be, and is hereby, granted the privilege of placing in Statuary Hall of the Capitol the statue of John Gorrie, now deceased, who was a citizen of Florida, illustrious for distinguished civic services.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 12045. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldlers and sailors of war; and

H. R. 11269. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

THE TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE AS ADJUNCTS TO POSTAL SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 250) submitted by Mr. Norris on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from further consideration of Senate resolution 242, directing the Postmaster General to send to the Senate certain information relative to governmental ownership and control of the telegraph and telephone facilities.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the resolution referred to, requesting the Postmaster General to transmit certain papers to the Senate, reached the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the 16th of the present month. The resolution was offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. It was passed by the Senate, reconsidered, and then referred to the committee. I assured the Senator from Nebraska, as did other members of the Post Office Committee, that there would be no unnecessary delay in reporting the resolution to the

Two other meetings of the committee have been called, but we have been unable to secure a quorum.

This resolution, Mr. President, had only been with the committee seven days when the Senator from Nebraska introduced his resolution to discharge the committee from its consideration. It seems to me and to the committee, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nebraska has exercised more diligence in this matter than the importance of the resolution requires. The committee will report this resolution at the very first opportunity; the very first day that we can get a quorum we will consider and report it. A meeting of the committee has been called for to-morrow. Every member of the committee has been urgently requested to be present. If we can then get a quorum, and I have no doubt we will, this resolution will be considered. For myself, Mr. President—and I feel sure that I voice the opinion of several members of the committee-under the circumstances I have related the committee could not do otherwise than consider the adoption of the pending resolution and the withdrawal of the previous resolution from the consideration of the committee as a reflection upon the committee. I think the committee would be justified in regarding it as a vote of lack of confidence. If there was a great emergency, we might be able to take a different view of it; but the passage of this resolution does not mean war or peace. The telephone and tele-graph companies are making no effort to escape the jurisdiction of the United States, so far as I know. We will be able to get these papers as soon as we can consider and the Senat- can pass the resolution.

I very much hope the Senate will not adopt the pending resolution taking from the control and jurisdiction of the committee the previous resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, unless there is some emergency for such action.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this resolution was introduced by me on the 12th day of January. That was the first day we reconvened after the Christmas holidays. In order that the Senate may know just what the resolution is I want it read in now. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the results of the investigation he has been making regarding Government ownership and control of means of communication, with a view to the acquisition by the Government of the telegraph and telephone facilities, to be operated as an adjunct to the Postal Service, and that in connection therewith he send to the Senate all of the data and information that has been acquired by means of such investigation, together with a copy of all reports that have been made thereon by any committee or persons appointed by him for the purpose of making such investigation.

Mr. President, I introduced that resolution because I had learned that the Postmaster General had made such an investigation. I was desirous of getting the information, and I was very anxious to get it within a few days for reasons that were more or less personal to me. I am not stating that now as something that ought to be sufficient to cause the Senate to act, but I thought I was justified in introducing it, because in the last annual report made by the Postmaster General, on page 16, among other statements regarding the ownership of telegraph and telephone lines, he used this language:

Since June last the department has been conducting a careful investigation to determine the desirability and practicability of extending the Government ownership and control of means of communication, with a view to the acquisition by the Government of the telegraph and telephone facilities, to be operated as an adjunct to the Postal Service. The Postmaster General is now engaged in reviewing the data collected and later, if desired, will submit same to the appropriate committees of Congress for their consideration.

When I introduced that resolution, Mr. President, I asked for its immediate consideration. The request was granted, and the resolution was adopted; but later, on the same day, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] had a motion entered on the record to reconsider. On the next day, January 13, the resolution came up-and it came up after I had had a consultation with the chairman of the committee-and when I called it up I used this language, as shown in the RECORD, on page 1621:

this language, as shown in the Record, on page 1621:

Mr. Norris. Yesterday the Senate passed a resolution introduced by me calling upon the Postmaster General for certain information. After it had been passed the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] entered a motion to reconsider, which I understand is now pending. I have had some consultation, particularly with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman] and also with the chairman of the committee, and, as far as I am concerned, from the statements which have been made to me by both those Senators that the matter will be reported out perhaps to-day, being informed by the chairman of the committee that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads meets at 2 o'clock and it is the intention to report the resolution out to-day if possible, and if not to-day as soon as it can possibly be done, with that understanding I have no objection myself to having the resolution reconsidered and referred to that committee.

The remarks just read were made by me about two minutes

The remarks just read were made by me about two minutes after 2 o'clock. The unfinished business had just been laid before the Senate, and I asked the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who had charge of the Alaskan bill, to yie'd for the purpose of making the request. The conversation I had had with the Senator from Alabama occurred not five minutes before, so that the time for the meeting of the committee had already arrived when that action was taken by the Senate, and I presume within five minutes after that action was taken the committee was in session. I understand that it was practically a physical impossibility for the Secretary or other employee whose business it is to make the record and then convey the resolution officially to the committee and get the signature of the clerk to perform that duty within the time mentioned, and it did not officially reach the committee until the next day.

As I understood, however, and it seemed to me it was a fair understanding-I may be in error about it-every member of the committee, at least those who were present, and I presume most of them were and knew what action had been taken, knew that when the committee were in session they would not have physical possession of the bill, but they would know the action of the Senate. It was only a matter of form, only a resolution calling for information, such as goes through the Senate almost every day without any opposition or objection, something that is adopted almost as a rule when it is requested by any Senator. I had an idea that the report would immediately come back and the resolution would be passed the same day; and I thought I was justified in thinking so from what the chairman had said-and I call attention again to what I said in my remarks-that they were to meet at 2 o'clock. I was followed by the Senator from Mississippi, who said practically the same thing, and then that action was taken.

I wish to assure the Senator from Alabama that I had not at that time, and have not now any idea or intention of casting any reflection upon the committee; but it did seem to me that a resolution simply calling for information from the Postmaster General-information that he says over his own signature he has in his possession and is ready to communicate to the committees of Congress—ought to have been passed almost as a matter of form. When the committee met, as I understand, an objection was made there that it could not be considered, for the reason that the resolution was not officially before the committee.

That, however, was on the 13th day of January. The resolution is still in the possession of the committee, and is still in their custody. I know that every day or two, when some formal matter is to be reported out of a committee, if some Senator is interested in it, it is a common thing to have the Clerk, or even a member of the committee, poll the committee here on the floor and get a report.

It strikes me that in asking for this information, and in taking the course that I have taken, I have not trespassed upon anybody's rights, nor have I done anything that was censurable. I am sure I had no intention of doing so. I was assured, as I stated, that the matter would be reported very quickly, in a day or two, if not immediately. It seemed to me that when I had waited over a week after that, and nothing was done by the committee, and I could get no assurance from the chairman that there would be a meeting at any particular time, I was justified in taking the course I did.

Since the statement made by the chairman of the committee on the floor just now I am perfecty willing to withdraw the resolution, on the statement he has made, upon the theory that the resolution will be reported back when the committee meets to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn. Morning business is closed.

PROPOSED APPOINTING COMMISSION.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice given by me on the 19th instant, I ask the Chair to lay Senate bill 2679 before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 2679) providing for a commission to recommend appointments to office, and for other purposes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill to provide for a commission to receive and act upon all applications and recommendations for appointment to Federal offices and to select and recommend to the President the best-qualified applicants for such appointments, and forbidding Members of Congress to recommend or aid in securing the appointment of any applicant for office.

The bill provides, in substance-

1. For the appointment by the President, at the beginning of his term, of a commission of three persons, to be known as the appointing commission, to serve during the term of the President appointing them, and no longer.

2. That it shall be the duty of the commission to receive and consider all applications and recommendations for appointments to Federal offices not controlled by the civil-service laws and regulations and to recommend to the President for appointment the person most competent and best fitted to hold the office to be

3. That in determining the question of fitness and capacity each candidate shall be considered on his merits and no appointment shall be recommended as a reward for or because of political service or activity for any party of any candidate

4. That the President may either appoint or reject, or the Senate confirm or refuse to confirm, the person so recommended, and in case of rejection by either, another of the applicants shall be recommended until the President and Senate are satisfied and the appointment made and confirmed.

5. That no member of the Cabinet, Senator, Member of the House of Representatives, or any other person holding an office under the National Government shall advise or recommend any person to said commission for appointment to office, nor shall any person apply to, ask, or solicit any such official for aid or assistance of any kind to secure the appointment of himself or anyone else to any office.

6. Fixing the qualifications of the commissioners.

7. That every officer appointed as provided in the act shall be entitled to serve the full term for which he is appointed, unless removed for cause affecting his qualifications and fitness for the office, and that the question of his qualifications shall first be submitted to and passed upon by said commission, and if the charges are not sustained by the commission he shall not be removed.

8. No officer shall be removed before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed for political reasons only.

9. That the act shall not apply to the offices of the secretaries, clerks, or assistants of the President, the offices of the Secretaries commonly known as Cabinet officers, or their assistants, the clerks or assistants of Senators, or employees of the White House, the Senate, or the House of Representatives.

10. That the commission may hold hearings as to the fitness or competency of any applicant to be appointed to office or the sufficiency of the charges against any officer sought to be removed.

 Fixing the salaries of the commissioners.
 Making an appropriation for salaries and expenses of the commission.

13. Providing a penalty for violation of the act.

Mr. President, this bill is intended to relieve the President and Members of Congress, as fully as may be done under the Constitution, from the onerous and unnecessary burdens of recommending and appointing the thousands of officers throughout the country, to secure the appointment of better and more competent men and women to office, and to relieve the public service as far as possible from the odium of the present pernicious system of patronage. The time taken up by the President and Members of Congress in filling places under the present system that could be devoted to useful public service is enormous. It takes up the valuable time of the President that could and should be devoted to more important public affairs of high concern, taxes his energies, and causes him untold worries and much dissatisfaction, because it is impossible for him to give much dissatisfaction, because it is impossible for film to give the time necessary to satisfy himself of the qualifications of applicants for appointments; it consumes the time of Members of Congress and other public officials and interferes in many ways with the proper administration of public affairs.

On December 21, 1910, the following resolution was adopted by the Senate:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate for its use, if he does not deem it incompatible with the public interest, the following information, with departmental classifications of the same:

First. The total number of appointments which are made by the President upon nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

Second. The total number of appointments which are made by the President, but which do not require nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

the Senate.

Third. The total number of officers and employees of the Government subject to civil-service regulations, specifying classification and number of postmasters.

Fourth. The total number of officers and employees subject to removal by the President without action on the part of Congress.

Fifth. Total number of officers and employees of the United States Government, exclusive of enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy.

The President, in compliance with this resolution, sent, by message, the information called for. He gave:

262, 608

If we deduct from this the appointments made under the civil service, 262,608, we have, to be passed upon and appointed by the President or some one else, 148,714.

The message to which I have referred shows that of these 10,839 are appointed by the President, and for them and their service to the country, good or bad, he must be held directly responsible. This report was made nearly three years ago. The number of such officers has steadily increased. For example, the number of postmasters to be appointed by the President has increased since then by 453. Perhaps the increase in other departments has not been so great, but it has been considerable. I have not attempted to trace all of them down, as it was not necessary to the purpose I have in view. It is fair to say that at the present time, including vacancles required to be filled, the President is called upon to fill close to 15.000 places. For many of the places there are a number of applicants whose claims he is bound to deal with, and recommendations of the different candidates by the thousand, come in and have to be considered. It should be remembered that this covers only the civil offices. It does not include the appointments made in the Army and Navy. In the last five years the average number of appointments in the Army, including premotions, all of which require consideration and careful discrimination, has been 982 each year, and in the Navy the average is about 600 a year. Just think, Mr. President, what a burden this imposes on the President, who, as Chief Magistrate of a great Nation, must deal daily with problems of the highest consequence, affecting our relations with foreign countries as well as our internal affairs. It is an injustice to the President and interferes seriously with his higher duties. He can not be relieved entirely of this immense burden without amending the Constitution, but the bill I have offere. will relieve him of a great part of the drudgery of selecting public officials and to a great extent from the care and responsibility of considering the applications and recommendations of the army of applicants and their friends, and will save an immense amount of his time for more important public business

But, Mr. President, this great burden does not rest upon the President alone. It is not his time only that is wasted by the importunities of the multitude of people scrambling for office and place. Members of Congress are victims mostly-I hope and believe, unwilling victims-of the constant striving for appointments to office. Senators are besieged day and night at their offices, in the marble room of the Senate when we are in session, and often at their homes, by the army of office seekers and their friends or enemies. Their mail is loaded down day after day with applications and recommendations for appointment to office and protests against individuals seeking place. The consideration of these things is no part of the duty of a It is an unwarranted imposition upon him and a waste of his time that should be devoted to the performance of his legitimate official duties. The duty of a Senator in this respect commences when an appointment is made by the President and comes before the Senate for confirmation, and not before. The office seekers are not so much to blame for this condition of things as the pernicious system of patronage that has grown to such enormous proportions. In the past Members of Congress, and especially Senators, have not regarded the participation, on their part, in appointments to office as an imposition. On the contrary, they have too often regarded it as a right and a privilege. It was looked upon by some, at least, as a means of promoting their own political interest. It has in past years enabled Senators to build up in their States powerful political machines through which they secured their continuance in office and reaped other benefits for themselves and their friends. They secured the presidential appointments in their States and then dictated the subordinate appointments by the officers they had chosen. These appointees, high and low, felt themselves under obligation to the Senator, served his interests, and became a part of his political machine. Some Senators claimed the appointments in their States as their own and demanded the appointment of the men recommended by them as a right belonging to their office. The claim was un-The duty and responsibility of appointments rested upon the President. No Senator had the right to dictate or coerce appointments. But it had become a part of the unwritten law of politics that a Senator should control certain appointments, and by some it was claimed as an established right. It was unfortunate for the Senate. It was a misfortune for Senators. It had a tendency to lower the dignity of the Senate and impair its usefulness as a part of the legislative department of the Government. It made a Senator a trader, a sort of speculator, in political offices that lessened the dignity and legitimate importance of his great office.

Mr. President, I think Senators feel quite differently about it now. I think, I hope, every Member of this body would like to be rid of the burden of patronage in all its forms. The day of great personal political machines, as we used to have them, has The people are feeling less and less the restraints of party affiliations or obligations as well as personal obligations to successful candidates for office. It is a fortunate thing, a Slavish partisanship destroys individual independence and freedom of conscience. This evil of building up great political machines, thereby controlling not only nominaelections, and appointments to office but legislation, was one of the things that brought the Republican Party into disrepute and final defeat. Its unfortunate experience should be a warning to the Democratic Party. More and more the people are thinking and acting for themselves and will no longer be ruled, directed, or coerced by a party or a political machine against their own conscience and judgment.

But, sir, I am not presenting this as a political or party I am anxious to do what I can to relieve the public service and officials of the Government of a system of patronage that can not be defended on any principle of right or justice. I but Members of this body can, out of their own personal experience, supply many others. Senators have complained of it as oppressive and unjust to themselves and have expressed their earnest desire to be rid of it. The bill I have offered will give them the opportunity to free themselves from this great and unwarranted burden and leave it to the appointing power, where it belongs justly and as a matter of law.

Besides the mere matter of injustice imposed upon public officials by the system, it is demoralizing to the public service and brings upon Congress public criticism and reproach. of this is deserved, but much of it is unmerited. One of the criticisms, and the one most frequently made, is that the power of patronage is used by the President, now and in the past, to influence and coerce action by Members of Congress. I apprehend no Member of this body believes that the present incumbent of that great office; or any of his predecessors, ever used that power directly to control individual Members of Congress or influence legislation; but it will be conceded on all hands, I think, that the very fact that Members of Congress are held responsible, under this system, for the Federal appointments made in their States, and that they must secure them through the good will of the President, does have its effect on the conduct of Members of Congress, especially upon political questions and matters not involving vital or fundamental principles. To make it worse, it is generally understood that the power of the President to dispense patronage is used with powerful effect to mold and fashion and finally pass legislation of vital consequence to the country. The extent to which Members of Congress have seemed to value the Federal patronage of their States and the reliance placed by office seekers on their Congressman's ability, under the present patronage system, to secure them what they want, gives color to this estimate of the power of patronage and the use that is made of it.

At the present time few, if any, of the Members of this body place any value on patronage as it is controlled under the present system. It has come to be regarded as an unnecessary burden, that does not belong to their office, and as detrimental rather than beneficial to them as Senators or as candidates for reelection. Then why should we continue a system that is wrong in principle, hurtful to the public service, and of no benefit to anyone? The bill I am considering has no political significance. It is not offered as affecting one political party more than another. It is intended to correct in some measure a system of patronage that is wrong in principle, detrimental to the public service and to any party that practices or supports it, in or out of power. The bill is not partisan. It provides for the appointment of a new commission whenever a new President assumes office. He may—and he would be expected—to appoint a commission composed wholly of members of his own party, who will do just as he would do-appoint public officials from his party. The intention is to make the commission an aid to the President by taking off his hands the enormous and distasteful duty of dealing with the thousands of applicants for office and considering their applications and recommendations by requiring the commission to make a selection from their number and to recommend him to the President for appointment. Certainly the President, when left to a free choice of the commission from his own party, without restrictions, can select men in whom he has confidence and to whom he will be more than glad to commit this duty, so onerous to him.

The present Chief Magistrate has felt the necessity of some such help. At the beginning of his term of service he undertook to transfer this labor, as far as possible and practicable, to the heads of the departments. They were his appointees, and he was perfectly willing to confer this duty upon them, as he should be willing to transfer it to a commission appointed by him for that purpose.

The attempt to turn over this duty, with its labors and its responsibilities, to Cabinet officers was to a very great extent a failure as a means of protecting the President and an injustice to members of his Cabinet. It was a duty that did not belong to their offices. They were, and always are, in these later days, crowded with more important business, that they were and are compelled to neglect to meet the demands of the persistent and ceaseless stream of office seekers. It has been reported, and is probably true, that members of the Cabinet. were compelled to flee their offices to escape the office seekers and their friends and secrete themselves in some unknown place where they could perform unmolested some of the legitimate duties of their offices; besides it was reported that Senators were not satisfied to deal with heads of the departments in representing the claims of their constituent: to office. They were apparently jealous of their right to appeal to the President. can only, in this connection, point out a few of its evil effects, in behalf of their friends. Under the present system, as a matter of custom, and probably as a matter of law as it now stands, they had a right to go to the President with their claims and their demands, and they did. The President could not escape it, and his life has been made miserable in consequence of it. It is cruel, almost barbaric. It should not be tolerated. Mr. President, the clause in the bill forbidding Members of

Mr. President, the clause in the bill forbidding Members of the Cabinet and of Congress and other public officials to participate in this office-seeking scramble, that comes near to a national scandal, is for the protection and benefit as well as for the good of the service. I should think every one of them, from the President down, would accept these provisions with sincere satisfaction and a sense of relief and gratification. Will they? I do not know. Politics is a queer thing, and some politicians have some, to me, queer notions on this subject. They resent any effort to curtail what seems to them to be some of their political power. But I think most Senators have come to realize that the privilege of controlling appointments is a weakness and not a source of political power.

I think some Senators who are candidates for reelection are feeling this just now. Where they have made one friend by recommending and securing his appointment they have often made a half dozen or more political enemies who wanted the job and did not get it. They are probably opposing his reelection to a man because he did not satisfy their consuming desire to hold public office. If this had been a part of his official duty it would be different. In that case he would perform his duty and take the consequences. But it is no part of a Senator's duty to help anybody to secure an office. In fact, it is inconsistent with his duty to act upon all nominations for office coming from the President, which, of course, he should do impartially and without bias. This, in the nature of things, is most difficult to do when one has, by his own persuasion, under a claim of right, procured the nomination to be sent in.

Mr. President, in framing this bill I have excepted from its provisions certain appointees of the President, Cabinet officers, and Members of the Senate and House of Representatives. This was done because, manifestly, such officers should be left free to select their own personal aids and assistants for whose conduct they are directly responsible and who should be personally agreeable and satisfactory to them. But I can not refrain from commenting, briefly, upon the manner of making appointments in the Senate, which I submit should, in justice to the Senate itself and in furtherance of the best interests of the public service, be entirely abolished. The same is true of the House, no doubt, but I need not deal with that question.

The Senate now has employees subject to the patronage allowed to Senators whose combined pay roll foots up about $300,000; probably more. The total pay roll of the Senate, not including the salaries of the Vice President and Senators, according to figures I have obtained from the report of the Secretary of the Senate, foots up $855,123.82. These are startling figures. It looks like an enormous sum of money to expend in salaries to the employees of this body. I am not prepared to say what it should cost. This large expenditure may be necessary to the efficient conduct of the business of the Senate and the care of the property it has in charge, but the amount is large enough to challenge attention, and, it may be, call for reformation and economy. The appointment of these employees, except the few elected by the Senate, belong of right to the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and they are theoretically, and should be in reality, responsible for their conduct. Senators should have nothing to do with these appointments. The Senate has chosen the two chief officers, who should appoint their subordinates, and no individual Senator and no committee should be allowed to control or interfere with such appointments. If the officer charged with the duty of making the appointments violates his duty by appointing unfit men, or otherwise, he should be dealt with by the Senate, to whom he is responsible. As it is, all right and all responsibility is taken from him and, in effect, parceled out to individual Senators. At the present time each Democratic Senator is given patronage in the sum of $3,700. That is to say, he may appoint subordinate employees of the Senate whose combined compensation will amount to that sum. This does not include his clerks and messengers, whom he selects and should be allowed to select, and for whom he is not charged. Whether any greater amount is allowed any Senator in practice at the present time or not I do

The matter of senatorial patronage, as applied to employees of the Senate. is a great mystery. I venture to say that very few Members of this body fully understand it or know how it is actually applied in the case of individual Senators. The figures I am now giving may be questioned. They may not be entirely correct. But I am doing the best I can to so present the facts as to show the necessity for a change of the system in the public interest. The exact figures are not very material. It is the principle involved that counts. I think they will not be found to be materially wrong. This custom and manner of choosing employees of the Senate has been in existence for many years. I do not know how long. It is hoary with age. No political party more than another can now be held responsible for it. But all parties in power, now and hereafter, should be held strictly to account for its continuance. The Democratic Party, now in power, would do itself great credit by abolishing the system. It would have done itself greater honor and credit by doing so before the appointments of the present employees of the Senate were made.

Mr. President, why should a United States Senator appoint a man to run an elevator, or a clerk or page, or the man who sweeps the floors of the Capitol, or any other of the numerous employees in and about the Senate wing of the Capitol and the Senate Office Building? There can be but one reason for it, and that is to secure places for his political friends who have served him or his party and as a reward for their political services. That is to say, the officer whose duty it is to appoint these employees must surrender his right and duty to make choice of them to the dictation of Senators who desire to fill the places with their political friends, presumably as a reward for party services, for which they are allowed $3,700 each of the public The dominant party now has 50 Members of this body. moneys. Each one of them is allowed patronage to the amount of $3,700. This means that $185,000 of the public moneys is given over by the prevailing custom to Democratic Senators as a fund for the employment of their political friends in the subordinate places in the Senate.

There is one vacant seat in the Senate, which will undoubtedly be filled by a Democrat, which will increase the gross amount of patronage as it is farmed out under the system to $188.700. When the Republicans were in power the same system prevailed, but under the last Republican administration each Senator was allowed $4,000 of patronage, or thereabouts. So on the face of the record it seems that our friends on the other side of the Chamber are entitled to credit for reducing the amount by $300 to each Senator. It is not very much, but it is something. It makes no difference under this system whether the Senate actually needs that many employees or not. Under it Senators have a right to their appointment at Government expense, whether they are needed or not. No one can doubt that such a system results in the appointment of an unnecessary number of employees. I have no doubt myself but that the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms could carry on the work of the Senate with half the number of employees we now have if only the necessary number were appointed and they were competent and effi-cient men. This state of things grew out of a condition of poli-tics that I hope this country has abandoned forever. The system of patronage that has come down to us from earlier times should also be abandoned. It would be an excellent thing and bear some evidence to the country that we are progressing along right lines if the Committee on Rules would take the necessary steps to put an end to this method of appointing the employees of the Senate. I feel sure Senators will gladly carry out any effort that may be made to that end. It would relieve them of much unpleasantness in dealing with patronage from which they derive no benefit and render the service of the Senate more efficient and less expensive. The best and most practical way to accomplish this result would be to place these employees under the civil-service rules. There is no reason that I can conceive of why the civil-service laws should not include the employees of the Senate and House of Representatives. commend this course to the Democratic Party now in control of Congress Returning to the bill I have offered—which, as I have said, does not reach the question of the appointment of Senate employees, the bill may need some amendments. I do not claim perfection for it and have no pride in its form, but the principle it involves and the remedy it seeks to apply to a condition that grows worse as the country grows larger will appeal strongly to Members of this body. It is a bill that is intended to remedy an existing evil, and as such should receive earnest and friendly consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have read with much interest the bill upon which the Senator from California [Mr. Works] has just spoken, and I congratulate him upon his able and patriotic speech on the subject. I trust he will not let the matter rest, as I feel quite sure he will not, by simply delivering his speech, but that he will appear before the committee and urge the passage of the bill. It probably should have some amendments to the effect that the commission should have full power and authority to go to the various States and have hear ings there. I am very glad the Senator has submitted his views upon this abuse, which has become so flagrant and so obvious.

REMEDIES FOR HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think the subject which the Senator from Oh'o is about to discuss is so important that it deserves a larger attendance of the Senate than there is at present. I therefore call for a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. THORNTON] is absent from the Senate on account of sickness, and that he is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson in the chair). Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on November 17, 1913, I introduced a bill, known as Senate bill 3439, providing for an appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of aiding in the fight against the ravages of hog cholera in this country. Prior to that, and without my knowledge, on October 27, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] had introduced a similar bill providing for an expenditure of $1,000,000, about $700,000 of which was to be used for this same purpose

I do not believe that Senators are familiar with the extent of this disease throughout the entire country. It prevails in every corn-producing State to a greater or less degree. It has become a public menace not only to the farmers themselves, but as it affects the food supply of this country. During the year 1912, according to the Yearbook of the National Department of Agriculture, there were in the United States 65,410,000 hogs; and I have a statement here showing their distribution throughout the several States of the Union. I ask that this statement may be incorporated in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. During the year 1913 the number of swine dropped to 61,178,000, a loss of 4,232,000 hogs. This loss has been largely attributed to the general prevalence of hog cholera throughout the hog-producing regions of the country.

This disease has prevailed in this country for many years. In my own State of Ohio the first known case occurred. I be-There are 88 counties in the State, and hog cholera prevails in all of those counties, except perhaps in a few of the counties along the Ohio River. The loss has been tremendous, not only in our own State, but in every State where hogs are raised.

During December a report was made to the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association at Chicago by a committee, which had theretofore been appointed for the purpose of investigating this subject, consisting of Dr. Paul Fisher, State veterinarian of Ohio, as chairman; Dr. A. T. Peters, of Illinois, secretary; Dr. W. H. Dalrymple, of Louisiana; Dr. Marion Dorset, of Washington; and Dr. A. T. Kinsley, of Missouri. They proceeded to make a very careful investigation as to the extent to which the disease prevailed and the methods which were adopted for the purpose of controlling it, and this report was a result of that investigation. According to the results which they obtained by correspondence with the authorities of the several States, they estimated the total loss during the year to the farmers of this country as amounting to $55,000,000. In the State of Iowa the loss was estimated at $15,606,000; in the State of Illinois at $4,530,800; in Missouri at $10,222,200; in Minnesota at $1,080,750; in Nebraska at $4,000,000; in Indiana at $3,634,800; in Georgia at $770,000; in Kansas at $5,430,800; in the State of Ohio at $3,670,900; in Alabama at $1,188,120; in Tennessee at $2,787,500; in Arkansas at $614,640; in Michigan at $1,418,000; in Pennsylvania at $252,500; in North Dakota at $100,280; in Keutucky at $2,326,000; in Florida at $518,000; in California at $376,300; and in South Carolina at $478,650. In other States there were large losses, but they were not so extensive.

Reports were made from 26 States in the Union.

This disease has been practically decimating the herds for years. In the year 1897 Dr. D. E. Salmon, then Chief of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, said in his report

The losses from hog cholera have, however, been tremendous, being placed by some as high as $100,000,000 a year, an estimate which does not appear exaggerated in the light of the careful inquiries in the State of Iowa, from which it was concluded that this one State lost from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 worth of swine in a single year.

With an increasing population and with a decreasing number of swine, we can understand in part the increased cost of the meat supply of this country. In estimating the loss at $50,000,000, we find that it is the equivalent of a net income of 4 per cent per annum on a total investment of $1,250,000,000.

If this were a matter which affected only one class of citizens, there might be some room, perhaps, for questioning the propriety of an appropriation by the Federal Government, unless it was general throughout the country. The disease exists to such an extent that it is impossible for any one locality or any one State or any of several States to control it. To do so there must be concerted and continuous action upon the part of the local and the State authorities, as well as the Federal Government.

Efforts covering a number of years were made by the veterinary profession to discover a remedy. There is now known to the profession a remedy which is commonly called the Dorset-Niles method of treatment of the disease, and its efficacy is almost universally recognized. It consists of the inoculation of the hog by what is known as the serum-alone treatment, or by the simultaneous treatment, which is a combined treatment of serum and virus-the virus from a diseased hog.

The farmers of the country have been very greatly imposed upon by manufacturers who have been selling a "fake" serum which is either dangerous in itself or which does not have the degree of potency which it is necessary to have in order to combat the disease. About a year ago the Congress of the United States sought to correct this by requiring a license from the Agricultural Department of the United States to all manufacturers of serum which is used in interstate commerce.

Many of the States of the Union have taken up this matter vigorously. In my own State of Ohio the legislature has invested $100,000 in building and equipping a laboratory for the purpose of manufacturing the serum. The State of Iowa has invested $48,000 in a similar laboratory. The States of Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Indiana, and a number of other States have laboratories, and up to date probably about $300,000 has been invested in laboratories for the purpose of producing this serum.

One authority makes the statement that in order to get the proper results not only must care be taken in the manufacture of the serum, but extreme care must be exercised in administering the serum or the serum-virus treatment, as it is sometimes called; and if the greatest of care is not exercised, sometimes an entire herd may be infected by the virus which is used in inoculating the hogs in a given herd.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California? Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator mean to say that the State laboratories that have been established are for the purpose of manufacturing the particular kind of serum he has mentioned? Mr. POMERENE. So far as my information goes, all of the laboratories are manufacturing this kind of serum.

Mr. WORKS. Then, if it is understood that an effective remedy has been discovered and is actually being manufactured by the different States, what is the Senator's reason for thinking that the Government should participate in the effort?

Mr. POMERENE. The reason is the extent to which the disease prevails. It is contagious; it is infectious. In my own State, as I said a moment ago, it exists in nearly all of the 88 counties. It is impossible for one State to combat the disease. More than that, it is necessary that there should be Federal aid, not only in furnishing the serum but also in teaching the farmers and the veterinarians of the country how to administer it.

As the Senator's question went to the matter of the necessity of the Federal Government interfering, I wish to add that the president of the agricultural commission of the State of Ohio, Hon. A. P. Sandles, advised me not more than 30 days ago they had in their office more than 1,000 applications for aid from as many farmers throughout the State, and the State is without the means to provide this remedy, as the disease exists so generally throughout the State. I may say that last year the Legislature of Ohio appropriated $20,000 to be expended in the one county of Fayette, Ohio, which is one of the great hog-producing counties of the State. In order to combat the disease it is not only necessary to use the treatment, but we must adopt the necessary quarantine methods and regulations for the purpose of disinfecting the premises where the diseased hogs may be kept.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio

yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.
Mr. KENYON, May I just offer a suggestion in answer to the Senator from California? The Senator from Ohio is familiar with the fact that Government experts are stationed at these plants in the State of Ohio supported and carried on by the State. The Government has its experts there assisting in the work of producing the proper serum, and the Government cooperates with the State in that way,

Mr. WORKS. My inquiry was directed to the Senator from Ohio because of his statement that an effective remedy had been already discovered. If it were necessary to make investigations in order to discover a remedy, that might be an entirely different thing; but if this remedy has been discovered, and it is only a matter of manufacturing it, and the States are doing that now, I question whether it is a wise thing for the National Government to make appropriations for that purpose. Of course there may be other reasons.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; there are other reasons which I expect to go into. While the veterinary profession recognize this as a perfect cure, the methods of providing the serum and the methods of keeping it and transporting it and administering it may be greatly improved upon. It seems to me we must have some concerted effort throughout the entire country to combat the disease, otherwise we are not going to be able to check it or to rid the country of it. This will appear from a consideration of the manner in which it may be spread.

For instance, if a farmer has a herd that is infected, and a neighbor, possibly through curiosity or possibly for the pur-pose of aiding the farmer who has the diseased hogs, goes to the pen or the field where they are confined and tramps through the dirt, he may carry the germs of the disease to his own farm and infect his own herd. Again, it is known that if the hogs feed near a stream and drink from it, the germs of the disease may be carried down and infect other hogs that feed and drink from the same stream. The disease may be carried from one pen to another by pigeons which may feed where there are diseased hogs and fly to another pen. It may be carried by the dust that is blown from the pen where the diseased hogs are confined to a neighboring pen. It may be carried by the buzzards that feed upon the carrion of the dead animals. In these ways it is spread throughout the entire country.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. It seems to me the statement the Senator from Ohio has just made answers very effectively the question propounded by the Senator from California as to the necessity of cooperation between the States and the National Government. I am convinced that it will be impossible to eradicate this disease unless we have the hearty cooperation of the States with the National Government, and I hope the Senator during his remarks will emphasize that point.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is perfectly right in his conclusion, and the disease is spread in other ways. Farmers will take their prize swine to county fairs for exhibition purposes. They there come in contact with hogs from infected herds, and in that way the disease is spread. Again, it is spread by taking the manure from the pen and spreading it over a field where hogs may be permitted to graze. The large interstate transportation companies take it from one county to another and from one State to another. Men who haul their hogs to market in wagons or take them from stockyards to their homes may spread the disease. To my way of thinking, it is one of the most serious problems that can engage the attention of the lawmakers and the law administrators of this country.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BURTON. I will say also, as an argument for a Federal appropriation, that, whatever may have been the original idea in regard to the matter, the precedent is now well established that anything that injures agriculture is a matter of national concern. The agricultural appropriation bills abound in provisions, say, for the extermination of the boll weevil, the gypsy moth, and insects and pests which injure animals and fruit trees as well. The last appropriation bill contained a great variety of appropriations of this nature.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is correct. I have before me a partial list of appropriations which have been made. On the subject of the boll weevil, there was an appropriation in 1905 of subject of the bold weeval, there was an appropriation in 1808 of $250,000; in 1906, of $190,000; in 1907, of $190,000; in 1910, of $251,005; in 1912 of $350,000; for the fiscal year 1913, $332,960; and for the fiscal year 1914, $375,000; making in all, on this one subject, $2,354, 015, to say nothing about the appropriations for the Entomological Bureau.

We have made similar appropriations for the purpose of checking the spread of cattle diseases. For instance, take the checking the spread of cathe diseases. For instance, take the subject of controlling the ravages of the cathe tick. In 1908 we made an appropriation of $150,000; in 1909, $250,000; in 1910, $250,000; in 1911, $250,000; in 1912, $250,000; in 1913, $250,000; and for the fiscal year 1914, $325,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio

yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. BRADY. I should like to ask the Senator at this time whether or not he knows or has any information as to the number of cattle that have died from diseases of different

Mr. POMERENE. I have no such information at hand.

Mr. BRADY. As a matter of fact, is not the loss of hogs from cholera very much greater than the loss of all other kinds of stock combined?

Mr. POMERENE. That is my judgment about it, from my general reading upon the subject.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohlo yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator seems to have given very careful study to this subject, and I should like to inquire if he has heard it reported that in a good many cases this method of treatment has perpetuated the cholera from year to year, so that every animal, all of the young stock on the farm, has to be vaccinated or it will be subject to the cholera? It is said that it makes it a perpetual disease unless every animal on the farm is vaccinated in this way.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not heard that a proper vaccination perpetuates the disease. I think that is not in accordance with the facts. The disease has been spread by reason of the fact that many improper serums have been placed upon the market, and also because of the fact that in the administration of the remedy the proper methods have not been used, or the serum or virus has been administered by unskilled and untrained hands.

Mr. BRISTOW. One of the largest hog raisers in my State told me about two weeks ago, in a conversation I had with him, that he believed this method of treatment would result in a perpetuation of the disease, so that it would become necessary for every pig to be vaccinated or he would catch the disease, and that it would have to be one of the regular processes in order to be effective. I was interested in the statement of this gentleman, because he has been one of the board of regents of our State agricultural college, and is very familiar with the method of treatment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should not pretend to discuss this subject from a scientific standpoint; but even in this day and generation there are men, physicians and others, who protest against vaccination as a preventive of smallpox. They are in the minority, however. I have talked with a number of expert veterinarians, as well as with the men in charge of this bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and I know that they are all very enthusiastic about the merits of the remedy to which I have referred.

If it were true that this remedy were not perfected, when we remember that for 40 years it is estimated that the annual loss has been $50,000,000, and during the last year the loss has been $60,000,000, and that it is spreading all over this country, it seems to me that if the remedy we now have is not a proper or sufficient remedy the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purpose of perfecting this remedy, or for the purpose of dis-covering or attempting to discover another remedy which will cure this disease would be justified.

Mr. BRISTOW and Mr. WORKS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield, and to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield first to the Senator from Kansas. Mr. BRISTOW. I do not want the Senator from Ohio to understand that I am combating his theory at all. I simply made the inquiry because this gentleman had brought up the subject with me. Mr. POMERENE. I did not understand that the Senator was combating my views or that he was opposed to the appropria-

Mr. BRISTOW. The same gentleman who made this statement to me said that he had instituted the practice of vaccinating every pig that came upon his farm, and he has thousands He has a regular system; it is one of the departments of his work to give this attention; and he estimates the cost that occurs from this process and takes it into consideration as one of the incidents of expense in connection with his farming processes, which are very large.

Mr. POMERENE. It would seem to me to be quite apparent from the Senator's statement that his informant would rather trust the remedy than to do without the remedy. Otherwise with his large herd he would not be inoculating all his hogs.

yield now to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that the death rate increased by 10,000,000 the last year.

Mr. POMERENE. I gave that as an estimate, which-Mr. WORKS. How long has this supposed effective remedy been in use:

Mr. POMERENE. For a number of years past; I can not

Mr. WORKS. The argument in favor of the remedy or its effectiveness does not seem to be very strong, in view of the

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will bear in mind that it may be an effective remedy, but it may not be known to the public. It may be that the farmers do not know how to protect their swine against the disease. It is true that there are not sufficient skilled veterinarians to administer the remedy when they have the remedy at their command.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. Is it the idea of the Senator from Ohio that this fund is to be used for the purpose of educating veterinary

Mr. POMERENE. My thought about it is that this remedy shall be placed at the disposal of the Agricultural Department, and, under the phraseology of the proposed measure, the Agricultural Department would be authorized not only to investigate the subject further, to provide for the manufacture of serum, and to aid the State in its manufacture, but to send out a force of men throughout the country to aid the veterinarians in the administration of the remedy and in teaching farmers and stock raisers generally how to care for their herds.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I do. Mr. REED. I should like to inquire if the Senator from California does not think it is quite as justifiable to appropriate a little money to prevent a disease that descroys the hogs of the country as it is to tax the people of the country on the oranges and lemons raised in California for the benefit of that

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have not said it was not proper to appropriate money for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Missouri. I was trying to ascertain whether or not we are likely to expend it for a remedy which is effective for the purposes intended. My attention was directed to it be-cause of the statement of the Senator from Ohio that the disease is rapidly increasing, notwithstanding the use of this effective remedy. My friend from Missouri has had the tarin on oranges and lemons upon his mind for so long he can hardly My friend from Missouri has had the tariff on dismiss it. It has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.
Mr. KENYON. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from California that we appropriated last year $75,000 for this work, and that it was absolutely insufficient. More calls were made on the Government for experts than they could furnish, because of lack of funds.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy more of the time of the Senate, except to say that it is a recognized fact that cold weather checks this disease, and $5 expended now would result in more benefit than $25 expended. when the hot weather sets in. It is going to take the Agricul-tural Department considerable time to prepare for this campaign, and the earlier this appropriation is made the more effective will be their efforts. If this is to be delayed until the regular appropriation bill shall be introduced and passed, we will be losing very valuable time. I feel that the importance of the subject to the farming community and to the meat-consuming public is such that we are justified in asking the committee to take this matter up at once, with a view to reporting very early a measure to the Senate.

While I stated a moment ago that the bill I introduced provided for an appropriation of $500,000, I prepared and presented it for that amount, because I thought that would be sufficient. The more I have investigated the subject the more confident I am that if there is any criticism to be made of the proposed appropriation it is because it is too small, and I hope Congress will increase the amount to $1,000,000.

A few days ago the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] was kind enough to stop off in my State, and he and I had the privilege of addressing an audience upon this subject, composed of nearly 4,000 farmers gathered from every county in the State. The people of Ohio, as well as of all other hog-producing States, are insistent that Congress shall grant them some relief. and I know of no way in which we can spend a million dollars more profitably and with better results to the country than by making this appropriation, so that the Federal Agricultural Department can act in conjunction with similar departments in all the States of the Union.

I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks, without reading, a letter received by me from Hon. A. P. Sandles, president of the agricultural commission of Ohio, together with resolutions adopted at the State agricultural meeting on January 15, 1914.

I also desire to have printed, as an appendix to my remarks. a copy of a report made by the committee on hog-cholera legislation to the convention of the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association, held at Chicago on December 2, 3, and 4. I should also like to have it printed as a public document for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to its being printed either in the RECORD or as a public document, but I do not think it is necessary to print it in both ways

Mr. POMERENE. I am very anxious to have this information before the Senators, and any way in which I can best get it before them will satisfy me.

Mr. SMOOT. I think printing it in the RECORD would get it before Senators better than printing it as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD. The VICE FACTOR of the matter will be proceed and the matter will be proceed to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

Hon. Atlee Pomerene,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: I inclose herewith copy of resolutions adopted at the Ohio State agricultural meeting January 15, 1914, at which, as you know, nearly 4,000 farmers, bankers, rallroad men, and manufacturers were present and unanimously voted for this resolution.

The Ohio Legislature, now in extra session, will adopt a resolution memorializing Congress to make a generous appropriation. Farmers' institutes and many other organizations in Ohio are adopting vigorous resolutions in support of this movement.

Thanks.

Respectfully,

VALUE OF SWINE IN THE UNITED STATES.

FARM VALUE AND PORK VALUE.

These 65,000,000 swine have an estimated farm value of $523,328,000, or over half of $1,000,000,000. For some reason the number of swine in 1913 dropped to 61,178,000, while their value increased to $603,- 109,000, or, in other words, there was a decrease in number to the extent of over 4,000,000 head and an increase in value of nearly $89,000,000. The value of these 65,000,000 swine when made into pork, or finished product, is at least twice this sum, or, in round numbers, $1,200,000,000.

LOSS FROM HOG CHOLERA.

Information furnished the committee by the officials in charge of the control of animal diseases in various States in response to a letter of inquiry shows that the approximate loss from hog cholera from the 26 States which reported exceeds $55,000,000, itemized as follows:

In studying conditions that existed in previous decades and covering a period of about 40 years, the committee finds that the losses from hog cholera have very probably averaged over $50,000,000 annually during these decades.

In 1897, Dr. D. E. Salmon, then chief of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, states in the annual report of that bureau, "The losses (from hog cholera) have, however, been tremendous, being placed by some as high as $100,000,000 a year, an estimate which does not appear exaggerated, in the light of the careful inquiries in the State of Iowa, from which it was concluded that this one State lost from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 worth of swine in a single year."

FINANCIAL LOSS TREMENDOUS.

Since this loss is a regular annual occurrence, its meaning can best be brought home to us by looking upon it as the lost interest on a permanent investment. It would require an investment of $1,250,000,000 at 4 per cent to yield $50,000,000; and since this loss has been going on for at least 40 years, the total loss has already exceeded $2,000,000,000, or, with compound interest, to more than twice the hypothetical investment of $1,250,000,000 referred to. Measured in the value of the finish product (pork) these figures would practically be doubled. The money involved in these losses would build a transcontinental railroad, at $10,000 a mile, through the United States every year, or it would support on a million dollar a year income basis a great university and agricultural experiment station for each State of the Union and half a dozen extra universities for such States as needed them.

With these figures before us and the problem of the high cost of living staring us constantly in the face, how many questions are of greater economic importance than that of the control of hog cholera for the prevention of these enormous losses?

PRESENT EFFORTS TO CONTROL HOG CHOLERA.

Now, let us see what is being done toward eliminating this drain on our national economy.

The value of Dorset-Niles antihog cholera serum has now been practically universally conceded. It was therefore believed that a knowledge of the extent to which the different States gave financial support to official hog cholera serum institutes would be of value to the committee in the way of suggesting possible remedial measures.

Inquiries made to obtain this information were sent out in June, but by November 1 only 33 States had responded, and some of these gave only incomplete answers to questions. However, the larger and more important pork-producing States practically all replied, as follows:

(4) No reply to inquiry: Utah, New Mexico—few hogs in New Mexico, only information received—Delaware, New Jersey, Colorado, Arizona, Nevada, Washington, and Oklahoma.

Summarizing these replies the committee finds that 22 States have provided serum laboratories of greater or less pretentiousness (usually less) at a total expense of $299,000.

LARGEST LABORATORIES.

LARGEST LABORATORIES.

The cost of the laboratories of the States of Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, and Illinois aggregates $205,000, while the cost of the laboratories in the other 18 States together is about $100,000. In some of these latter no special laboratories were provided, but already existing quarters or veterinary laboratories of agricultural experiment stations and colleges were utilized for the purpose.

were utilized for the purpose.

SUPPORT OF SERUM LABORATORIES INADEQUATE.

The amount expended for salaries and running expenses of these institutions is practically nothing except in Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri. In the latter two States about $30,000 was appropriated last year for the manufacture and distribution of free serum. In all of the other States the serum is sold at an estimated cost price of production, which on an average ranges from 30 to 40 cents per protective dose for a 50-pound shoat. The money obtained in this way in most of the States is used for operating the plant, but in a few States it is deposited in the general treasury and can not again be used for hog-cholera work until the next convening legislature reappropriates it for that specific purpose. The efficiency of an already woefully inadequate plant is thus still further reduced. It is almost needless to state that most of these laboratories are not by any means properly manned nor equipped.

PRESENT HOG-CHOLERA LEGISLATION.

Summarizing these replies we find that among 48 States and the District of Columbia, 33 States have laws requiring some sort of inspection before swine can be brought into the State. Twelve States, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Missouri, Montana, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming, require health certificates showing that swine for exhibition or breeding purposes (unless coming from free territory) have been treated with Dorset-McBride-Niles scrum, and four of these States, Idaho, Texas, Utah, and Wisconsin, have the same requirement for all other imported swine.

ELEVEN MILLION SWINE ABSOLUTELY UNFROTECTED BY STATE LAWS.

ELEVEN MILLION SWINE ABSOLUTELY UNPROTECTED BY STATE LAWS.

Most of the remaining 33 States require mere "health certificates" or affidavits. Fifteen States, among them six States—Georgia, with 1,783,684 swine; Illinois, with 4,031,000; Ohio, with 3,299,000; Michigan, with 1,245,000; Florida, with 800,000; and West Virginia, with 356,000 swine—have no requirements whatever.

Here we have a total of 11,614,684 swine in six States that have absolutely no provisions in their laws to protect the health of these animals by restricting the shipment of diseased animals from other States.

THIRTEEN STATES HAVE INTRASTATE REGULATIONS.

A study of replies to question (b) shows that among the 33 States that require health certificates for animals shipped into the State only 13 have regulations restricting the intrastate movement of infected swine. Only 26 States, however, replied to this inquiry.

ONLY EIGHT STATES DISINFECT.

The replies to question (c), received from 27 States, show that only 9 have laws or regulations providing for the disinfection of public stockyards, vehicles of transportation, wagons, cars, etc. Alabama has a law, but does not enforce it.

ONLY 12 STATES QUARANTINE INFECTED PREMISES.

Among 25 States heard from, 12 have regulations requiring the quarantine of infected premises.

TWENTY-ONE STATES BURY OR CREMATE CHOLERA CARCASSES.

Replies to question (e) show that 21 out of 25 States have laws requiring burlal or cremating of carcasses of cholera-infected swine. Four of these States have no requirements of this nature, not even on paper.

ONLY NINE STATES PRETEND TO ENFORCE HOG-CHOLERA LAWS.

The replies of 26 States to the question "Are the sanitary laws and regulations of your State enforced entirely or in part?" show that in 9 States these laws are enforced; 2 States as fully as possable; 1 State to the best of ability; 1 State best efforts to enforce are made; 1 State they are fairly well enforced; 10 States partly enforced; 1 State not enforced at all; 1 State practically neglected.

These replies speak for themselves, and the silence of the remaining 22 States does not admit of a very favorable interpretation.

The Hog-Cholera proclem is neglected, conditions

The Hog-Cholera problem is neglected:

To those of us who are at all familiar with the actual conditions that exist throughout the United States in live-stock sanitary matters it is evident that the hog-cholera problem, as far as the observance of sanitary regulations is concerned, is a sadly neglected one.

Unless it is on account of the enormity of the problem of hog-cholera control, or possibly because of our very familiarity with its ravages, it is difficult to understand why this disease, above all other animal plagues, is so entirely neglected in most States, and not given due attention by any single one.

THE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM.

There is no question but that the enforcement of proper sanitary regulations, such as control of shipments of diseased and exposed animals, disinfection of railway cars, stockyards, etc, the quarantine and disinfection of infected premises, and the proper disposal of infected offal and of the carcasses of diseased swine will do much toward preventing the ravages of hog cholera.

Experiments made with the mere separation of healthy animals from the diseased, as indicated by clinical appearance and bodily temperature, and healthy animals removed to clean quarters, have shown conclusively that many animals can be saved by this simple procedure.

While we have in the Dorset-Niles serum treatment an effective preventive of hog cholera, and, in the very early stages of infection with the disease, a practical cure, production or manufacture of serum and virus used in this treatment should be fostered and encouraged and their use should be regulated.

The committee is of the opinion that wise legislation providing for practical regulations for traffic control in swine, and the enforcement of special sanitary measures on public highways and on public and private premises, the regulations of the production and use of hog-cholera serum, provision for its well-planned and systematic use, the exposure of worthless proprietary nostrums which are sold as curee, and the inauguration by the live-stock sanitary authorities of the country of a campaign of education in live-stock sanitation is the true solution to the problem of saving the annual waste of from fifty to one hundred million dollars which this country suffers from the ravages of hog cholera.

The committee recommends legislation authorizing or empowering the proper state authority to make a of several to a present the proper state propers.

The committee recommends legislation authorizing or empowering the proper State authority to make and enforce the regulations suggested in the following outline, or such parts thereof as are necessary for the protection of local (State) interests and with due regard to the interests of the Nation.

HOG CHOLERA LEGISLATION.

OUTLINE.

A. Providing for quarantine and shipping regulations.

1. The shipment or movement, interstate, of swine affected with cholera to be prohibited.

2. Exposed swine to be shipped under permit and placarded.

3. The movement of cholera-infected swine over the public highways of the State to be prohibited.

4. Provision for moving exposed swine under permit in approved manner.

3. The movement of cholera-infected swine over the public highways of the State to be prohibited.

4. Provision for moving exposed swine under permit in approved manner.

5. Carcasses of animals and particularly of swine that have died of cholera to be burned within 24 hours after death, or under special permit be disposed of otherwise.

6. The shipment by rail of swine for purposes other than immediate slaughter to be permitted only through special pens and unloading chutes, or through portable chutes directly into wagons. If unloaded in regular loading pens to be moved under permit in approved manner.

7. Public stockyards to be under close supervision and cleaned and disinfected at intervals determined by the proper State authorities.

8. Railway cars for the transportation of swine other than such as are intended for immediate slaughter to be cleaned, washed, and disinfected before swine are loaded.

9. All cars in which diseased swine are found or in which exposed swine were shipped for immediate slaughter to be cleaned, washed, and disinfected within 24 hours after unloading, or cars to be held until the presence or absence of diseases has been determined.

10. All cars or vehicles of transportation carrying cholera-exposed swine to be placarded in a conspicuous manner "Cholera-exposed swine for immediate slaughter."

11. Owners of swine and persons in charge, including attending veterinarians, to report without delay to State authorities all outbreaks of cholera among swine.

12. Live-stock sanitary authorities to quarantine all infected herds and premises, but may permit shipment of exposed swine for immediate slaughter as above provided.

13. Infected premises to be quarantined not less than 60 days after last traces of disease have disappeared and premises have been cleaned and disinfected.

14. Infected premises to be cleaned and disinfected under supervision prescribed by live-stock sanitary authorities to be given power to provide in a practicable manner against the dangerous pollution of streams w

B. Providing for the production, distribution, and administration of hog-cholera scrum and regulations of the sale of proprietary remedies for hog cholera.

I. PRODUCTION.

(a) Location of buildings.
(b) Construction of buildings.
(c) Arrangement of plant.
(d) Operation.

(a) Location of buildings.

19. Location to be such that surroundings will not interfere with sanitary production and that their operation will not contaminate surrounding areas.

(b) Construction of buildings.

20. The construction of buildings to be of material that will permit of daily cleaning and disinfection, stone, brick, tile, and concrete being especially recommended.

(c) Arrangement of plant.

21. The arrangement and equipment of buildings to be such as to insure the production of a pure and uncontaminated product.

22. Swine to be kept in separate buildings located a sufficient distance from the building containing the bleeding (either virus or serum) and hyperimmunizing rooms and in which swine are to be placed for the latter purpose only.

23. The serum-bleeding room, the virus-bleeding room, and the hyperimmunizing room to be separate and distinct rooms.

24. The preparation of serum and the preparation of virus from the whole blood to be operations conducted in separate and distinct rooms without direct communication with each other or with the foregoing not larger than an opening which will permit the transfer of receptacles containing the freshly drawn blood, and to be used for no other purpose.

25. Separate washing and sterilizing rooms to be provided. 26. The prepared serum and virus to be stored in properly cooled rooms.

27. Swine kept for virus production and the testing of serum to be properly isolated so as to reduce to a minimum the danger of spreading infection. Separate and distinct feed rooms to be provided for such animals.

28. Mortuary, crematory, abattoir, and desiccating or rendering plant operated for utilizing the waste products of the establishment to be located so as to prevent contamination from this source.

29. Necessary dressing and toilet rooms, properly equipped and located, to be provided. Also bottling and packing rooms.

30. Prevision for the sanitary disposal of all manure, offal, and debris.

(d) Operation.

(d) Operation.

31. The operation of serum plants to be under the direct supervision of a competent veterinarian or other professional man whose training and experience has fitted him for this work.

32. Prohibition of the sale of serum and virus produced from animals affected with any contagious disease other than hog cholera and of any contaminated serum or virus.

33. Provision requiring full and complete records of all steps in the manufacture and test of serum or virus.
